A DEDICATION

Today at the Strand Theatre, New York will get its first glimpse at the motion picture "G-Men."

Warner Bros. take this occasion to dedicate this picture officially to the men whose daring and devotion halted America's March of Crime ...to acknowledge publicly their debt of gratitude to the fearless Federal Agents whose heroic exploits and inspiration made this picture possible.

Miss Louella Parsons has called "G-Men" "a grand tribute to the Department of Justice." We hope it is that—and something more.

For Warner Bros. have consistently demonstrated their belief that the screen is not merely a medium of entertainment. It is an institution significant socially and responsible morally. Its obligation is to inform, to interpret, to lead, and – most important of all – to establish an enduring record of our forward marching civilization.

We believe that "G-Men" fulfills, as few pictures have before, that end and those purposes. Its importance as an exciting new entertainment is dwarfed by its significance in the scheme of humanity's affairs – right here in America – at this very hour.

Other pictures have glorified fabled figures of the past. But Warner Bros. have chosen to celebrate the heroes of the present – to create a graphic and enduring record of that stirring chapter in American history written by Uncle Sam's stalwart Legion of the Law – the

DREAMS "OVER THERE"

THE Child Welfare Committee of the League of Nations at Geneva is hearing about the motion picture and has a report from the British delegate saying, according to the New York Times wireless: " 'Children are often frightened at films and the fear remains with them and causes dreams,' this being especially true of war films."

That's too bad, of course—but with what appears to be going on over there concerning armies, airplanes and submarines, it would seem just possible that the children will not have to wait long with mere dreaming.

The motion picture record is automatic memory. If enough people could be made to remember, many reenactments—including wars—would not be so inevitable.

IRRELEVANT METHODS

THE furore about "Bank Nights" as a box office expedient reminds one of some of the hectic circulation wars among the newspapers, and that great last splash in Chicago when the Chicago Herald-Examiner and the Chicago Tribune strove with $10,000 a day prizes until the whole town was upset. The net result was substantially nothing.

Putting at one side the questions of technical legality, the important problem is whether or not expedients of the kind are of real ultimate service to the project.

It is significant to observe that long, costly experience has taught the best publishers of the land that premium schemes have not been real builders. Publications stand or fall by their value to their readers.

The motion picture theatre's prosperity depends on its status as a place to which its public pays admission for entertainment, screen entertainment. Irrelevant devices rarely contribute to that status. The profits are finally in the seats filled by spectators who came to buy what the screen has to sell. That is what the business is about.

NEWSPAPER UPTURN

MOTION picture advertisers, both exhibitors and national distributors, will find corroboration in the figures on a 12 per cent upturn in national account display space in newspapers for 1934, as reported to the American Newspaper Publishers Association in convention, by the Bureau of Advertising.

Painful comparisons with radio were presented to the publishers, indicating that the air medium is doing a better job of selling the advertisers than the consumers. Radio is credited with taking about thirty millions from the national accounts, while the magazines got sixty millions and the newspapers a hundred and two millions.

The motion picture continues to consider the newspaper the best buy—and non-competitive.

THE TALK BUSINESS

THE fiftieth anniversary of the august American Telephone and Telegraph Company is upon us, a milestone in industry and civilization, if you can call it civilization. The kinships of the Telephone Company and the motion picture industry are many. The Telephone Company deals in the transmission of words while they are hot. The motion picture industry, using many telephonic tools, is engaged in a cannery activity of gathering words on records and shipping them around the country.

The Telephone Company is about twenty years older than the screen. Yet in its traffic of the intangibles of mere conversation it has become the world's biggest corporation with assets of $4,977,054,686, a figure large enough to challenge attention even in the slightly colossal motion picture business.

The high status of the Telephone Company and its continuous success must be seen as recognitions of attainment of a superior sort, amazingly disciplined and maintained. A motion picture man in an industry so amazingly beset with issues and problems both within and without, might possibly view the wire industry with some feelings of jealous concern. But there is at least some balm in the reflection that whereas the Telephone Company has done its job when you get your number and start talking, the motion picture industry has the tremendous obligation of taking responsibility for what the screen says after the customers are connected.

MIRACLE

THE other day Mr. Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, went into an office at 32 Sixth avenue and picking up a telephone put in a call for Mr. T. G. Miller, vice president, who was in an office about fifty feet away. The call was routed by land line and radio wave around the world—around the world for the first time—and, lo, when Mr. Gifford picked up his call he was indeed talking to Mr. Miller next door. Engineers have no imagination. They should have completely closed the loop and let Mr. Gifford talk to himself, around the world.

THIS WEEK---

RELIEF ORDER

"It is apparent if they can afford to attend motion picture shows they have more money than they need for living expenses," said Miss M. E. Allen, relief distribution head in Bedford, Ia., as she ordered that persons on full relief found attending film theatres be reduced to the part-time relief rolls. . . .

THEATRE SALE

Submitting the only bid, the City Bank Farmers Trust Company last week bought at auction the Criterion and Loew's New York theatre properties in Times Square, including hotel and stores. The bank, holder of a $4,000,000 mortgage on the property, terminated all leases involved. The sale ended Paramount's interest in the property. Disposition of the sites has not been determined. . . .

UNIVERSAL APPEAL

En route to Hollywood from New York last week, Gary Cooper, Paramount player, expressed the opinion that the production code is successful because it does not accept the tastes of large cities as a criterion but considers the preferences of the smaller communities as well. He said it would be simple to make films only for the metropolitan centers, but that it was necessary to find a formula of universal appeal. . . .

HELEN STOUT GLEASON

Mrs. Helen Stout Gleason, a Mack Sennett comedy girl in 1917-1919, adjudged Miss California in 1921, died at her Chicago home last week of injuries sustained in an automobile accident a year ago. From 1923 to 1925 she played in a musical comedy act until she was married to William Gleason in 1925. . . .

THEATRE SUIT

Klaw and Erlanger New Orleans Theatre Company, lessor, has filed action in district civil court to compel Edward J. Chittenden, street car conductor by day, operator of the Crescent Theatre at night, to vacate on the ground that he has violated his lease. It is claimed he owes $700 rent for April. Mr. Chittenden is said to have presented films which drew police action. . . .

CARTOON MAGAZINE

United Artists plans exploitation tieups with a new publication, appearing May 15, called Mickey Mouse Magazine. Printed in four colors, the magazine will include stories, puzzles, games, drawings of Disney rodent and Silly Symphony characters. Its slogan: "A Fun Book for Children to Read to Grown-Ups." . . .

G-MAN FILMS

Latest developments anent films depicting the work of U. S. Justice Department agents: Edgar Hoover, bureau of investigation head, has ordered his men not to attend such films, not to issue statements concerning them; notes the department has not sanctioned them. After being banned as "over-stimulating" for children, Warner's "G-Men" was passed by the Chicago censor. The Ohio censor passed the film without a deletion. Warner's "Black Fury" has been passed in Kansas.

VARIETY CLUB AFFAIR

Sponsored by the Philadelphia Variety Club, Atlantic City will be the scene on Labor Day of a National Showmen's Variety Jubilee. Stage and screen stars and executives are expected to attend. Earl W. Sweigart is president of the Philadelphia Club. . . .

STAGE SUCCESS

Regarding the result as indicative of an upturn in conditions, officials of the Interstate Circuit at Dallas report a bright success with the showing of "Mary of Scotland," one of last year's hit Broadway plays. Opening in Dallas, the play took $13,750 in three performances, with the total for 10 performances in the state estimated at $46,530, a record. . . .

MAURICE QUITS FILMS

Maurice Chevalier, who five years ago went to Hollywood to become a brilliant star of the screen, has signed a contract to return to the French music halls whence he came. This week Maurice resumed stage performances at Nice in the singing-dancing act which, he said, was his "first love." "I am glad I am finished with pictures. They do not suit my temperament," he said. . . .

HAYS LAUDED

That Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, "is performing a great service" in elevation of moral standards of pictures, was resolved by the Vincennes, Ind., Presbytery, of which Mr. Hays is a member. The resolution was in response to criticisms by San Francisco Presbyterians. . . .

OBJECT TO THEATRE

Appearing before New York License Commissioner Paul Moss, a group of prominent citizens voiced sharp objection to erection by Henry Mandel, builder, of a film theatre at 79th street and Madison avenue, contending a theatre would reduce property values, invade a purely residential neighborhood. Mr. Moss reserved decision, but was expected to favor the objectors. . . .

CENSORSHIP

Paramount's "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" was discussed in England's House of Commons last week, Lieutenant Colonel Sir Arnold Wilson, M.P., declaring it is objectionable to millions of Mohammedans in India, its locale. He also objected to ushers at the London theatre playing the film wearing uniforms of Indian cavalrymen. . . .

FILM THIEVES

When he received word from England that two film thieves had been jailed for stealing a print of Republic's "Sensation Hunters," Norton A. Ritchey, president of Ritchey International, releasing Republic product abroad, declared similar action should be made possible in the United States. . . .

AKERS CAMERA

The Akers camera, patents on which are held by Irving Akers, cameraman, and Augustine Rogers, sound technician, has been used by C. C. Burr in making "Kantucky Blue Streak," a feature just completed. Weighing 60 pounds, it may be used from the shoulder for action sequences, it is claimed. . . .

U. S. MAIL BARS ADS ON BANK NIGHT "LOTTERY"

Post Office Prohibits Advertising by Direct Mail or in Newspapers Holding Mailing Privilege; Handbills Not Affected

The Post Office Department at Washington this week declared that the "Bank Night" cash prize award used at motion picture theatres as a business "stimulator" is a lottery, and, therefore, any advertisements of the practice shall be barred from the mails.

The United States Government thereby became involved in the fight raging nationally over the legality of the practice, which now is the subject of dispute in the courts, in the press and state legislatures, in motion picture code and state prosecuting tribunals and among competitive theatre owners who are lined up either for or against, according to their individual policies.

The Code Authority has set out through questionnaires in the mails to determine the legal status of the promotional plan under the lottery laws of the various states—several of which now stand in conflict on their interpretations.

The Code Authority, through Tyree Dillard, Jr., its counsel in New York, is asking secretaries of Local Grievance Boards whether the proper state authorities have ruled on the legality of the plan and what those rulings are. They also are requested to submit the names and addresses of the distributors of the copyrighted "Bank Night" plan that is generally used.

Seek Reclassifying

The "Bank Night" distributors have been campaigning to have the National Recovery Administration reclassify the device as a premium and not as a lottery. Premiums are permitted under the code. Regardless, several states already have declared "Bank Nights" to be a lottery, and now the Post Office Department concurs.

NRA officials at Washington are understood to have received hundreds of letters and telegrams from exhibitors declaring that "Bank Nights" has proved a boon to the box office and asking that it be declared legitimate under the code and for that purpose reclassified as a premium. The NRA is replying that it cannot act unless the Code Authority so recommends.

The Post Office Department is instructing postmasters throughout the country to refuse "Bank Night" advertising if offered for transportation through the mails.

No general order of single nationwide application was issued, but the department's views are being made known to individual postmasters as they apply to Washington for instructions regarding the status of "Bank Night" advertising.

Officials of the Department this week professed inability to estimate how many such inquiries have been received from postmasters, but said the number was "substantial" and came from all sections.

It was explained that the result of instructions to postmasters barring "Bank Night" advertising would be to prohibit direct advertising, as well as newspaper advertising where the papers held mailing privileges. The post office has no jurisdiction, however, over those forms of advertising, such as "dodgers," posters and handbills, which do not go through the mails, nor to programs which are distributed on the streets or at theatres.

Many hundreds of theatres featuring "Bank Nights" are now expected to confine their publicity efforts in this connection to lobby displays and to the distribution of circulars.

One of the first territories to be affected immediately by the postal order was San Francisco, where all newspapers declined to accept theatre advertising mentioning the drawings.

While Local Grievance Boards continued to order theatres to cease and desist from the practice, determining its status under the code's lottery clause, the Code Authority just as quickly sustained the boards in appeals taken by "Bank Night" users.

While the practice was reported to be spreading, especially in the east and in New England, where 20 theatres started making the awards, Grievance Boards were asking the courts for the right to stop film service at theatres where exhibitors refused to cease and desist.

The Department of Justice is defending the Grievance Board at Los Angeles in its federal court fight to effect a film stoppage order at the Oxnard theatres and others,

PREMIUMS GROWING WITH LOTTERY FIGHT

The practice of giving premiums to theatre patrons was reported this week to be growing nationally, with the spotlight centered on Kansas City, Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

In Kansas City, Fox Midwest started a gift stamp premium, distributing 33,000 books on the first day at 12 participating theatres. When the books are turned in filled, the patron will receive merchandise gifts ranging from $5 to $50.

In Chicago, Balaban and Katz added "Screeno" to the dozens of devices and practices already in use throughout the city. B & K was giving cash awards instead of merchandise.

In Philadelphia, premiums have reached a new high. The same situation exists at Pittsburgh, and many other large cities.

Code Authority Sets Out to Learn Status of Practice Under Laws of Various States; Dallas User Gets Injunction and this week an exhibitor at Dallas obtained an injunction in the 35th judicial district court, McCulloch county, preventing the board and distributors from discontinuing his film supply until he desisted from the "Bank Night" practice.

The United States district court at Fort Worth, Texas, has a similar case in hand, while a lottery case is pending in Oklahoma.

C. C. Esell, of Dallas, national sales manager for the copyrighted "Bank Night" plan, said last week that further court action is useless until a decision has been handed down in one of the important court cases.

The Florida legislature is considering a measure to outlaw the system by prohibitive taxation, and the Tampa Tribune is fighting the practice editorially.

Probably the most intensive fight over "Bank Nights" continued to rage in Kansas City, where, despite a setback by the county prosecutor's office, which refused to prosecute an exhibitor and a "Bank Night" distributor on charges of operating a lottery, Mrs. Abe Baier, of the Lindbergh, Kansas City, said she is determined to go through with her crusade to sweep the plan out of the city. She has further steps in mind, she indicated.

The prosecutor's office informed Mrs. Baier that in order to start prosecution against the local "Bank Night" distributor, R. W. McEwan, and Rube Finkelstein, operating the Belmont, she would have to sign as the complaining witness. This Mrs. Baier refused on the ground that if the men were acquitted at a trial she could become liable for damages on the ground of false arrest.

The county officials failed to agree with Mrs. Baier that "Bank Night" is against the public interest and a harmful business practice and should be stopped, and indicated their belief that "Bank Night" is a desirable and helpful business booster.

Sees Disaster for Theatres

"Bank Night" threatens to develop a disastrous situation for Kansas City unless effectively checked by the Code Authority, Mrs. Baier said in her appeal from the Local Grievance Board's dismissal of her complaints against the Belmont and Prospect theatres there.

"At the present time," Mrs. Baier's brief continues, "practically all suburban theatres in Kansas City are giving away dishes, silverware, running children's bargain shows, using 'trading stamps,' etc. If 'Bank Night' at the Prospect and Belmont theatres is allowed to continue, it is reasonable to assume that at least 75 per cent of the theatres in Kansas City will adopt the scheme. This will lead to a most disastrous condition not only for my theatre and a few others which do not wish to cheapen their operations by running lotteries, but will grow until all first run theatres will be compelled to resort to similar tactics to protect their huge investments."

$50,000 U. S. LOAN PLAN TO AID THEATRES IN LARGE COMMUNITIES

Housing Administration Rules That Loans Cannot Be Had for New Theatre Construction under Terms of Act

Loans under the Federal Housing Act, obtained from local banks approved by the Federal Housing Administration, cannot be obtained by exhibitors for insured mortgage loans applicable for new theatre construction, as the terms of the Act definitely restrict loans for new buildings to residential dwellings for not more than four families.

Such was the interpretation placed on the Act by the Federal Housing Administration at Washington in answer to a direct inquiry.

However, exhibitors may obtain loans for the improvement of existing property, either inside or out, as well as for certain stationary equipment.

The amendment now before Congress to raise the maximum amount of a property improvement loan from $2,000 to $50,000, as reported in Motion Picture Herald on April 20, will be, it is believed by the FHA, of special benefit to theatre owners in large communities, and enactment of the amendment will be followed by an intensive drive by the Administration to acquaint every motion picture theatre owner with the privileges of which he may avail himself to modernize his property.

The Administration found this week that modernization loans are being made to theatres all over the country, and while the FHA says it has not compiled any statistics in this connection to indicate the extent of theatre improvements already made under the plan, it would seem that the majority of loans have been granted to date only to theatres in smaller communities, probably because of the present $2,000 limitation.

Extension of the limitation of loans from $2,000 to $50,000 would, it is believed, find theatres in the larger communities taking advantage of the opportunity to repaint and remodel their properties.

Propaganda Films Involved

While the Housing Administration was rounding out plans to get more exhibitors interested in showing its "Better Housing News Flashes" as propaganda in motion picture form, and promised to publicize these showings so that theatre business will benefit, word came from Washington indicating that all publicity activities of the government, including the use of motion pictures and radio, may be placed under the spotlight of an investigation by the Senate.

Despite the fact that there has long been on the federal statute books a prohibition against the employment of press agents, it is estimated there are now as many as 150 on government payrolls. These are not termed publicists, but are given other titles, such as "administrative assistant."

Reports of an investigation of this nature last year resulted in quick transfers of title in some of the government agencies where it was felt the publicity had not been sufficiently camouflaged, but the present move is for an inquiry to determine whether any of the departments or emergency agencies are evading the law.

The Treasury Department for a while toyed with the idea of motion pictures to further the sale of its "baby bonds", but appears to have abandoned the proposal.

Use of the radio by federal officials has been very extensive. Every agency of the Government has made radio an important means of getting itself before the public. The Department of Agriculture for several years has had regular programs, but these are devoted to matters of interest to farmers. Many of the emergency agencies have used radio, not only to boost themselves but also to carry the word of the New Deal.

Central Distribution Office

The motion pictures prepared by the Federal Housing Administration are similar to news reels, containing several different sequences, and running on the whole from 600 to 700 feet. Their purpose is to explain "in entertaining manner" the operation of the National Housing Act, and at the same time to create an interest in the better housing movement.

In substance, the operation of the Administration's new plan to develop patronage for theatres which cooperate with it by showing the subjects, is as follows:

The Federal Housing Administration already has opened a central distribution office at 35 West 45th Street, New York, for shipping its prints directly to theatres. Bookers experienced in the film business are employed in this office. As soon as playdates are set in at New York, a copy is sent to the Motion Picture Section of the Federal Housing Administration in Washington.

Then the playdates are transmitted to more than 6,000 Better Housing Committees. Letters are sent to these committees by the FHA, urging them to have representatives call on theatre owners and arrange to attract as much attention as possible to the showings of the news flashes. At the same time a form letter is sent to the theatre managers who have play-dates, telling them of the Better Housing Committees and outlining the promotional plan to them. Under separate cover—to those communities where Better Housing Committees and others are ready to carry out promotional plans—are sent packages containing pamphlets explaining the modernization and mutual mortgage insurance plan of the National Housing Act; two-color one-sheets to be placed in theatre lobbies or elsewhere. The pamphlets are intended for distribution in the theatre lobbies. With them goes a card bearing, in large letters, the words "Please Take a Booklet," and a miniature 24-sheet to place on the distribution table.

Letters to Field Staff Also

Letters also are sent out from Washington to the field staff of the Federal Housing Administration in the various states, as soon as playdates are set, to a large list of industrial companies, contractors, builders, dealers, architects, to the secretaries of the American Institute of Architects and to bankers, explaining that they may obtain playdates by keeping in contact with Better Housing Committees. It is also suggested to these, all of whom are active in the durable goods industries, that they may work up more business in their communities by starting house-to-house canvasses and instituting other methods reaching home owners whose residences are in need of repairs; also prospective home owners who may desire to take advantage of the mutual mortgage insurance plan of the National Housing Act. It is further suggested to them that it would add to the opportunities of obtaining business from prospects to arrange to have these prospects attend theatres where "Better Housing News Flashes" are being shown. In many cases dealers and others are buying tickets in blocks and sending prospects to the theatres.

Produced by Pathe News

"Better Housing News Flashes" were produced for the Administration by Pathe News, Inc., in whose building in New York the FHA set up its distribution machinery.

The films were booked into the Radio City Music Hall, the Capitol and Paramount theatres on Broadway and other first-runs throughout the country. Fox West Coast booked them into all its houses. At that time a "Better Housing Week" was being emphasized in Los Angeles and vicinity. "Better Housing" exhibits were shown in the lobbies of the Chinese theatre in Hollywood; and in Loew's State, United Artists, Wilshire, Beverly, Village, Larchmont, Uptown, Stadium, Egyptian, Paramount, Apollo, Boulevard, Hollywood and many others in Los Angeles.

The entire promotional plan, it is explained, is being carried out along the same lines as a regular motion picture releasing organization would function. Every exhibitor, on getting a playdate for the news flashes, is supplied with a promotional plan, compiled by motion picture "experts" connected with the FHA, and is given an outline of possibilities in the way of model displays and radio and newspaper tieups.

HUGE RECONDITIONING COSTS SEEN PILING UP

Future costs that are likely to be all out of proportion to the income of the theatre have been piled up by the application of a penny - wise - pound - foolish policy to theatre operation, declares J. T. Knight, Jr., theatre maintenance and operating engineer for Paramount, writing in Better Theatres (Section Two accompanying this issue of the Herald).

"Owners and parent company executives for the last few years," he says, "have been harassed with financial worries, the Code and legislation to such an extent that future costs for reconditioning their properties are not fully realized. This piling up of repairs and renewals is reaching a point where there are many theatres being operated today which are actually unsafe and unfit for the public. Expenditures to recondition some theatre properties will be so large as to necessitate refinancing."

ACTORS' EQUITY TO 'CRACK DOWN' ON LOW PAY SUMMER THEATRES

Insists Players Get at Least Minimum Salary for Work; Producers Warn That Houses Would Have to Close

by FRED AYER

Actors' Equity Association has decided to "crack down" on the summer theatres of the country—which long have provided severe competition to motion picture theatres. "Swift and merciless extinction" is threatened for all theatres which have proved themselves unbusinesslike in management or callous in their treatment of players. The close of the 1934-35 legitimate show season, markedly more successful than any in the past five years, finds Equity throwing its challenge at the theatre's last remaining outpost of organized laboratory work.

Equity considers "intolerable" the working conditions of actors playing in summer stock in various eastern sections, and others. But while actors may have complained of small pay—in some instances receiving only board and lodgings for a summer season of eight or ten weeks—producers see in the Equity move a danger of serious damage to the legitimate theatre of Broadway.

The summer theatre is, in the final analysis, a workshop in which plays and players are tried out, with New York's regular season as the goal. There, plays are rewritten, acting technique is overhauled, and, most important, the producer has an opportunity to see and judge and acquire productions which he considers suitable for his Broadway schedule.

Producers say that any additional financial obstacles would bring virtual extinction of the summer theatre.

Insists on Minimum Salary

In years past, when stock companies were flourishing, New York's managers sent their agents to them in quest of talent. Occasionally, new plays were tried out in stock and revised for Broadway production. Today, so few stock companies are operating on a regular seasonal schedule that producers depend upon the summer theatre and the recommendations of agents.

Equity takes the stand that actors in all summer theatres should be paid at least a minimum salary just as when working on Broadway. Equity's press representative, Alfred Harding, holds that producers have got to be brought into line.

Mr. Harding said that so many complaints had been received from actors since last summer about working conditions that the Equity membership was asked to defer all summer theatre commitments until the association took its official stand. However, Mr. Harding, who has completed several months' study of conditions, gave some indication of the demands which Equity probably will make.

Mr. Harding's report is to be studied by Frank Gillmore, Equity president, who returned from Europe late last week, and the Equity Council. It is assumed that action will be taken immediately, as the summer season gets under way in another month.

One of Mr. Harding's proposals is that companies offering only room and board to players shall confine themselves to plays previously produced on Broadway and not try out new ones.

"The companies which are to try out the new plays," said Mr. Harding, "should be conducted on the regular stock basis: a permanent nucleus of six Equity members at the code minimum of $40, and jobbers (players not usually engaged for more than three weeks in the season) paid at least $25 a week.

"There will, no doubt, be other changes recommended and other requirements set up. As summer theatre groups are being got together and plans made, these matters should be taken into consideration by anyone who expects to have anything to do with a summer theatre group."

Mr. Harding's report places all summer theatres in three classifications, as follows:

1. An established group in a community able and willing to support a theatre; with reasonable equipment; fair pay; and a businesslike and courteous attitude towards its players; or,

2. A group which falls short of some of these conditions but which probably could be made adequate through proper regulation and supervision; and,

3. A group in which conditions are so unfavorable, equipment so inadequate, and the management so lacking in experience or so callous to its players that no consideration is deserved.

"For groups in the third category," Mr. Harding said, "the best that ought to be afforded is swift and merciless extinction.

"The try-out season, which used to be of sufficient importance to merit a separate form of contract during May, June and July, has practically disappeared. With it has gone the actor's chance for an engagement in a part he has created. Comparatively few of the summer theatre people are engaged for New York productions of the plays they have tried out.

"Certain summer theatres have been offering only board and room to their players, while they have been paid from $200 up to produce new plays for some producing manager. The producer has had a look at his play with actors for a small fraction of what a tryout would cost. The manager has been paid adequately, sometimes liberally, for his work. The actors have worked under great strain for their keep."

Call It Up to Actors

Whether a summer theatre set up solely to exploit actors in need of jobs should be eliminated, is one thing, managers said. But whether an actor should take advantage of the opportunity to be seen at work in a period when normally he would not be working, a period during which he still would have to pay for lodging and board, is up to the actor, they said.

Bela Blau, Broadway producer with possibly wider experience in the summer theatre than any other, said too rigid regulation of these workshops by Equity would deprive Broadway of young talent.

Elmer Rice, despite his protestations that he was "through forever" with the Broadway theatre, has with several wellknown actors, playwrights and critics formed the Theatre Alliance, a cooperative organization to establish a repertory theatre in New York City.

Social Drama, Leading Film Subject, Is Theme of 47 Per Cent of Features

The social drama is by far the leading motion picture subject, representing 47 per cent of all feature productions, which is more than double the 22 per cent of the melodrama, including crime films. Some 14 per cent of all pictures are comedies, 8 per cent are musicals, and about 6 per cent are "worldly wise," socalled, of the sophisticated type that interests only a mature and limited group. Geographic, travel or expeditionary subjects contribute but two per cent of the feature product of the whole, and fantasies make up one per cent.

These conclusions were made by Alice Ames (Mrs. Thomas G.) Winter, studio relations department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., and contact between the studios in Hollywood and the women's clubs of the country. They were based on 274 features reviewed by her committee in past months, as follows: Social drama, 130; melodrama, including crime element, 62; comedies, 38; musicals, 21; "worldly wise," 21; geographic or travel, 4, and fantasies, 2.

On the subject of various film types and tastes, the Child Welfare Committee presented to the League of Nations at Geneva a report indicating that war and educational subjects are the films least liked by children of the eleven largest countries; Walt Disney's cartoons, it was pointed out, are universally popular.

Otherwise American, British, French, Italian and other boys prefer westerns, adventure, comedies and mysteries, followed by war films, romances, tragedies and educationals. Girls prefer romance, comedy and westerns, in that order.

The morally questionable element in films is ignored by children of school age and, in fact, it bores them, the Committee reported.

Children's attendance at motion pictures appears much more numerous in the United States than any other place, with Britain second.

PONS, PIGS, AND DECIBELS

Diminutive Opera Star Produces 80 Decibels of Sound, Street Car 75, Acousticians Are Told

Lily Pons, diminutive star of the Metropolitan Opera, street cars and guinea pigs were co-starred this week at the thirteenth annual show of the Acoustical Society of America, at the Hotel Roosevelt in New York. An educator revealed that Mlle. Pons, currently under contract to RKO Radio Pictures, produced 80 decibels of sound in singing "Lakme" while a Broadway street car shrieked 75. The guinea pig, perpetual victim of experimentation, squashed many legends crediting animals with more acute hearing than man.

Harold Burris-Meyer, professor at the Stevens Institute of Technology, told the sound engineers of experiments in the Stevens Theatre which might, he said, revolutionize the performance of grand opera, restore drama to the opera house and heighten the clarity and effect of the music.

"In opera today," Professor Burris-Meyer said, "the singer often has to crowd down to the footlights and howl to make himself heard over the orchestra. He may have to make more noise than a trolley car. Recent sound tests at the Metropolitan Opera proved that Lily Pons, singing the Bell song from 'Lakme,' produced 80 decibels of sound, where a Broadway streetcar makes 75."

Sound Control and Theatre

Through the various media explained by Professor Burris-Meyer, the legitimate theatre now is setting out to accomplish the sound control which in motion pictures is regulated primarily at the studios through the "mixing" process and perspective and dimensional sound and in the projection room.

The theatre, Professor Burris-Meyer explained, has only two means of getting its message to the audience, through sound and light. Light, he said, apparently is now completely under control and experiments have been made to collect all sound, pass it through a control switchboard, and send it on to the audience with the added power of creating effects not otherwise possible. The essential part of this trick, he said, is that reproduction must be so perfect that the audience never will be conscious of any mechanical factor involved.

No longer will the actor have to assume his famous frozen stare when he renders the time-honored "aside," for new sound equipment can replace this method of thought projection and now a character's thoughts, or "alter ego," will be projected out into the theatre so that his words appear to materialize in and among the audience, and the actor can go about his regular stage "business" without a "strange interlude" contemplation of vacancy.

Traveling Ghost on Stage

The Stevens Theatre, Professor Burris-Meyer explained, produced a scene from "Hamlet" and made a transparent ghost with a sepulchral voice which moved around the stage with the ghost, a voice which enunciated perfectly and made every word understood. The Professor agreed, however, that the ghost "affected the audience profoundly with its unearthly tonal quality."

He explained several other tricks accomplished with directional sound such as "ethereal laughter," which can be made to whirl about above the audience. He said it is possible to make an invisible mob "rush across the stage, batter down doors and charge out over the footlights." This device, he believed, would be particularly well adapted to opera. The method employed consists of picking up the singer's voice and superimposing it on the orchestral background so that, no matter how much power or volume may be demanded from the instruments, the voice and words will be clearly heard in all parts of the auditorium.

This method, the professor said, would permit the singer to take a normal position on the stage and "even to do a little acting" to help the illusion of drama overcome the concert-hall attitude of audiences.

In prefacing his point that the intensification of sound effects increases audience reaction tremendously, he explained that the script of Elmer Rice's play, "The Adding Machine," calls for loud noise in a scene wherein a character undergoes a brainstorm. Then, when this scene was produced to an accompaniment of pure tones, varied swiftly in pitch and intensity, it brought the average audience to the verge of hysteria within 32 seconds.

Guinea Pig Less Sensitive

And as for the lowly guinea pig——.

John C. Steinberg, a Bell Laboratories engineer, reviewed for the convention the progress of experiments carried out at Harvard and Yale universities to test the auditory sensitivity of animals as compared to man. Tests were made on a chimpanzee, a monkey, a cat and a guinea pig.

In the case of the cat, an electrode was used, measuring a slight electric current.

According to Mr. Steinberg, the monkey and the chimpanzee were conditioned to press a key for food when they heard a tone; when no tone was sounded the animals got no food. In this manner they were taught to associate the key with sound, and the investigators could measure which sounds were audible to the animals and which inaudible. A similar reflex was imparted to the guinea pig through a different technique.

The results, according to Mr. Steinberg, indicated that for tones of 1,000 cycles frequency or less the auditory sensitivity of the animals did not differ greatly from that of man. The cat and the guinea pig appeared significantly less sensitive than man for tones of 4,000 cycles and higher, while for the tones of 8,000 cycles and higher the monkey and the chimpanzee appeared more sensitive than man.

More than 100 engineers attended the meeting, which ended Tuesday. P. E. Sabine was elected president of the Society, succeeding Vern O. Knudsen. Officers re-elected were R. F. Norris, vice-president; Wallace Waterfall, secretary, and G. T. Stanton, treasurer.

Workers' Group Threatens Fight Against Picture

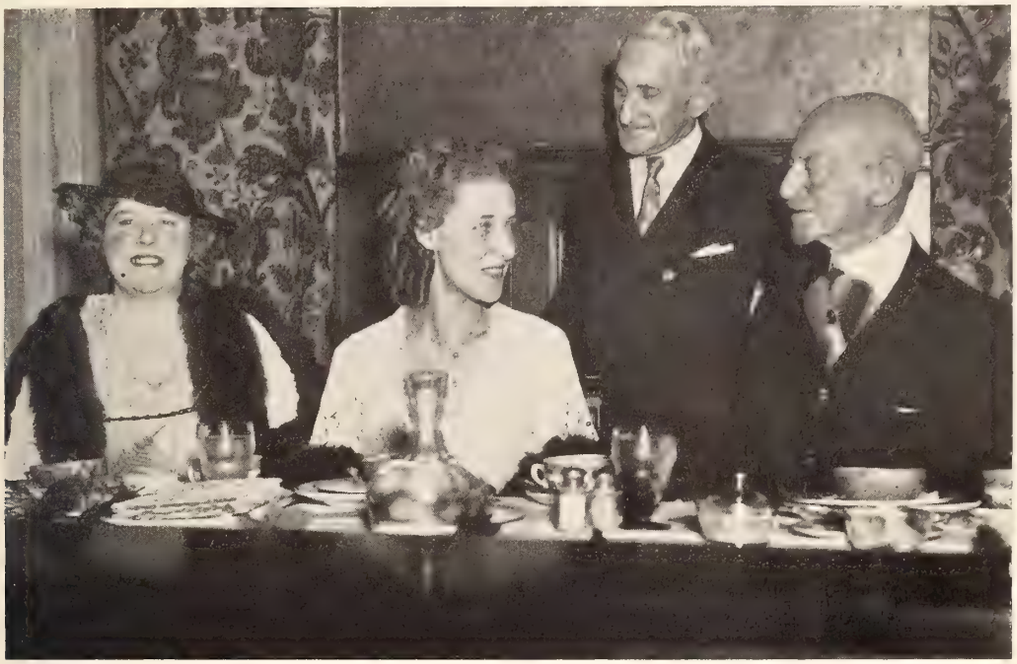
Slovak Branch 2003 of the International Workers Order, in the foreign-populated Yorkville section of New York, has threatened theatres in that area against showing "Call to Arms," feature produced in Hollywood by an unnamed independent.

"The picture 'Call to Arms' which was produced by the Columbia Pictures Corp. is a fascist picture against organized labor and against everything that the Constitution guarantees to the people," said the warning. "We are therefore warning you, in advance, not to show this picture in your theatre.

"Should you ignore our protest, we the members will not only boycott your theatre, but will rally the people in Yorkville and expose you as one who is against working people, against liberty and is a Fascist. If necessary we will put up a mass picket in front of your theatre."

Michael Kovac signed the threat, a copy of which was sent in the mails to the 68th Street Playhouse, at 3rd Avenue and 68th Street. Michael Minday, manager, immediately communicated with the New York County District Attorney, but Edwin J. Talley, of that office, replied that it does not appear that there is any action that the District Attorney can take in the matter, although he agreed to investigate if supplied with further information.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America; Louis Nizer, counsel for the New York Film Board of Trade, and Columbia's home office executives were appealed to by Mr. Minday, for advice, but it appears that all concerned decided to await developments.



Meanwhile at Columbia it was said that the company did not produce the picture, and furthermore had not decided whether it would distribute it. "Call to Arms," it was pointed out, "is a totally inoffensive film and certainly it is not against the worker. The threats are being expressed even before the picture has been shown. It is an obvious attempt by an unimportant and very small group to 'bulldoze' the motion picture industry."

The story, based on the San Francisco bombing for which Tom Mooney was sent to jail, and whose incarceration has since caused international reverberations from "workers' groups," concerns the attempted bombing of a factory. This is prevented in melodramatic fashion by the inmates of an old war veterans' home, who march to the scene with the remnants of their G. A. R. uniforms and old muskets, which, even though unloaded, scare the would-be-bombers into submission, and they are marched to the police.

Lesser Closes Eastern Office

Sol Lesser has closed the New York office of Principal Distributing Corporation, and has appointed Ben Solomon, formerly auditor for the company, as his eastern representative, with offices in the Paramount Building.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

LADEN WITH MEMORIES. The yesterday of the theatre in New York was revived for the moment in memory last week at the weekly forum of the Motion Picture Club, at which the guests were the personalities of years ago. SCHULBERG, HENIGSON, BERGERMAN, KOHN, LIGHTON IN STUDIO MOVES

Schulberg Drops Independent Production Plans and Joins Columbia, with Ralph Kohn; Henigson with Paramount

Several important appointments and changes in the executive structures of Hollywood studios, some of which might influence future production and policies, took place this week, as follows:

Benjamin P. Schulberg abandoned plans to continue as an independent producer and joined Columbia as a producer and studio executive.

Ralph Kohn became associated with Columbia studios to act in a general executive capacity.

Henry Henigson, who resigned last week as an executive producer for Universal, joined Paramount in a similar capacity.

William Le Baron and Paramount effected a contractual arrangement which will continue Mr. Le Baron on the studio staff as an executive producer.

Stanley Bergerman resigned as an executive producer for Universal and the company immediately was placed on a unit production policy.

Louis Lighton became an associate producer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The appointment in Hollywood of B. P. Schulberg as a producer and studio executive for Columbia came abruptly. He had been producing independently for Paramount, and was considering other independent production plans. In explaining his reasons for transferring activities, he said: "I have chosen Columbia as the seat of my future activities because I believe it is the most progressive company in the business, where a producer is assured the greatest degree of individuality of expression."

The pictures produced for Paramount by Mr. Schulberg were made prior to the studio administration headed by Ernst Lubitsch and Henry Herzbrun. Unable in recent weeks to effect a new production arrangement with the Paramount trustees and management in New York, he looked elsewhere for an outlet. There had been reports that he would join Universal, and that he and Mr. Kohn would head a separate production unit at Paramount.

Ralph Kohn had been associated with Mr. Schulberg in his independent plans, and because of that association he went along with Mr. Schulberg to Columbia to act in a general executive capacity.

Mr. Schulberg, former general manager of production for Paramount, in which post he was succeeded by Emanuel Cohen, who in turn was succeeded recently by Ernst Lubitsch, began his career, with Famous Players, in 1912 as publicity director and scenario writer. Several years later he launched his own organization, and as an independent producer is credited with discovering Clara Bow. Returning to Paramount in 1925, as an associate producer, he subsequently was appointed general manager of west coast production. In 1932 he resigned and again joined the independent ranks, producing a series for Paramount, which included "Jennie Gerhardt," "Three Cornered Moon," "Thirty-day Princess," "Behold My Wife" and "Little Miss Marker." He has not made any pictures for the company since December.

Born at Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 19, 1892, and educated at New York high schools and at the College of the City of New York, Mr. Schulberg's first experience in business was as a reporter on the old New York Evening Mail. After two years he resigned to become associate editor of Film Reports, organized in the interests of independent producers and distributors. One year later he became publicity director and scenario writer for Rex Pictures and after a year, in 1912, he went with Adolph Zukor at the launching of Famous Players, in a similar writing capacity. He is credited with publicizing "Queen Elizabeth," the first "big name," full length motion picture sold in America, with Sarah Barnhardt starring.

Ralph Kohn, former treasurer of Paramount Publix, was associated with the company for 22 years, since its inception. Joining Famous Players at the beginning as assistant counsel and assistant secretary, he was given the same posts on the organization of Paramount Famous-Lasky. He was elected a director of the company in 1923 and treasurer of Paramount and all subsidiaries in 1927. He resigned in May, 1934.

Henigson Joins Paramount

After mutual abrogation of his contract with Universal, where he had served as an executive producer, Henry Henigson this week joined Paramount in a similar capacity.

Serving also as studio manager of Universal City, Mr. Henigson, born in New York, Sept. 22, 1897, joined the company in 1920. He was assigned to auditing books of exchanges and in this connection toured South America and the United States, after which he was assigned to Europe as general manager of distribution. In 1925 he switched to production at Universal City.

William Le Baron, executive producer at Paramount's Hollywood studios, will continue in that capacity, a new contract having been signed Monday. Mr. Le Baron at the moment is concerned with the production of pictures starring Mae West, W. C. Fields, Gladys Swarthout, Jan Kiepura, Burns and Allen, besides an adventure picture of an aerial exploration over Alaska, and an untitled feature for Carole Lombard.

Mr. Le Baron, born in Elgin, Ill., Feb. 16, and was engaged variously as managing editor of Collier's Magazine, and in playwriting, from 1918 to 1920; director-general of Cosmopolitan Productions, 1920 to 1924; associate producer of Famous Players-Lasky, Long Island Studio, 1924 to 1927; in charge of Radio production in Hollywood, 1929-1931, and an associate producer for Paramount since.

He produced "Cimarron," "Rio Rita," "Street Girl," "Beau Geste," "When Knighthood Was in Flower," "Terror Abroad," "She Done Him Wrong," "College Humor," "Too Much Harmony," "I'm No Angel" and "It Ain't No Sin."

QUIGLEY CHICAGO OFFICE MOVES

The Chicago office of Quigley Publishing Company is now at 624 South Michigan Avenue. The former address was 407 South Dearborn Street.

Le Baron Signs New Paramount Contract; Bergerman Resigns from Universal and Studio Adopts Unit Production Policy

Bergerman Quits Universal

Stanley Bergerman, executive producer of Universal, "confidant," so-called, of Carl Laemmle and Mr. Laemmle's son-in-law, resigned abruptly late last week, although Mr. Laemmle said that Mr. Bergerman had resigned under the most friendly circumstances.

The resignation was followed immediately by decision of Mr. Laemmle to adopt the unit system of production throughout the studio. Mr. Laemmle is expected to supervise personally, and is said to have indicated that the new system would provide better pictures and greater efficiency and economy, with producers, given greater authority and responsibility, exercising more care in the selection and development of stories. Joe Pasternak, now in charge of Universal's European production, is slated for a unit at Universal City. Mr. Bergerman was reported to be looking to another major studio as an outlet.

Born at Pueblo, Col., on Aug. 27, 1903, Mr. Bergerman entered production at Universal in 1929, producing more than 100 short subjects before he was assigned to features.

Lighton with Metro

Louis D. Lighton, formerly an executive producer for Paramount, this week joined Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in a similar capacity, to make six features yearly, starting August 1.

Mr. Lighton was born at Omaha Nov. 25, 1895, and received his early experience writing for newspapers and magazine fiction. He was a scenario writer for Paramount and subsequently became a Paramount producer, holding that post for seven years.

Hold Pathe Reunion

All former employees of Pathe in Boston held a reunion this week at the Club Devkelder. Harry Smith, RKO booker, was in charge of arrangements, assisted by Charles Lynch.

Ray Hopper Resigns

Ray Hopper, New York editorial representative for Jay Emanuel Publications, has resigned. He will devote all his time to writing and the stage.

NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING SHOWS UPTURN IN 1934

Bureau Report to Publishers Cites $163,000,000 Spent in Year, $145,000,000 in 1933

National or general advertisers spent $163,000,000 for newspaper space during 1934, compared to $145,000,000 in 1933, according to the annual report of the Bureau of Advertising, presented to the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association last week in New York. The net gain for the year was 12.4 per cent, as against a loss of 9.4 per cent in 1933 as compared with 1932.

The report was submitted by Edwin S. Friendly, business manager of the New York Sun, chairman of the bureau. The report pointed out that the accounts contacted during 1934 represented a total advertising expenditure in three leading media of $193,337,586. Of the sum, $60,627,856 was spent for magazine space, $30,016,072 for radio time and $102,693,658 for newspaper space.

A survey conducted by the bureau of the reading and buying habits of almost 1,000,000 families, in 15 cities, indicated that 87.5 per cent of the families read one or more of the 35 daily newspapers circulated in the cities, compared with 47.6 per cent reading one or more of the leading 17 magazines. The study also pointed out the high degree of magazine duplication, which consumes 65 cents of every dollar spent in magazines, compared with only 35 cents going to effective coverage.

The bureau conducted an extensive comparative survey in the field of radio advertising as well, including a check on leading programs, with reference to coverage and cost. Six important points were taken into consideration:

Six Factors Considered

1. Number of radio sets in area of broadcast.
2. Number of sets actually in operation at the time the program is on the air.
3. Number of listeners who can identify the entertainment.
4. Number of listeners who can identify the product or the advertiser.
5. Cost of program (time and talent).
6. Cost per 1,000 homes identifying the product or advertiser.

A summarization of findings indicates that, of the sets in operation, the average number listening to any one program, that is, able to identify the entertainment, is 20 per cent, while the average number able to identify the product or advertiser is 14.4 per cent.

The report points out that the figures vary greatly, depending on the programs, from a cost of $1.25 per 1,000 listeners, to as high as $48.42 per 1,000.

Of all homes with radio sets (estimated at 20,000,000), from 72 per cent to 87 per cent are occupied between the hours of the survey, from 7 to 10 P. M., while 36.5 per cent have their sets in operation at some time during those evening hours.

The report said:

"While there can be no quarrel with success, the reports submitted to the bureau show that a great number of advertisers—even the more successful—are using radio at a cost that points strongly to a more profitable use of other media.

Magazines, Newspapers Compared

"One program broadcast by a leading automobile company, for example, reaches an average audience of 545,600 listeners (only 399,100 of whom can identify the advertiser or product) at a cost of $11,698. For the same amount of money this advertiser could buy more than a page and a half of newspaper space reaching 1,000,000 readers."

Relative to the comparative value of the newspaper and magazine media, the survey developed the point that "where an advertiser considers the use of magazines essential to his program, he can obtain better coverage by cutting the list of 17 magazines to five and spending the money thereby saved in newspapers."

"Fifteen newspapers plus the five magazines of leading circulation," according to the report, "reach 70.3 per cent of all the families in the cities covered, compared with 47.5 per cent reached by 17 magazines alone."

Advocates "Little" Theatre To Introduce Good Pictures

The Reverend William H. Wallace, speaking at the first annual meeting of the New Orleans Better Films Council last week, declared that motion pictures are a part of visual education that the church could not afford to neglect. He advocated a "little theatre for good pictures," which would not be for profit, and "not in competition with the big show houses, but in addition."

Mrs. A. S. Tucker was reelected president and the name of the organization was changed to the Louisiana Council for Motion Pictures. Miss Violet O'Reilly, president of the New Orleans Principals' Association, said that in her opinion motion pictures would improve as the child is educated to expect them. It was urged that the council's cooperation with schools be extended to take in the entire state.

Mirsch Leaves Warner

Harold Mirsch, for years Wisconsin district manager for Warner, has joined Standard Theatre Company, with headquarters in Milwaukee. The new circuit, operating six houses in Wisconsin, has taken over the Strand, Milwaukee house, dark for several months.

Breen Leaves May 15

Joseph I. Breen, production code administrator, plans to leave Hollywood May 15 for a trip to England, Ireland, France and Germany. The trip, he said, will last about two months.

GOVERNOR VETOES TAX; SAYS FILMS AID MORALE

Motion pictures and other forms of amusement are a necessity and should not be taxed out of existance, Governor Floyd B. Olson of Minnesota declared last week in vetoing the state omnibus bill, which called for a graduated levy on theatre admissions of from one to ten per cent.

"The theatre and amusement business also suffers from the imposition of taxes provided in this bill," the Governor said. "Those who believe in a low standard of living for the masses contend that amusements come under the head of luxuries. I contend that they come under the head of necessities. Remove amusements from the poor and their morale is destroyed and their nervous systems impaired. In this day of intense nervous strain, relaxation, in the form of amusements, is almost as necessary as food."

New Haven School Exhibit To Promote Motion Pictures

Under the auspices of the visual education department of the board of education of New Haven, Conn., a section of the city's "hobby show" for children and adults, beginning May 13, will be devoted to motion picture promotion. A miniature film theatre, complete with stage, box office and lobby, in the construction of which local house managers are assisting, is planned.

Electrical Research Products, Inc., is to install a sound projector and other companies are furnishing varied short subjects. Showings will be held during the week of the exhibit. The program will include instructional and entertainment films, lectures on production and the like. Posters advertising coming attractions at the local theatres will be a feature of the lobby.

Major Distributors Contribute to NVA

Eight major producers have agreed to waive their interest in the 10 per cent of gross receipts of theatres pledging that amount on their shows of Monday, May 20, as their contribution to the 1935 NVA fund drive. All major circuit theatres have agreed to contribute. Special Saturday midnight benefit shows will be held in New York, Boston, Washington, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Detroit, Baltimore, Cleveland, Los Angeles and San Francisco. Independent theatres are to be enlisted.

Music League Sees Film

As part of the program celebrating its tenth anniversary, the National Music League, this week in New York, saw a short motion picture, "Youth and Music," which illustrated the work of the league.

Columbia Declares Dividend

The board of directors of Columbia Pictures last week declared the twenty-fifth consecutive quarterly dividend of 75 cents per share on the preferred stock, payable June 1, to holders of record May 15.

NEW BRITISH FIRM TO RELEASE HERE

Captain A. C. N. Dixey, member of Parliament, has formed Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., capitalized for £175,000 (approximately $875,000), for British and American distribution of British films. Captain Dixey had been joint managing director of London Films with Alexander Korda and is still a stockholder in that company. London financial interests are said to be backing the company to the extent of approximately £1,000,000, with the intention of absorbing Reunion Films, Ltd. An agreement is said to have been reached with American interests which assures release for all the company's product.

Philadelphia Unit An Allied Affiliate

The Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware last week effected a union with Allied of New Jersey at a joint meeting in Philadelphia attended by some 60 theatre men from those territories. Affiliation of the IEPA with national Allied makes the fourth new independent unit to join that organization within the past year. Since Allied held its last convention, units in Columbus, Atlanta and Washington, D. C., have joined. The Columbus unit is known as the Independent Theatre Owners of Ohio; in Washington it is Allied of the District of Columbia, and in Atlanta, the Georgia-Florida-Tennessee-Alabama Independent Exhibitors.

With the Philadelphia unit, Allied now has 38 states of the Union and Sidney E. Samuelson, president, believes that within the next year the entire country will be covered by Allied.

The joining of the IEPA with Allied had been forecast ever since the organization of the former and marked the end of negotiations started more than two years ago.

Guy Troyer was elected president of the North Dakota Theatre Owners' Association, succeeding John Piller, resigned. Other officers elected were William McCarthy and Anton Giles, vice-presidents, and Gus Wingreene, treasurer.

The convention of the GFTA, originally scheduled in Atlanta for May 21-23, coincident with the national Allied convention there, has been indefinitely postponed.

RKO Midwest Board Holds Monthly Meeting

Directors of RKO Midwest Corporation, of which Ike Libson of Cincinnati is the head, held their routine monthly meeting in New York last week, with Mr. Libson and his two associates, Ben Heidingsfeld and Maurice White, attending. Mr. Libson reported conditions much better in his territory and said the past year has seen a decided improvement.

CANADA'S WAR FILM FAVORABLY RECEIVED

Veterans Respond; the Second "March of Time" Withdrawn; F-P Canadian Shows Profit

by J. A. COWAN

Toronto Correspondent

Compiled from war film in the Canadian Government Archives and supplemented, obviously, by shots obtained from other sources, "Lest We Forget" is the official Canadian war picture, exploited, nevertheless, as a film lesson of the folly of war. As such, it can be expected to do from fair to good box-office business in Canadian houses, but its field would appear to be strictly limited to Canada. That it would have drawing power even in other sections of the Empire is extremely dubious. It has been prepared with a purely Canadian appeal.

Sponsored by the Canadian Legion (national organization of war veterans), the picture is a newsreel-type feature, but the shots were effectively selected and the editing was well done. There are British, French and American sequences as well as some originating in German sources. The sound consists of a narrator and some background of organ music. There has been some criticism of the absence of the customary sound effects of war, but the producers felt they would have to draw all their revenue from Canadian sources and thus had to limit expenditures very carefully.

The film has been playing, on metropolitan dates, to unusually heavy matinee trade, but this has not been feminine. A special price arrangement for war veterans, made by the Legion, has been responsible for a large fraction of the grosses, much of this business coming in the afternoons from the ranks of unemployed veterans. Whether announced as a war or anti-war document in celluloid, the draw seems to be chiefly the veteran, his family and friends. It does not seem to be pulling the younger trade. Business in general is profitable, but not standout. In Toronto, it played first-run at the Uptown, haunt of the carriage trade, and might have been better spotted at the smaller, downtown Tivoli, where it would have had excellent hold-over chances.

Second "March of Time" Withdrawn

The second release of "March of Time" has been withdrawn altogether from Canada and the prints have been shipped back to New York.

Taken by Famous-Players Canadian for the circuit, the first release was very successful at the box-office, though not as decided a hit as in the United States. The fact that the magazine Time in Canada has a restricted circulation due to a 5-cent per copy tax, accounts for this.

When the second release arrived, it was held up by the Ontario censors on two counts. The footage dealing with Hauptman and the scoop on his sentence was ordered out on the grounds of bad taste. All the Flemington trial scenes have been cut from Ontario newsreels for the same reason. Then the Hitler story and the ring-of-steel sequences likewise were banned. International amity is a tender point with Canadian authorities, and even the British film of some years ago with Dame Sybil Thorndike as "Edith Cavell" came under the ban as far as a large section of Canada was concerned, lest it might stir up wartime antagonism. With these two exceptions, the No. 2 March of Time was approved, but so little was left that the producers preferred to withdraw the release altogether.

Now the Ontario newsreel ruling covering British and Canadian content must be settled. For Ontario, the reels must contain 25 per cent Canadian material and 50 per cent of British and Canadian. The censors suggested that this regulation would also apply to the March of Time on the screen. The producers countered with the argument that the new film offering was no newsreel but a magazine and that the 25-50 regulation did not apply.

F-P Canadian Profit Rises

Operating profits of Famous-Players Canadian Corporation increased materially during the year ending Dec. 29, 1934, according to the company's annual report, and there was a sharp gain in working capital, with a large drop in current liabilities and a jump in current assets.

Operating profit was $1,434,011 and other income brought the total up to $1,639,373 with $302,625 the amount available for dividends, or 80 cents a share on the 378,790 shares outstanding. For 1933, it worked out at 25 cents a share.

The balance sheet shows current assets of $2,112,977, with current liabilities down to $573,329 from $1,009,253 in 1933; increasing the working capital from $712,400 for the year previous to $1,349,900 on the current statement.

A dividend of 50 cents a share was authorized at the annual meeting in Toronto and also the issuance of 18,940 common shares to present shareholders and holders of the voting trust certificates at $10 a share.

George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager of Paramount Publix, was elected as director.

Barring Giveaways

Giveaways, particularly dinnerware, in Toronto theatres, will be stopped, police announce, or court action will follow. The Canadian metropolis has a by-law on the statute books which makes merchandise lures illegal as box-office draws. A number of neighborhoods already have been warned and the morality squads have orders to see that "Dinnerware Nights," "Silverware Nights" are dropped.

In Canada, the law on this point varies from city to city and province to province. There is also considerable variation in enforcement. As far as Toronto is concerned, the authorities have been inclined to let the matter ride to a limited extent. Police did stop "Gift Nights" with major prizes awarded by drawing numbers out of hats but paid no attention to the policies of giving every customer a dish stand.

EGYPT RAISES IMPORT DUTY BY 500 PER CENT

Drastic Increase Stirs Storm of Protest; Papers See Tax as Unjustified and Ruinous

Action recently of the government of Egypt in increasing the import duty on foreign motion pictures by 500 per cent has raised a storm of public and press protest. The duty previously was 100 piastres per kilo (approximately $5). On the average length feature picture the former import duty amounted to approximately $150. Under the increase the duty on a feature length film amounts to approximately $750.

It was pointed out by The Egyptian Gazette, leading English daily newspaper, published in Alexandria, that the tax is especially unjustified since there is no question in this instance of protecting a domestic industry, in view of the fact that Egyptian motion picture production is negligible. Further, the newspaper contended that the prohibitive increase in the duty actually will result in loss, rather than gain to the government, since it is likely importation may cease altogether, except for those pictures which are practically certain to draw large grosses in the country. The tax makes it virtually impossible for the importer to derive any profit from his operation, The Gazette insisted.

If the government was planning that increased admissions would take care of the increased duty, said the editorial, its reasoning was incorrect, since only the few first run theatres in the cities in effect pay the duty. The second run and third run theatres obtain the product at extremely low rentals.

"A government which based its fiscal policy on social considerations would, one may think, refrain from imposing any taxation whatever on cinema films," the editorial said. "The net annual revenue is small and it is derived from an article which constitutes for a very large section of the public the sole form of public amusement they can enjoy. . . . The Egyptian government has made prohibitive the only distraction of hundreds of thousands of deserving folk, depriving them of their weekly surcease from daily cares. . . . The interests of the working masses . . . should be sufficient to secure abandonment of (the) project."

French Paper Joins Attack

Another daily newspaper, Le Phare Egyptien, on two different occasions, sharply attacked the government's action. One article was titled, "Death of the Cinema in Egypt!" It pointed out that approximately 250 films are annually imported into the country, a figure which may be expected to fall away drastically with the imposition of the increased duty.

In addition to supporting the contention of The Gazette relative to even smaller revenue to be anticipated, the French daily contended that the importers, since the importation of films no longer could be a profitable enterprise, would decrease their staffs, thus tending to add to the unemployment problem, already serious. Another result, declared the paper, will be the closing of the popular priced theatres, unable to operate at the higher admissions which would be necessitated by the duty increase.

Importations Already Affected

In a second article, published after the effective date of the tax, the newspaper reported that the importation of films into the country had fallen drastically, importers refusing to take their shipments out of the customs warehouses. The article cited interviews with importers who have agreed that continuation of the increased duty will mean the ruination of their business.

The authorities have promised, following wide protest, that the matter will be given consideration, with a view to possible revision of the increase.

Two Nations Shun Congress in Berlin

The International Film Congress, meeting in Berlin under the patronage of Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, German Propaganda Minister, began its sessions last Thursday in the Kroll Opera House with 40 nations, represented by about 2,000 individuals, participating.

Two nations, however, had declined to attend—Great Britain and Holland. The British shunned the meeting because of political and "technical considerations," and a British spokesman said prior to the opening of the congress that inasmuch as the whole German film industry was under the domination of the government there could be no free discussion.

The Dutch, it was said, were against participation from the beginning. American film companies are attending through their European representatives or German branch offices. The Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America indicated two weeks ago that none of its members would attend.

In a preliminary talk to the press, Dr. Fritz Scheuermann, president of the Reich Film Chamber, emphasized his gratification that despite political animosities, the congress was taking place in Berlin after all. He expressed the hope the congress would contribute to international understanding.

According to figures presented to the congress, Germany produced 170 feature pictures during the 1934-35 season at a cost of 54,000,000 marks.

George Thompson Dies

George H. Thompson, 57, for more than 30 years manager of the Waller theatre at Laurel, Del., died at his home in Laurel of complications resulting from a paralytic stroke. He managed the first theatre ever opened at Laurel. He is survived by his widow, two sisters and five children.

Exhibitor Group Urges Dual Plan

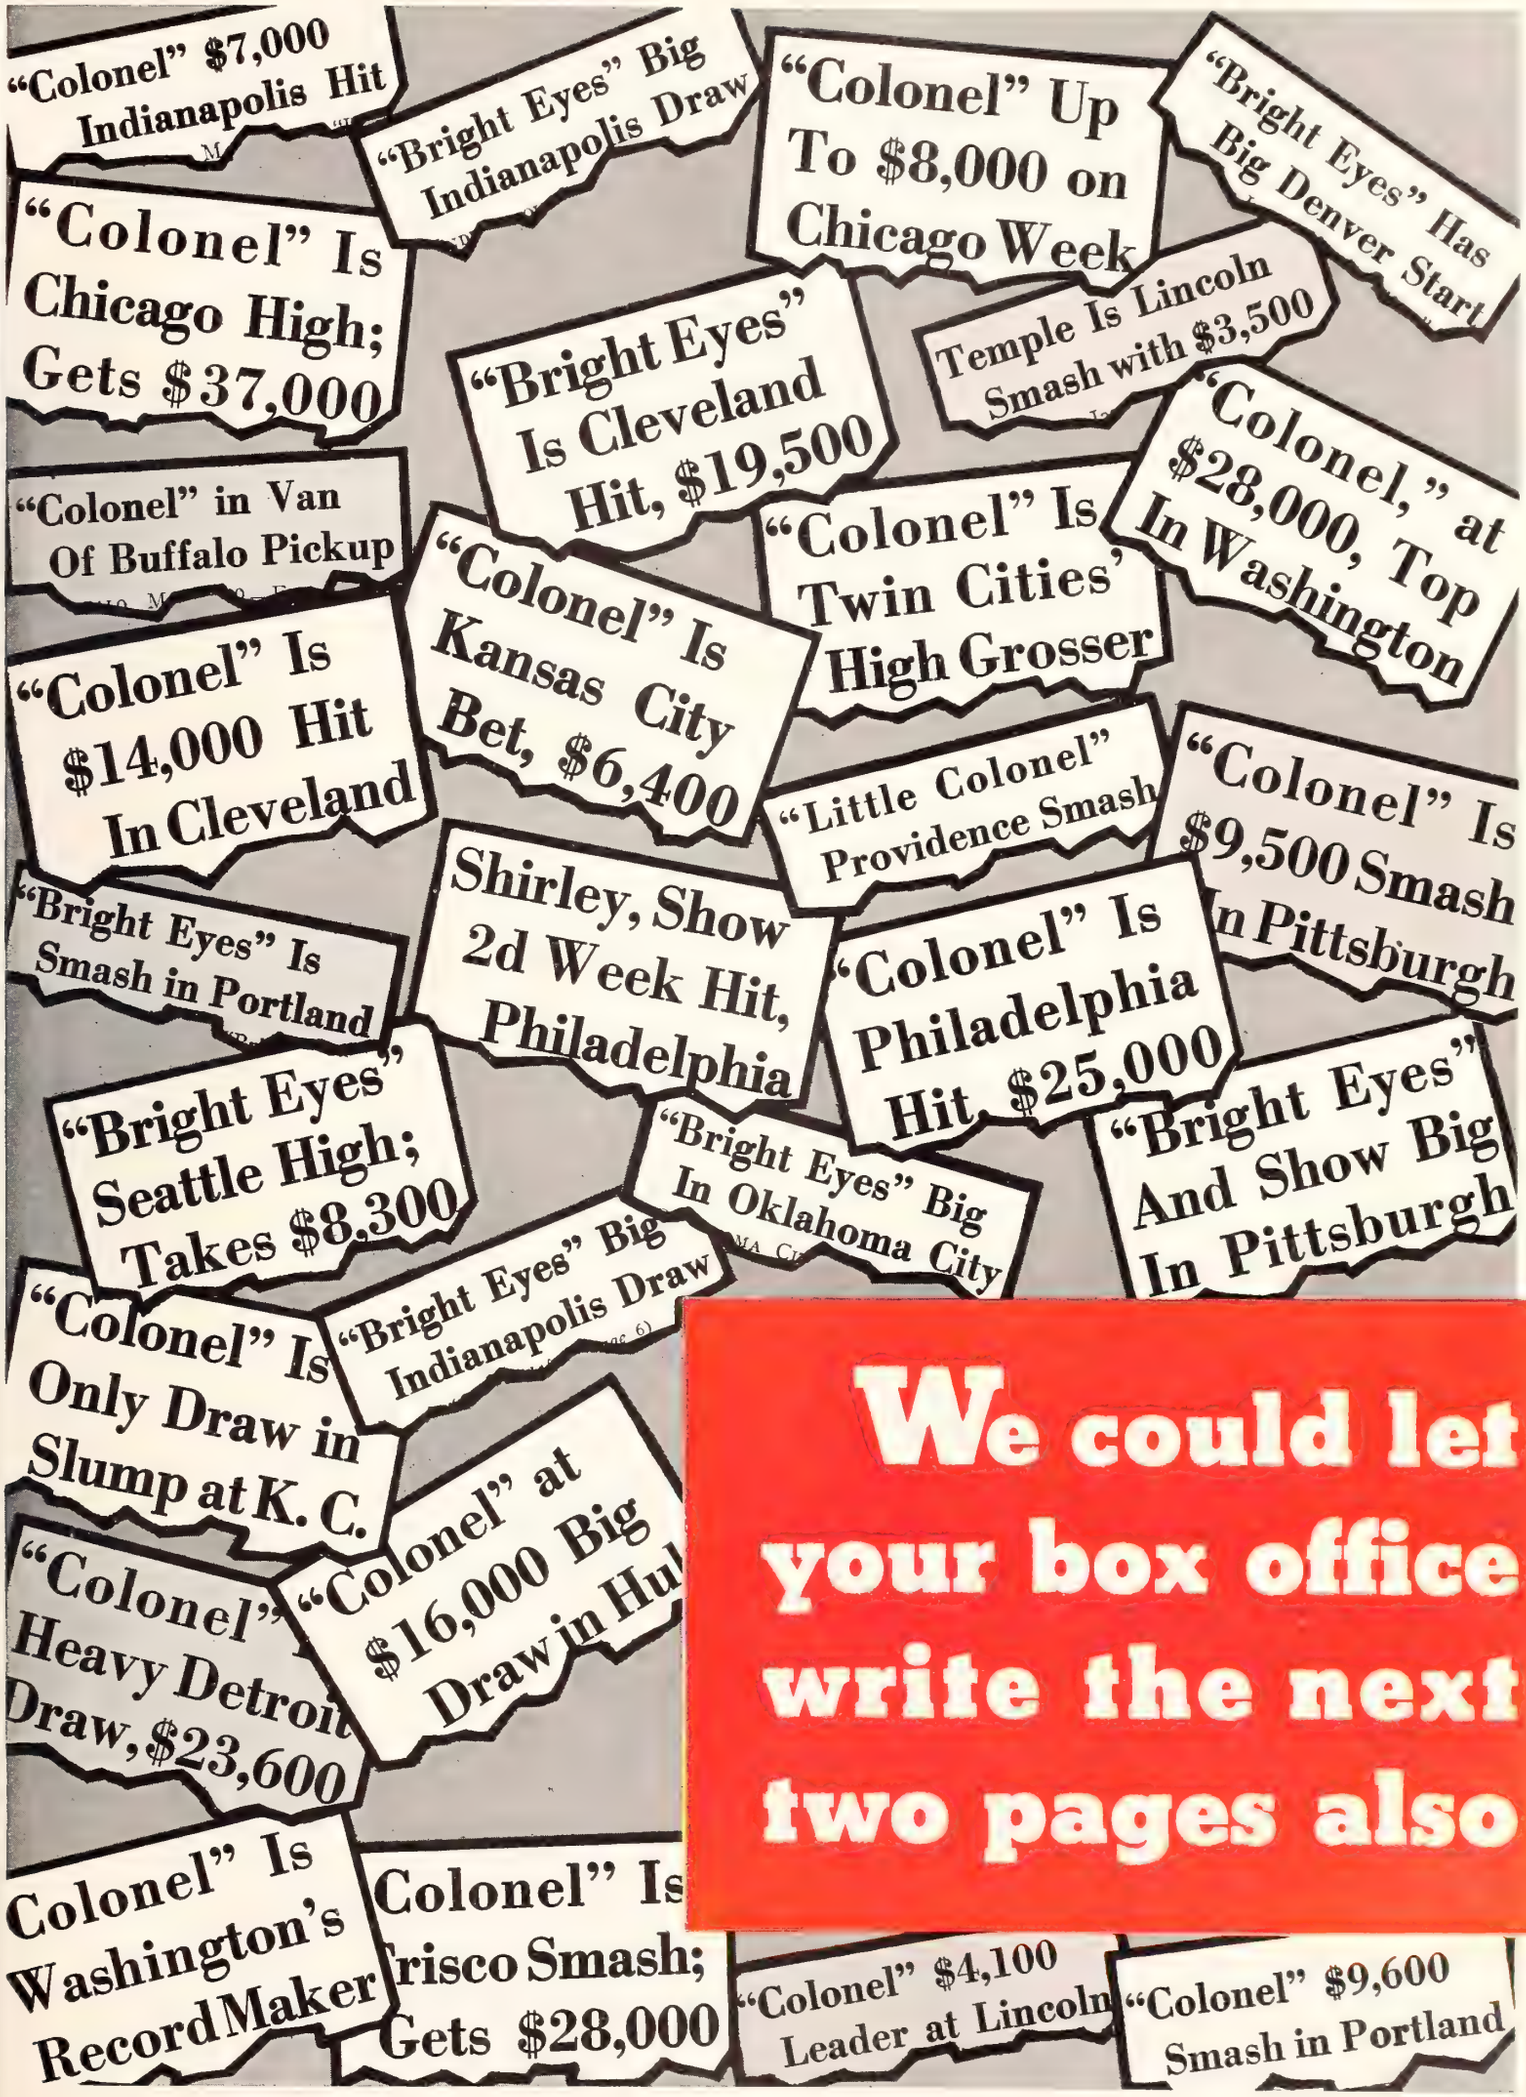
A compromise calling for the establishment of an "arbitrary percentage of each major company's releases which shall be double featured, if the exhibitor desires," was urged this week in the bulletin of the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey and Delaware as a means of solving the dual bill problem.

"No restrictions should be placed on the type of picture which may be twin billed, nor should the theatre's run be affected in any way," the bulletin stated. "It is obvious that the weaker pictures will be used on the dual bills, so the producers need not fear that their specials will be part of double feature programs."

The bulletin asserted that "it appears that between 20 and 30 per cent of the major companies' products are so weak that they show in few theatres at a profit." The organization also suggests a double feature privilege of 33 1/3 per cent for territories "like Cleveland and Philadelphia."

Possible legal entanglements in the double bill releasing plan sought by Kansas City exhibitors were being studied by distributors there during the week as a result of objections raised by W. D. Fulton, suburban operator. While the legal questions are delaying the distributors' decision, some independent suburbans, impatient, are double billing features which the companies this year have restricted to single bills.

In Milwaukee, plans for eliminating double bills were discussed at a meeting last week of Milwaukee county members of the Independent Theatres' Protective Association. It was decided twin bills should be wiped out before any headway could be made in the move to raise admission prices.



Fox Quarter Net Equals $616,806

Fox Film on Wednesday reported consolidated net operating profit after all charges, including federal income taxes, of $616,806 for the 13 weeks ended March 30, 1935. This compares with net loss of $233,143 for the 13 weeks ended December 29, 1934, and profit of $805,376 for the first quarter of 1934.

The net for the 1935 quarter amounts to 25 cents per share on the 2,436,409 shares of Class A and Class B stock outstanding. No theatre earnings are included from National Theatres Corporation, in which Fox Film holds a 42 per cent interest.

A. T. & T. Growth Noted As Fiftieth Year Is Observed

On the occasion, last week, of the fiftieth anniversary of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, Walter S. Gifford, president, visioned a great future for the company, with advancement in the ensuing 50 years equal to that of the first half-century. He expressed the belief that it is only a matter of time before the Bell System will be connected with every telephone in the world. "It is now practical and possible," he said.

Western Electric, a subsidiary of A. T. & T., serves the motion picture industry with the manufacture of producing and reproducing sound picture equipment, through its own subsidiary, Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Mr. Gifford declared that in the past 50 years the company has developed a network of wires making connection with 13,360,000 telephones which are Bell-owned, and more than 3,430,000 which are Bell-connected. At present only three countries with 100,000 or more telephones are outside the reach of the Bell System.

Last Sunday evening the company presented a program, over WABC and a nationwide hookup, tracing the development of the telephone industry from the time when, in a small garret in Boston, on June 2, 1875, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, young professor of vocal physiology, discovered the principle of the telephone. On March 10, 1876, he transmitted the first message, the famous "Mr. Watson, come here, I want you," to his assistant, Thomas A. Watson. Today the A. T. & T. is the largest corporation in the world, with 1934 assets of $4,977,054,686.

The first telephone company was the Bell Telephone Company, formed in 1877 and capitalized for $500,000. At present there are 24 associated companies in the system, together with the long distance lines, returning a gross revenue of $884,532,429 in 1934. The company's radio telephone service embraces 60 foreign countries and island groups.

BRITISH BUDGET GIVES STAGE A LIGHTER TAX

Film Interests, While Welcoming $11,500,000 Saving, Wonder About Legitimate Scale

The 1935 Budget, though it abolished the tax on seats up to 12 cents, probably will go down in British motion picture history as that which introduced the highly important principle of discrimination in taxation in favor of stage entertainment. Heretofore, all forms of amusement have paid the same Entertainment Tax. In future the theatre, music hall, circus, concert and recital will operate under a separate scale considerably more favorable to them.

An exact comparison between the rates to be paid by theatres and cinemas is difficult because the scale is differently graded; the lowest range for the theatre is "over 12 cents and not over 17 cents," while the cinema starts at "over 12 and not over 15." The following table, however, roughly reflects the relative positions:

—Admission Less Tax— (in Cents)		——Tax in Cents——
Stage	Cinema	Theatre	Cinema
12-17	12-15	1	3
17-22	15-20	2	4
22-27	20-25	3	5
27-32	25-30	4	6
32-37	30 and over	5	2 on each 10
37-42	....	6	2 on each 10
Over 42	....	*	2 on each 10

* Six for first 42 and 2 per 10 higher.

(American values are calculated on the par value of the pound.)

It will be seen that the "living" theatre, as well as sharing the benefit of the abolition of tax on "up to sixpence" admissions, has the exclusive benefit of a reduced scale; on all seats still subject to taxation the cinema pays exactly as before. The advantage is greater than appears from the table, due to the difference in "stepping" the two scales. The theatre, for instance, will pay 4 cents on a 32 cents admission; the cinema 6 cents on 30 cents. In relation to gross admissions one will pay 11.1 per cent and the other 16.6 per cent, in this instance.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer estimated the cost of the concession to the theatres at £400,000 ($2,000,000) and of the abolition of the "sixpenny" duty at £2,300,000 ($11,500,000).

The trade is not disposed to grudge the assistance given to other forms of entertainment; there is a general recognition that the cinema has a cultural dependence on the theatre and that its continued prosperity is, even from a selfish viewpoint, desirable. There is, however, a certain amount of foreboding about the precedent established by Mr. Chamberlain, and some justification for it in his statement to the theatres that "they will not fail to appreciate the importance of a change which for the first time differentiates between this kind of performance and another."

The quoted opinion of the secretary of the Variety Artistes' Federation that the Budget in "a first step in the right direction . . . even more important as a gesture than from the financial point of view," shows that the hint has been taken. Undoubtedly claims for further tax concessions in future years will be affected by the fact that different sections of the amusement industry will have different and to a certain extent conflicting interests.

"Cleavage" Troubles Britons

The announcement of the approaching visit of Martin Quigley and Carl Milliken to confer, on behalf of Will Hays, with the Film Group of the Federation of British Industries, coincided with the publication of the new censorship ruling regarding "cleavage," which has caused a considerable feeling of uncertainty and insecurity among that section of British producers which hope for an American outlet. The opportunity of hearing at first hand exactly what the Production Code demands is therefore eagerly welcomed, and there is undoubtedly a general feeling that the conference may indirectly lead, in the words of Mr. Alexander Korda, to "an extension to the British and American industries of the complete cooperation of the various branches of the industry which I learned to admire in Hollywood." Direct contact between the two industries is the more necessary because, with a certain section of the British press, the Code is either misunderstood or misrepresented whenever a British picture incurs American censorship.

Celebrities with Newsreels

British Movietone News certainly started something by announcing that Sir Malcolm Campbell had become editor and commentator-in-chief, and that the "celebrity" idea was to be maintained in an extensive departmentalization which would bring in as expert contributors the famous cartoonist Tom Webster, the War correspondent, G. Ward Price, a British broadcasting company racing expert, Capt. R. C. Lyle, an Oxford oarsman in Guy Nickalls and a whole series of others with headline publicity value. The close association of the Harmsworth Daily Mail interests with Movietone is obvious in the details of this typically journalistic piece of enterprise; Wardour Street is now wondering just what other reels will do about it when Mr. Campbell, who is to be released for further world record speed attempts, tells Movietone listeners exactly how he did it.

COURT APPROVES STOCK PLAN FOR PARAMOUNT

Provides for Unit of One-Quarter Share New Common, One-Fifth New Second Preferred

Federal court approval given late last week for the underwriting, by Atlas Corporation and affiliates, of a Paramount Publix Corporation $6,441,804 stock issue of subscriptions to warrants is one of the final procedures to be taken toward effecting complete reorganization of the company and the return of the corporate structure to its normal status. The Paramount board of directors already had approved the plan, in which Lehman Brothers and Hallgarten and Company will participate with Atlas.

There remains only a hearing, to be held May 10, on approval of the new charter of incorporation, new bylaws, security forms and other such matters before the reorganization is completely effected, and then the formal election on May 15 of the new board of directors.

Approved by Court

Approval by Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe in United States district court, New York, of Atlas' underwriting proposal; its immediate favorable reaction in the open market on Paramount securities, and a petition for permission to extend its holdings in Famous Players Canadian Corporation, were the principal developments of the week.

Less important were the formal dissolution of some old Saenger Theatre subsidiary identities and their replacement with new corporate structures, and the filing of an amended petition to cancel existing claims and contracts with the Skouras interests.

Dow-Jones, Wall Street publishing firm, predicted Paramount will earn $2,000,000 in the first quarter of 1935.

Under the Atlas-Lehman-Hallgarten plan of underwriting the new issue, each stockholder will be entitled to subscribe to a unit consisting of one-quarter share of new common stock and one-fifth share of new second preferred stock. Atlas and its affiliates agree to subscribe to all units not taken by holders of warrants. Units available number 3,220,902 at the subscription price of $2 per unit.

Floyd B. Odlum, of Atlas, John D. Hertz of Lehman Brothers, and Maurice Newton of Hallgarten are the only members of the new Paramount board having a direct interest in the new financing. However, it was said that other business may compel Mr. Odlum to relinquish the board post, in which event he probably would designate a successor.

One Per Cent Commission

The plan was presented to the court last Wednesday afternoon without any objections, this because it is generally conceded to be quite favorable to the corporation, providing as it does for a commission of only one per cent, or $64,418.

Paramount stockholders have until September to exercise their subscription warrants, and the money derived therefrom will be used as working capital. The warrants will be made available July 1.

The immediate effect of the court's approval was to strengthen the position of Paramount bonds and certificates in the open stock market, the bonds being the feature of bond trading last Friday, advancing rapidly on a good turnover. Paramount-Publix 5½s rose to 87, a day's gain of six points, and a new high, while the certificates were 5½ points higher at a new top level for the move, closing Friday at 86⅛. Paramount-Famous-Lasky bonds rose 5½ to a new high of 85½ and the certificates were up six points to a new high of 86.

The Paramount Publix bonds continued strong over the weekend and by Monday night had reached 87¼, while the certificates were traded at 87. The Paramount-Famous-Lasky bonds likewise held the ground gained after court approval of the underwriting plan.

Hearing on Further Purchase

Special Master John E. Joyce set Thursday as the date for hearing the petition of the corporation to purchase an additional 18,236 shares of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, largest theatre circuit in the Dominion, and in which the company already owns 378,790 shares, or 96 per cent of all stock outstanding. The parent Paramount company would have the right to purchase, at $10 per share, 18,236 shares of a new issue of 18,940 shares just authorized by Famous Players Canadian, and under a recent dividend declaration of 50 cents per share, Paramount will derive $182,263, which the petition proposes to apply to the purchase of the additional stock.

Net profit of $302,625 and an earned surplus of $3,762,036 were reported by the Canadian circuit in its statement of operations for 1934.

Involved in the petition to adjust claims and contracts between Paramount and the Skouras interests, and which will likewise be heard Thursday, are old contracts with Skouras Brothers arising out of St. Louis and Atlantic States' operating agreements, and the mutual cancellation of claims thereunder. Spyros Skouras would repay to Paramount some $90,795, with interest, representing the balance of a $100,000 loan. Payments would be made quarterly over a six-year period. The Skouras Brothers have long since given up their interests in the two groups of theatres involved.

At Dover, Del., incorporation papers were granted for the Paramount-Richards Theatres, Inc., a new holding company for the Saenger stock.

Sues to End Partnership

Juliette E. Fulton has filed suit in circuit court, St. Louis, asking dissolution of partnership and receivership, against her husband, William D. Fulton, operating five suburban theatres. Mrs. Fulton contended her husband had violated an oral agreement whereby they became partners in theatre operation, for which she put up the greater part of the capital. He denied the charges.

Federal Admission Tax Is Expected To Be Continued

While the motion picture continued to be the target of attack in the few state legislatures still in session, first indications came from Washington this week that the ten per cent admission and other emergency taxes will definitely be continued by the Administration.

Continuance already has been given tentative approval by the House ways and means committee, which met late last week for the purpose of drafting the bill to succeed the present measure which remains in effect until July 1.

CALIFORNIA: Proposals to tax motion picture films on a footage basis were buried in the Assembly when the two principal proponents of the idea—Assemblymen Laughlin and Morgan—withdrew their measures. The joint steering committee of both houses this week started consideration of the problem of raising $250,000,000 in new taxes. A proposal by Senator Duval to cut in half the income tax levy recently passed by the Assembly and add numerous nuisance taxes, including a charge of 30 cents ad valorem on $100 valuation, was being studied by the committee, but this plan, minus the admission levy, is considered nearly as unacceptable to the studios as the other. A new one per cent gross transactions tax, backed by the studios, was submitted.

CONNECTICUT: Theatre owners lost their fight for Sunday openings after 2 P. M. when the Senate this week at Hartford turned down the proposal.

FLORIDA: E. J. Sparks was receiving credit for the defeat of the proposed 10 per cent admission tax which died last week in the House judiciary committee, which also rejected the proposed taxation of "bank night" theatres.

IOWA: Iowa's proposed 10 per cent admission tax has been tabled in the House.

MASSACHUSETTS: An attempt to force an act for licensing stage hands by the commissioner of public safety through the present session failed.

MICHIGAN: A bill to permit smoking by patrons, subject to fire marshals' regulations, has been introduced in the Michigan legislature.

MINNESOTA: Minnesota exhibitors won their fight to prevent enactment of a 10 per cent admission tax in addition to a 3 per cent sales tax, when Governor Olson vetoed the omnibus tax last week.

MISSOURI: The Senate voted to reduce the rate in the proposed retail sales tax from two to one-half of one per cent.

NORTH CAROLINA: A bill to prohibit preferred playing time and designated playdates was introduced.

OKLAHOMA: The House, having killed the bill requiring the filing of schedules and film rentals along with other regulations in aid of subsequent runs, the Oklahoma legislature ended its session last week with no adverse film legislation except for the one per cent sales tax.

PENNSYLVANIA: A bill calling for a tax on film footage was killed in committee.

RHODE ISLAND: The legislature adjourned last week without the passage of the four bills which would have affected the industry. These included a two-men-in-a-booth measure, another to confine auditoriums to the street floor, a sales tax and an income tax.

WASHINGTON: Under a ruling by the state tax commission, benefit shows put on by schools, churches, lodges, women's clubs, etc., will in future be subject to an admission tax.

WISCONSIN: A two-men-in-a-booth bill has been introduced in the Assembly.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Al Finestone sends from Kansas City a reportorial account of Chief Caupolican's encounter with two desperadoes on a dustswept prairie in western Oklahoma. The Chief, an Indian opera singer, had to sing in deep bass in the outdoors to demonstrate his identity and gain liberty.

On his way from Hollywood to Philadelphia to join the Philadelphia Opera Company, Chief Caupolican and a young soldier hitch-hiker he had given a ride were held up at night on highway Number 66 between Oklahoma City and Elk City.

Driven into a side road, robbed and threatened with torture and death because he had only about $37, the Indian singer resorted to operatic concert to gain freedom.

"Remember Eddie Cantor's picture, 'Whoopee'?" he asked. "Well, I was the Indian chief who stood on the mountain and sang. I'll show you," and he proceeded to reel off a few scores.

"That's right," one of the bandits said. "I guess you're the chief, all right."

Chief Caupolican offered to pay ransom later if they freed him. They argued and finally decided to release him and his companion without additional tribute. They didn't even take his traveler's checks. The chief could not help but observe that civilization's improvements have not made the Oklahoma plains much safer than a century back when his Indian forefathers rode the countryside bareback on fast ponies, with bow and arrows.

From Abner Silver we hear the story about the "sneak" preview of an unimportant picture that had just been turned out by one of the large companies. The producer himself was present and eagerly he turned to his executives and writers and asked them what they thought of it. "Colossal!" said the first. "Superb!" screamed the second. "Magnificent!" bellowed the third. And then the boss turned to another man. "What do you think of it?" he asked hopefully. "Awful," answered the fellow. "The worst I've ever seen!" The producer glowered. "You're fired!" he stormed. "Get out!" "All right. I'll get out," retorted the iconoclast, "but you can't fire me. I don't work for you—I work for Warners Brothers."

Richard Dix and Marion Davies are the only two stars in Hollywood who still cling to the custom of silent picture days, having an orchestra on the set between scenes to play soothing tunes.

And from Essey Oppey, Manhattan contributor to Rob Wagner's Script, we hear a story about Messmore Kendall, a member of the directorate of Metro-Goldwyn, who, reaching Havana recently, found his venturesome, never-miss-a-trick, 80-year-old mother, who looks 60, right in the thick of the current Cuban fracas. She had gone over to Havana from her Miami home hoping to get in on some Class-A hell-breaking-loose. Her perturbed son, after hours of heated argument, finally packed her on board the Santa Rosa and brought her north. Now he's wondering what to do with her to keep her safe for democracy and her family.

"She's always been like that," he sighed. "When the United States entered the war, she was in her 60's and looked 40. Before we could realize what she was up to, she had gone to France. The next we heard she was in the ambulance corps, having given her age as 41. Later we heard she was a passenger in the first American bomber to fly in France. After many other adventures we learned she had been decorated with the Legion of Honor. Then, after the war was over, I prepared to go abroad and bring her home and cabled her that I was sailing. But her reply was back before my message was dry. 'Don't you dare come,' it read. 'Remember, I am listed as 43 years old. You aren't born yet!'"

Item in Omaha's World-Herald:

It was said not long ago that Hollywood has only two adjectives, the one of approval being "swell".

The World-Herald yesterday received a package from MGM, containing 31 pictures of eight featured players. The studio thinks well of them, but not one was described in the captions as "swell". In 16, the subjects were called "lovely," four were "pretty," one was "young," one "charming," one "baby-blue-eyed," one "noted" and six were just "stars". Seven pictures were of Gloria Swanson, who was "lovely" six times and a "star" once.

Phil Regan hopes that his greying ol' mother in New York will never see him in his forthcoming picture, "In Caliente," Warners.

Reason: Some time ago, Phil promised his mom that he would never wear a mustache. In the film he wears one—he had to, on orders of Busby Berkeley, who never lets sentiment stand in the way of a mustache.

And, not content with mustaching Regan, Berkeley put rubber horseshoes on two dozen white horses which are ridden madly into a Mexican cabaret set. The horses' iron shoes at first made so much noise that the music was drowned.

They say that Chico Marx in Hollywood was chagrined when he read the news that Homer Weinberg, Buffalo jeweler, had been named pinocle champion in a national contest in New York, with 58,000 champions listed. Chico is tops at this game. Admits it himself. He hurled a defi at Weinberg, offering to post $5,000 if Weinberg will put up the same amount, as a purse in a contest to determine which of them is the better pinocler.

Infantile paralysis victims in the state of Kansas will benefit by the experience of E. A. Briles, exhibitor of Stafford, Kansas, who, as a member of the state legislature, was instrumental in the passage of a bill to establish serum stations throughout the state.

Some months ago the nine-year-old daughter of the Briles' was stricken with the disease. Representative Briles discovered that the nearest place where the serum could be obtained was a hospital in Kansas City. He called the MGM exchange there and Branch Manager Frank Hensler chartered a plane, delegating Joe McGuire, his booker, to obtain the serum and fly with it to Stafford. The flight was made in record time, and scores of Stafford townspeople were on hand to help land the plane, which, because of the absence of an airport, came to ground in a cow pasture. The serum saved the life of the little girl.

Under the new bill, which was passed without a single dissenting vote, serum will be purchased and distributed to hospitals throughout Kansas.

Besides holding a seat in the legislature, Representative Briles operates the Nu Era theatre at Stafford, publishes the newspaper there, is the town banker and its ex-mayor.

Of course not too many people took too seriously the industry's threat to move production out of Hollywood if and when California's legislature effected its proposed program of taxation, but, regardless, some of the studio moguls did proceed with preparations of one kind or another, as witness the following anonymous note from "Studio Worker," to Rob Wagner's Script out there:

DEAR ROB:

I was firm in my belief that our big executives were serious in their statements that the studios would sooner or later move en masse to the East, until businesslike-looking men began going from office to office measuring our desks, for, as they solemnly assured us, an immediate exodus. Then I began to figure: Why should they move a lot of bulky desks; why measure them if they intended to—it would be easy to compute a carload from one desk; furthermore, if, as we had been told, it would take two or three years to build new studios, why would they be moving desks now? . . .

PARAMOUNT LINKED IN FOX "MET" PLANS

Fabian Says Atlas and Fortington, Through Schaefer, Suggested $4,000,000 Cash Bid

The increasingly complicated reorganization problem of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses assumed increased importance this week when several developments and highly intricate proposals were revealed in federal judge Julian W. Mack's court in New York. Among these were:

1. Submission by Si Fabian of a plan of reorganization calling for payment to noteholders of 20 per cent in cash and 80 per cent in debentures, a plan which also would mean elimination of Skouras and Randforce as operators of the circuit.

2. Disclosures that Paramount Publix, through financial interests now represented on its new board of directors, discussed with Si Fabian the making of a $4,000,000 cash bid for Fox Metropolitan.

3. Revelations that Warner Brothers had sounded out Mr. Fabian on possible purchase of the 18 Fox Metropolitan houses in New Jersey in the event his bid is successful.

4. Disclosures that William Fox is one of two voting trustees owning a substantial amount of the stock of Bankers' Securities Corporation, Philadelphia, the Albert M. Greenfield financing company which has agreed to loan $650,000 to Mr. Fabian for his plan of reorganization.

5. Testimony by Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman of the Keith - Albee - Orpheum board, that KAO's stock ownership participation in Fox Metropolitan may be a maximum of 25 per cent or a minimum of 20 per cent if the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres' plan goes through.

Judge Mack on Wednesday advised the Paramount interests, and the proponents of two new plans, B. S. Moss and Nicholas Atlas, attorney for Fox Theatres stockholders' committee, to submit their proposals at once. He turned over to the bondholders' committee for consideration the plans offered by Schenck-Fox Theatres and Si Fabian.

The Fabian plan of reorganization for Fox Metropolitan, submitted last Thursday, was attacked before Judge Mack by Isidor J. Kresel, counsel for the Schenck-Fox Theatres' reorganization plan, who said Mr. Fabian's sole objective was to block any other plan presented

Mr. Kresel elicited from Mr. Fabian the information that his principal associate in the proposed reorganization would be Albert M. Greenfield of the Bankers Securities Company of Philadelphia. Mr. Fabian earlier had testified that $1,000,000 in cash would be provided. Under cross-examination he explained that he would put up $350,000 and Bankers' Securities Company the remaining $650,000, which would be in the nature of a non-interest bearing loan to be repaid and serviced entirely from dividends of the reorganized company. Mr. Fabian said he would give the bankers a 25 per cent interest in the common stock as bonus.

Despite the fact that Mr. Fabian would put up only $350,000 of the proposed $1,000,000, he would receive 75 per cent of the Fox Metropolitan stock. This he explained by saying that the $650,000 Bankers' Securities money is a loan to him, for which all the Fox Metropolitan stock would serve as collateral. Fabian Enterprises, he said, would have no liability as a result of the loan, but dividends from Fox Metropolitan would be turned over to the Greenfield bank until the loan was repaid.

Mr. Kresel asked Mr. Fabian if he had been approached by any motion picture company with a view to participation in a reorganization of Fox Metropolitan. Mr. Fabian answered that both Paramount Publix and Warner Brothers had done so and that "an official" of Paramount had suggested a $4,000,000 cash offer. Mr. Fabian said he had been told by financial interests now represented on the new board of directors of Paramount that it would be unable to make any bid until it was completely free of court jurisdiction in its own reorganization proceedings and the new Paramount board had been formally elected.

Mr. Fabian named Atlas Corporation and H. A. Fortington as the Paramount financial interests in the cash bid proposal. Floyd B. Odlum, head of Atlas, is one of the designated new directors of Paramount, and H. A. Fortington, American representative of large British insurance companies, also is a director-elect. The actual proposal, Mr. Fabian testified, was made to him through George J. Schaefer, general manager of Paramount Publix.

It was indicated that the proposal had not been discussed with any other members of the proposed new Paramount board.

Mr. Fabian said the discussions took place a little more than a month ago and that Mr. Schaefer had told him that if his bid was successful Paramount product would be available for Fox Metropolitan.

Pooling Proposal Broached

In testifying that Herman Starr of Warner had told him the company would like to buy the 18 Fox Metropolitan houses in New Jersey in the event the Fabian bid was successful, Mr. Fabian said he had vetoed the suggestion, but had told Mr. Starr that he would be willing to discuss a pooling arrangement with Warner for the houses.

At one point in the cross-examination, Mr. Fabian said "Herman Starr told me that if the Schenck-Fox Theatres' plan is successful, A. C. Blumenthal has promised Warners the Jersey theatres."

Questioning Mr. Fabian as to confidential reports on Fox Metropolitan operations which he had received in his capacity as advisor to Irving Trust Company, receiver for Fox Metropolitan, Mr. Kresel asked him whether he had delivered any of these confidential documents to Warner Bros. Mr. Fabian said he had retained copies but denied he had given anything to Warner Bros. that had not been authorized by either the receiver or the court.

On Monday William Fox was revealed by Mr. Greenfield to be one of two voting trustees owning a substantial amount of the stock of Bankers' Securities, Mr. Greenfield being the other. Mr. Greenfield said he had had no other discussions with Mr. Fox than regarding the desirability of an investment in Fox Metropolitan and a statement by Mr. Fox that he considered Fox Metropolitan "to be a good circuit".

Keith-Albee-Orpheum's participation in Fox Metropolitan plans was revealed last week by Herbert Bayard Swope, chairman of the KAO board, shortly after that company had reached an informal agreement with Joseph M. Schenck which automatically eliminates Fox Metropolitan as a competitive bidder for product against KAO. The agreement, which would be effective provided the Schenck-Fox Theatres' plan were accepted, would result in a permanent continuance of the existing product agreements between KAO and Fox Metropolitan, under which KAO is permitted to day-and-date Radio and certain other product under first-run contract to KAO in return for KAO's day-and-date playing of Fox product, which is under franchise to Fox Metropolitan.

The following day Mr. Swope announced that KAO's stock participation in Fox Metropolitan may be a maximum of 25 per cent or a minimum of 20 per cent if the Schenck-Fox Theatres' plan is successful. KAO's 25 per cent stock participation could be had, according to the present understanding between Mr. Swope and Mr. Schenck, only if Fox Theatres does not exercise its option under the reorganization plan to purchase 50 per cent of the Fox Metropolitan stock. In that event all the Fox Metropolitan stock would go to Mr. Schenck and he would dispose of 25 per cent of it to KAO. If the Fox Theatres option is exercised, however, KAO will be permitted to acquire only a 20 per cent interest.

Tuesday's hearing was devoted to further cross-examination of Mr. Fabian.

Meantime, in Kansas City, it was reported this week that transfer of assets of Fox Rocky Mountain and Fox Midwest to National Theatres, scheduled for last week, will take place on Saturday when Associated Theatres and Fox Midcontinent will assume operation of the 200 theatres.

New Zealand Sets Minimum Prices

To prevent uneconomic price cutting, rather than to reduce admission prices, the Cinematograph Films Amendment Act has been altered to permit minimum admissions of six pence for adults and three pence for children in New Zealand, Australia. Exhibitors taking advantage of the new minimum must use only films released during the 1933 season, and may show them only on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, at the new minimum.

After long negotiation, the agreement was reached. Supervision and control is vested in a minimum admissions committee, including three representatives of the Exhibitors' Association, two of the Film Exchanges Association and one of the distributors who are not members of the Exchanges Association.

The distributors will make separate contracts for such exhibition, and are entitled to exclude road show films from the minimum classification. Enforcement of a minimum admissions regulation has been the obstacle to agreement for a long period. It was contended some time ago that while independent suburban theatres were forced to adhere to the regulation by threats of suspension of film service, circuits in competition ignored the regulation.

GERMANY SETS MINIMUM WAGE SCALE FOR THEATRE WORKERS

Basic Number of Working Hours Placed at 41 in Seven Days; Vacations Are Specified; 14 Days' Notice Also Required

by J. K. RUTENBERG

Berlin Correspondent

In its policy to put working conditions throughout the Reich on a foundation of strict equality and to prevent individual excesses, the German Government has established a minimum wage scale for theatrical employees of all kinds which must be observed to the letter. The new order was effective as of March.

The new regulations, which at first are valid for cinemas, stage and vaudeville theatres in Greater Berlin only, will shortly be extended to other cities and communities.

The working hours are 41 hours per seven days and under certain conditions may be extended to 49 hours a week without any extra payment. The overhauling of reproducing sets and the preparations necessary for a showing must not exceed half an hour daily and this is not considered as working time.

Extra work that means more than 49 hours per week is not to be allowed. In case of emergency they shall be equalized by free hours. Apart from this equivalent all employees in cinemas, on the stage and in vaudeville houses and the like are to receive extra payment of 25 per cent of the hourly wage from the 51st hour upward to the 61st hour a week. Above the 61st hour the extra payment is 50 per cent of the specific wage per hour. Extra work of more than fifteen minutes is considered as half an hour, of more than 30 minutes as a full hour.

Every individual employee is entitled to two free days a month, for which full payment must be paid. The date of these free days must be fixed by agreement between employee and theatre owner under consideration of the special situations in the enterprise. Replacement of the free days by extra payment is forbidden. For May 1, being Labor Day and a legal holiday, payment must be made in full, although work starts no earlier than 6 p. m. Theatres playing less than seven days a week are not bound to give extra and fully paid free days to their employees.

Vacations Specified

Every employee after six months' service in the enterprise is entitled to a vacation during which the wage is continued. In cinemas and theatres of less than 250 seats the vacation in the first and second year of work amounts to six days a year; in the third year, nine days; fourth year, 12 days; fifth year, 15 days annually. In each successive year one day more of vacation is provided up to 18 days per year. In cinema and theatres of more than 250 seats to the vacations are to be four days per year in the first and the second year of service, six days in the third and fourth year, eight days in the fifth year, and in every succeeding year one day more up to 12 days per year. A payment instead of the vacation is forbidden. The vacation must be between May 2 and September 30 of each year. The wage is due before the starting of the vacation.

Every theatrical employee is entitled to 14 days' notice, which must be given at the end of the week and therefore is effective from the second week following. In case of illness the payment is continued throughout the following three days, after which the respective authorities take charge of the employee.

Lower Wages in Smaller Houses

The closing down of theatres throughout the summer months does not necessarily result in a cancellation of the contracts entered. Transportation of prints from one theatre to the next one is not considered as part of the normal working hours. It is paid individually and separately.

The following minimum wages, in reichmarks, are part of the new tariff and binding:

	First Runs	Over 900 Seats	Under 900 Seats
First operator	65	60	50
Second operator	50	45	40
Cashier	32	32	30
Stoker	35	35	30
Usherettes	21	21	21
Porter	25	25	22
Lift operator	25	25	22

The wages for minor halls are correspondingly lower.

Nashville Paper Honors Tony Sudekum on Anniversary

Honoring Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, southern theatre circuit, the Nashville Tennesseean, local newspaper, recently published an editorial coincident with the celebration by Mr. Sudekum of his twenty-eighth anniversary in motion picture exhibition. He opened the Dixie theatre in Nashville in April, 1907, which has grown into his present circuit, with houses in Tennessee, Kentucky and Alabama.

The editorial stressed the fact that Mr. Sudekum, growing with the motion picture industry, the future of which he had the foresight to appreciate in 1907, has in those years been a generous and public spirited citizen, sending his film equipment for the benefit of shut-ins, and contributing regularly to worthwhile causes.

Radio Invention to End Static Called Aid to Television

A new system of ultra-short wave radio communication which its inventor believes will help to solve the problem of network television, was announced last week by Major Edwin H. Armstrong, veteran radio expert. The system invented by Major Armstrong is claimed to be not subject to static and other extraneous noises.

The invention is based on principles directly opposed to accepted scientific theories relative to the action of electrical disturbances in radio circuits. It is considered potentially opening the way to a new era in point-to-point communication using waves under 10 meters in length.

His result, explained Major Armstrong, was reached after long research in the laboratories of Columbia University and the National Broadcasting Company atop the Empire State Building. From that station he conducted finally successful experiments in the elimination of static.

"In this new system, instead of changing the amplitude or strength of the incoming signal as is now the practice, the wave length or frequency is altered in accordance with variations in the voice or music," said Major Armstrong. "When the speaker talks loud or shouts, the wave widens. If he whispers, the wave narrows. This enables a differentiation between what goes through the microphone and the natural disturbances such as static.

"Radio receivers now in use are in engineering parlance 'amplitude modulated sets.' The new system features frequency modulation. It involves a method which translates at the receiver the variations in the frequency into variations of amplitude or intensity, so that the signal may be detected.

"The incoming impulses consist of variations in frequency of the transmitted wave. Mixed with it are various disturbances such as static, tube noises and man-made static as generated by electrical devices.

"In the new system, all these currents are passed through a current-limiting unit designed to remove the amplitude variations. The signal is then led through a selective circuit which translates the variations of frequency into variations in amplitude from which sound is derived. That is where nature, which produces static, is foiled. It cannot produce this new type of signal."

Witnesses Heard In Monopoly Suit

Witnesses for the plaintiffs in the trial of the anti-trust action of General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio, which is no longer active, against Electric Research Products, Western Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph were scheduled to conclude their testimony Wednesday before Judge John P. Nields in the United States district court at Wilmington. The plaintiffs charge Erpi, Western and A. T. & T., with having built up a monopoly in the sound industry through a series of contracts with exhibitors and producers.

Trial opened April 22 and adjourned last Friday, until Tuesday, when Joseph Stark, of International Varieties Theatrical Exchange, and David R. Hochreich, vice-president and general manager of Byers Studios and former president of Vocafilm, testified for the plaintiffs. Both were formerly connected with General Talking Pictures. Mr. Hochreich said Vocafilm went out of business in 1929 after investing $700,000 fighting the "monopoly" and that after making 100 pictures it was unable to distribute them due to practices of the defendants. He said that Burt Adams of Paramount told him of a contract between Paramount and Erpi whereby Paramount was to sell only to exhibitors having Erpi equipment.

Four more witnesses testified against the defendants. They were Joseph Silver, former Duovac salesman; Walter K. Pettus, former Erpi sound engineer; Nathan Goldman, vice-president of Duovac since 1933, and Leon Britton, independent producer.

Through the courtesy of the defendants, motion pictures were shown before Judge Nields during the latter part of the week. "Cardinal Richelieu" and "Naughty Marietta" were presented along with a number of shorts. The equipment is no ordinary portable sound projection apparatus. It is in a specially constructed fireproof steel projection vault set up in the court room and is valued at $20,000. Racks of Western Electric tubes are set in another part of the room. The equipment will be used later in the trial as exhibits by Western Electric.

Warner Suit Delayed

The $1,000,000 suit of Warner Bros. against National Screen Service will not come up for hearing in New York supreme court before October at the earliest, it was indicated this week.

The chart, based on Motion Picture Herald's weekly tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the changes in business in each of three Western cities during the twelve weeks period from February 2 to April 20, 1935. The gross for each city in the first week of this period is taken as 100 per cent for that city.

Senate Committee Votes for NRA Extension to April, 1936

The Senate finance committee in Washington on Wednesday approved, by a vote of 16 to 3, extension of the National Recovery Act until April 1, 1936, in its present form, but with two modifications. The second modification is that no code shall affect an industry engaged wholly in intrastate commerce.

President Roosevelt, at a conference with Congressional leaders on Tuesday said that he would sign a bill extending the NRA until March 1, 1936, with three modifications: elimination of price fixing, limitation of codes to intrastate commerce and functioning of federal regulation over code authorities now dominated by private groups.

The Scoundrel

(Paramount—Hecht & MacArthur)

Romantic Drama

"The Scoundrel" brings to the motion picture screen the pungent personality of Mr. Noel Coward, actor, to sell to a box office audience that has previously heard of him only as an author, and actor of the stage, chiefly as the author of the great "Cavalcade."

And Mr. Coward has come to the screen under the aegis and auspices of that famed knockabout team of bitterly able dramatists, Mr. Ben Hecht and Mr. Charles MacArthur, in the third and last of their trio of Astoria production ventures and adventures. Their vehicle for Mr. Coward puts him in the role of an ironical, cynical playboy publisher, against a background one would judge to be bounded on the north by the Algonquin, on the south by Greenwich Village, on the east by Park avenue, and on the west by Eternity.

The world of "The Scoundrel," what little of it is shown, will be quite as new and unknown to the motion picture audience as the world of "Front Page" was to the theatre public a few years ago. A few, perhaps a few hundreds, will remember a New York publisher who was very like the Anthony Mallare of Mr. Coward's role.

But after all "The Scoundrel" is not a play about publishing, but once again a "he and she" story of serial amours and faith and unfaith in a life made mostly of words and wit, as thin as the printed page, but given a third dimension of relief now and then by gunfire. Several more members of the cast might have been shot with profit.

The plot condenses, thus: He, the brittle, sophisticated publisher, betrays the She, young, tender poetess, and then surviving a shot in the cigaret case at the hands of her fiance, lives to presently fly away perfidiously Bermuda bound in pursuit of another light of love, only to crash in the sea, drowned. And then. Yes sir—and then! Mr. Mallare comes back, by command of the Angel of Death, it seems, with a month in which to attain some measure of peace through the ever-after by winning the tears of the Girl who really loved him. This is achieved, through much suspense, and Mr. Mallare goes back to death, hell-bound but purged a bit.

The reaction of the spectator will be conditioned by what he brings with him. He may get thrills, shivers and heart-throbs, interspersed with laughs. He may also, especially if he chances to know personnel and locale, feel that Mr. Hecht and Mr. MacArthur have taken him for a swift ride from Michael Arlen to Harold Bell Wright, and way stations, also interspersed with laughs, however the same laughs.

The manner of the telling on the screen is effectively direct until the story and Mallare go off the deep end into the Atlantic to come up spectrally, but bearing real, wet sea-weed all the way back to his office to prove it. The lusty drama of Hecht-MacArthur is on surer ground this side of the Great Beyond.

"The Scoundrel" will thus be found to be two kinds of merchandise; a most satisfactory seeing of the famed Mr. Coward and a lightsome dip into the life that Mallare epitomizes, with technical interest in treatments, and on the other side, to the emotionalists of the masses, spice, sympathy, hate and eerie adventure.

In the great open spaces that lie between the Hudson river and Hollywood Boulevard the exhibition job will be a selling job pertaining to entirely new, and to the public unknown, merchandise. Glancing through the cast, the reader will discover the name of Mr. Alexander Woollcott, in the role of Vandeveer Veyden. This is to be sure none other than the same Mr. Woollcott of fame as dramatic critic, essayist, author of "While Rome Burns," and radio speaker of wide popularity. It seems, however, that by reason of the producers' agreement with Mr. Woollcott, his name is not to be played with in publicity, billing and advertising. Meanwhile Mr. Woollcott, in playing a role that is considerably himself, has no apparent reason for concealment. It will be a note of interest, too, that one of the better bums in a flop-house scene is played by Mr. Charles MacArthur, with great verisimilitude.—T. R.

Call of the Wild

(U. A.-20th Century)

Melodrama

Showmanship here should take advantage of all the values which this production offers in personnel and story values. As liberal license is taken in modernizing the probably most famous of all Jack London's novels, this version emerges as an action, suspense-packed melodrama of frozen Alaska. Man's greed for gold is the motivating factor about which is centered all the romance, comedy, adventure, villainy and tragedy.

Acted in a stirring vein, against beautiful natural backgrounds, the story fully preserves the thrilling exciting atmosphere of the gold rush days. Claim-jumping Jack Thornton and his comedy relief pal, setting out to grab what they can, come upon beautiful Claire Blake, half frozen in a shack. She believes that her husband, Blake, has been lost in the wilderness. Attracted to the robust Thornton, but nevertheless in conflict with him, Claire is forced to accompany the pair to the gold claim that she and her husband intended should be theirs.

While they trudge onward, Smith (the story's heavy, realistically portrayed by Reginald Owen) finds Blake and together they start toward the mine. Shamming friendship until he learns the location, Smith attempts to murder Blake. They reach the claim. While Shorty is gone to register it, Smith robs Thornton and Claire of all that would assure their safety, but is drowned in the rapids as he tries to make a getaway. In the meantime sequences featuring Thornton and Buck, the dog, adding to the entertainment and showmanship value, interlude the episodes that bring the man and woman to a closer understanding. What is expected, however, is not to be, as Thornton, finding the sorely wounded Blake, brings him back to camp, and the manner in which Claire nurses him back to health leaves audiences to imagine whether the lovers ever will get together again.

Made up of elements that have proved their commercial worth, the picture combines qualities proved appealing to both men and women. There is vivid interest in the conflicting love angle, as there is also an interest in the comedy. The action that accents its drama is full of tense suspense. The beauty of the settings, practically all of which are outdoors, adds to the entertainment and exploitation possibilities. Cast names, particularly Clark Gable, Loretta Young, Jack Oakie and Reginald Owen, being ample to take care of those whose chief thought is "who's in it," there is also so much of additional showmanship value that can be readily adapted that picking out the most potent appealing angles appears to be the hardest job one will have to do.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Informer

(RKO Radio)

Drama

"The Informer" is human drama told against the background of Ireland's 1922 uprising. Much rarely attempted in screen entertainment is done in it. Essentially it is a gripping character study not only of one man but of many persons. As it tells its story, it makes the hero a villain—a despicable character to whom no sympathy accrues, but the constant focal point of tense interest. In the early part, as the theme is established, dialogue is held to a minimum. Audience imagination is permitted to function as, aided by skillful camera work, facial

'Frankenstein' in 1st Day Equals Previous Full Week in L. A.;

Los Angeles, April 23.

Though trade is better this year over the Easter Sunday week than last year, majority of the houses with top attractions are not clicking as anticipated. They had to overcome a stagnant Good Friday intake, with Saturday in most of the spots being way off and, in quite a few, Sunday little better.

Outstanding on the take was Pantages with 'Bride of Frankenstein.' Pic opened there Saturday with an 11-show grind that included two of the midnite affairs and hit over $2,700 on the day, which is on a par with the usual weekly take the house has had. Then Sunday ran along the same gait, with seven shows and a straight 40-cent admission, which equaled the previous day take, giving house one of biggest weeks it has had in its career.

Pantages (Pan) (2,700; 25-40)—'Bride of Frankenstein' (U). Best take house has had and with limited advance campaign did $5,500 on first two days, Sat and Sunday, and looks as though its first week will be a cinch, $13,000.

expressions, slowly tempoed action and unique musical accompaniment are the interpreting mediums.

The idea of the story is simple and powerful, qualities which intelligent direction and application of novel production effects, together with sincere and inspired acting, greatly accentuate. In the history of Irish rebellion the informer is the most hated character. Gypo Nolan, a modern Judas, informs on his pal, McPhillip, on whose head the Black and Tans have placed a price of 20 pounds. He wants the money to take himself and his street walking lover, Katie to America. McPhillip is slain, at the cost of many lives. Gypo, despised by the Tans, feared and distrusted by his erstwhile Republic army comrades, spends his money in riotous drunken revelry. In the McPhillip home, the stark tragedy of a bereaved family and the danger to the cause is impressively picturized through an authentic portrayal of an Irish "wake."

Katie forgotten, dim realization of his treachery creeps into Gypo's dumb brain, to be drowned in more drink, eliminated completely in the joy of brutal fistic combat and wild spending, tempered by bits of kindly charity. Denying to Mrs. and Mary McPhillip that he betrayed Frankie, when called before Commandant Gallagher, he accuses an innocent man, Mulligan. Ordered to attend a midnight secret investigation, he is followed by Mulholland and O'Connor, who take him from a brothel sequence, which is highlighted by Terry's comedy, to headquarters. Mulligan clears himself. Gypo confesses. A desperate man, he fears to die, and escapes as the Republicans draw lots to determine who shall shoot him. Wild scenes—packed with thrilling, dangerous action, contrasted by pleas of the mother, Mary, and Katie, that there be no more killing—ensue before Gypo is trapped to die, after being forgiven by Mrs. McPhillip before the crucified figure on a church altar where she has come to pray for her son's soul and the soul of the man who killed him.

"The Informer" does not appear to be a cruel or brutal picture. Because of the many things in it that appeal to the most tender emotions, it seems to be one which properly understood and sold in the correct manner should have wide appeal to both men and women. Its ruthless realism is contrasted by tenderness, its lack of "love interest" by an exposition of devotion and idealism that makes its treachery and tragedy more pathos-inspiring than repellent, and so it puts the job of selling right in the hands of those who play it.

Not only is there a novelty in story text to talk about, but the performance given by Victor McLaglen, the production and direction technique of John Ford and the general tone of the picture, which is radically different from anything currently being shown, are exploitation assets almost certain to create a beneficial word-of-mouth advertising effect.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Operetta

Adapted from an Hungarian operetta, this German produced picture importation is light, lively, romantic entertainment, studded with music and effective comedy. The dialogue is entirely in German, although there are plenty of superimposed translations of dialogue to make for ready understanding of the story.

The story is made up largely of romantic and comedy aspects, never becoming really serious, even in its most dramatically romantic moments. The film seems to be best adapted for showing either in communities where there is certain proportion of German-speaking patronage, or in those theatres in metropolitan centers which may count upon a number of persons interested in foreign pictures of merit.

Marta Eggerth, the star, is attractive and a capable singer.

In the story, Miss Eggerth heads the cast of a Budapest show, which is constantly attended by a middle-aged count, who married another star years before and lived on memories as he constituted himself adviser to all the girls in the chorus. Miss Eggerth is pursued by a count, Paul Kemp, who supplies most of the picture's comedy. He introduces her to Friedrich Ulmer, young soldier, also a count, and the two fall in love. The soldier's parents attempt to break up the affair by announcing the engagement of their son to a young countess. Miss Eggerth is introduced to the soldier's father as the wife of Kemp. At a festive ball staged by the parents to announce their son's engagement, Ulmer upbraids Kemp for marrying the girl he loves.

Kemp and Ulmer's fiancee find themselves in an elevator which has jammed and fall in love. They elope in disguise, and when the old count recognizes in Ulmer's mother the show's former star, who left him, he obtains the parents' consent to the marriage of Miss Eggerth and Ulmer. She already has left for the station en route to an American engagement, but Ulmer, in pursuit, catches her at the station, the train leaving without them.—Aaronson, New York.

The Florentine Dagger

(Warner)

Mystery

An intriguing and active murder mystery film has been constructed from Ben Hecht's story of the same title. It is filled with atmosphere giving rich background to the crime, in setting and situation. There may be real selling value in some situations in stressing the origin of the film.

Located in the mountains of Italy and in Vienna, the film neatly combines mystery, romance and comedy, and in entertaining fashion. It deals with the supposed homicidal phobia a young man thinks he possesses by reason of his ancestry, the notorious Borgia family, famed in early Italian history especially for its murderous proclivities, and the melodramatic complications into which he falls as a result of that phobia.

Donald Woods and Margaret Lindsay share the leading roles, importantly supported by C. Aubrey Smith, Henry O'Neill and Robert Barrat. The fact that these names, while familiar, are not outstanding, makes it more necessary that the exhibitor concentrate in his selling on the story itself, making the most of the mystery aspect and of the title, of course, in that connection. And here is attractive romance under difficulties, some comedy and a mystery which is most difficult of solution, even by the most confident amateur sleuths among the patronage.

Young Woods, Borgia descendant, affected by the phobia, seeks to commit suicide in the Italian village near the ancestral castle, but Smith, noted physician, persuades him to write a play about the Borgias as a means of "getting it out of his system." O'Neill, another visitor at the village and a Viennese producer, offers to stage the play. In Vienna, it is impossible to find the proper feminine lead, until Woods meets Miss Lindsay, ideal for the role, and with whom he falls in love. The play is a success.

O'Neill is found murdered, with a Florentine dagger in his back, the kind of dagger the Borgias commonly used for their misdeeds. It develops that Miss Lindsay is actually the daughter of O'Neill's wife by a former marriage, who had been severely burned in a London theatre fire years before. Woods believes he killed O'Neill while in a dazed condition, and tries to convince police inspector Barrat of that, when Miss Lindsay, who left the theatre suddenly that night, is arrested for the murder.

The inspector is not convinced, and Smith and Woods attempt to solve the mystery. A clue leads them to a wig and mask maker's shop after Miss Lindsay, temporarily released, has disappeared. There they find Miss Lindsay, and Smith suddenly sees the light. O'Neill's housekeeper is in reality his first wife and Miss Lindsay's mother, but, mutilated in the fire which was caused by O'Neill, she wears a mask with her features as they were before the accident. She confesses and Barrat, who was listening via dictaphone, permits the entire group to go free, back to Italy and peace for mother, daughter and her fiance, Woods.

Well paced, and with a totally unexpected conclusion, the film may be sold as effective melodramatic mystery material, acceptable at any showing during the week.—Aaronson, New York.

The Werewolf of London

(Universal)

Drama

Here is more of a dramatic shudder picture than a shocker. Its story content, acting and production values should inspire a unique type of showmanship. Primarily an adult attraction because of its weird exciting character, it not only provides a full quota of thrills and chills, but also includes a dramatic, romantic, sympathy stimulating angle and the two elements are accompanied by a comedy contrast that results in a well rounded out show.

Essentially the picture is a realistically produced exposition of legendary superstition. As such it is entirely unreal, a quality which in this type of picture accentuates its entertainment and showmanship value. In place of mystery, and accentuating the drama, is a quickly understood premising of what is going to happen and why and then a careful plotting in which suspense fulfills its function.

The story concerns Dr. Glendon, English botanist, who goes to the interior of Tibet in search of a plant, the juice of which is an antidote and preventive to "werewolvery," a horrible malady that turns its victims into inhuman beasts. Warned of the dangers, Glendon persists. As he discovers the plant, he is attacked, bitten by a werewolf and knows the fate in store for him. Back in London, his wretched mental state made more unbearable by the suspicion that his wife, Lisa, is becoming infatuated with her childhood lover, Ames, Glendon nurtures his plant under artificial moonlight.

To his botanical gardens comes Dr. Yogami, a strange Oriental, in whom Glendon recognizes something strangely familiar. As it is quickly realized that Yogami is a werewolf, one of Glendon's buds develops. Yogami steals it and as he inoculates himself, Glendon under the spell of the full moon turns into a werewolf. First terrifying his wife and other attendants of Miss Coomb's party, he kills an unknown girl. Knowing what he has done, the light of day brings him back to normal. Comedy provided by two boarding house biddies features the next night's episode, in which Glendon again kills. Other murders are reported in distant parts of London.

But one bud is left on the plant. Lisa and Ames plan a moonlight ride to her old home. Warning her not to go, Glendon goes to his laboratory to clip the bud that would save him. Yogami is there, and is killed in the fight that ensues. Turning into werewolf, Glendon is in his wife's old home when she and Ames appear. As he leaps at her, she is saved by Ames. A chase follows, Scotland Yard officers participating and the man-beast is slain. Before he dies he becomes human again, to deliver a eulogy to his wife.

There being only a vague similarity to other current horror pictures, showmanship that emphasizes its novelty seems to be right in order, as well as emphasis on the value of a gripping story, convincingly acted and directed and not ignoring the strange make-up that Henry Hull assumes.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The People's Enemy

(RKO Radio)

Drama

The greatest selling asset in this picture, produced by Select for RKO Radio distribution, is its timeliness. Striking four-square with the events of the day, it offers an excellent opportunity for the exhibitor to tie his selling into the headlines, as it deals with the conviction by the federal government of a racketeering chief for evasion of the federal income tax.

It is, at the same time, a preachment of the theme that crime does not pay, and that there is no such thing as bribery, fixing and dodging where the federal government is concerned. The activities of the Department of Justice and its agents enter into the story but casually, so that it cannot be too completely sold from the angle of a Justice Department story. There is sufficient lively action to warrant a billing at the end of the week, and the title itself gives promise for the patronage of that action.

Heading the cast are Preston Foster and Melvyn Douglas, with Lila Lee in a comparatively minor role, William Collier, Jr., and Roscoe Ates, the latter for comedy, in support. Since the cast names lack strong drawing power, the selling should concentrate on the story, its timeliness and its action. The romance is subordinated.

Foster is a big time racketeer, defended successfully in the state courts many times previously by Douglas. But this time, before a federal judge, he is sentenced to nine years in the penitentiary for income tax evasion. Before he leaves for prison he asks Douglas to find the wife and child he deserted years before, hoping that their appearance at the right time will help his case when his turn comes for parole. Collier, Foster's younger brother, thinks of nothing but his brother's release. Foster learns that Herbert Rawlinson, to whom he had given $100,000 to "fix things," had failed him and had kept the money.

Douglas finds Miss Lee, Foster's wife, and their child, and becomes more and more interested in her, a feeling which is returned. Collier believes Douglas means to see to it that Foster stays in prison, so that he may continue to see Miss Lee. The hearing on Foster's parole is called, and Douglas, in loyalty to his client, makes an eloquent plea which would have been successful had not the righteous Rawlinson appeared to cause the parole board to refuse Foster's release. Collier thinks Douglas is at fault, an idea pushed by Rawlinson. With the aid of cell-mate Ates, Foster escapes, finds his way to Douglas' office, and is about to kill him when Rawlinson arrives to bargain with Douglas to withhold information which would convict him of fraud. Rawlinson admits his duplicity in the Foster case, and the hidden fugitive kills him. Federal agents arrive to dispose of Foster, and Miss Lee and Douglas, who has left criminal practice, leave on a honeymoon.—Aaronson, New York.

Good Comedy

The latest of the Buster Keaton comedies for Educational, this is effectively set at the United States Naval Training Station at San Diego, Cal., that setting adding much to the subject. Keaton is the "dumb" rookie sailor, taken over the jumps by the tough petty officer, and constantly getting into trouble with that gentleman. He ducks in and out of the brig, falls for the petty officer's girl and is in worse difficulty. As it happens, the officer gets the worst of most of the encounters, and Buster finally gets a medal for rescuing another officer from the water into which Buster's clumsiness had landed him. A lively and entertaining comedy, despite a comparative weakness in story.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Okay Toots!

(MGM)

Amusing

An amusing situation provides most of the comedy in this latest Charley Chase subject. Charley goes home to dinner, only to find his wife with a group of women having their fortunes told—and no dinner ready. Angry, he tells her he would like to have her easy job at home, doing nothing, and she contends she would like to change places with him. He goes to his room, falls asleep, and dreams. The dream is enacted and we find Chase with his wife's high-pitched voice, and her with Chase's deep masculine bass. The result as they go to a party, and "change places," is amusing.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Taming the Wild

Interesting

Written and narrated by A. L. Alexander, this interesting subject, which should have wide general appeal, is concerned with depicting the manner and method of training various animals. The puma, tiger, lion, dog, cat and birds are taken in turn, the film indicating with what patience and care the training is carried on. The interesting concluding sequence pictures the training which results in the fox and pigeon, and the cat and pigeon brought to the point where they will suffer each other's company without fear or attack.—Running time, 10 minutes.

What, No Men?

(Vitaphone)

Entertaining

Featuring El Brendel and Phil Regan, this number of the Broadway Brevities series, in Technicolor, is genuinely entertaining material. In a western town, Brendel finds Indians and cowgirls, all women, and no men about. The color and situation provide opportunity for attractive girl dance numbers, and the rendition of a song of the girl who was wronged, burlesqued in the costume of the "mellerdrammers" of years ago. It is an amusing and entertainingly colorful subject.—Running time, 21 minutes.

Five Puplets

Amusing Cartoon

An amusing novelty cartoon in the Terry-Toons series, this is a burlesque on the Dionne quintuplets of Canada, and their Dr. Dafoe. The stork flies over animal town, the doctor races to keep up with him, and the townspeople pull in their chimneys. But he deposits his bundle, the folks go mad over the event, and ingenious contrivances care for the quintuplet puppies mechanically. A clever and entertaining subject.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Beginner's Luck

(MGM)

Amusing Comedy

The Our Gang kids, with their newly developed, and excellent star, Spanky, provide considerable amusement, for children and adults, in this comedy. Spanky's mother decides to enter him in an amateur show, reciting from "Julius Caesar," and dressed appropriately. He arranges with the gang that they shall see to it that he does not win first prize, to prevent further "acting." But at the last minute he determines to win so that a little performer with stage fright shall get her new dress with prize money. But he cannot make the gang understand, and as he tries to recite, they hoot and hiss and bombard him with pea-shooters, while he goes on and defends himself with his shield. In a riot of comedy, he wins first prize.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Desert Harmonies

(Universal)

Fair

The chief weakness in this Mentone subject is its artificiality, its assets tuneful music and a vaudeville turn or two. A motion picture company is supposed to be shooting in Algiers, and Robert Halliday, its star, is in love with Evelyn Herbert. To impress her, he arranges that she be kidnapped by a real sheik, but when the sheik decides to make a real job of the kidnapping, Halliday goes to the rescue. In the hotel the guests are entertained by an adagio team, a blackface combination and four Negro singers. Only a fair subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

FOUR MORE COMPANIES SET CONVENTION DATES

15 Distributors Add to Product Releasing Plans; Several New Concerns Make Ready

Four more companies this week set dates and places for sales conventions officially launching the new season: Paramount, June 13 to 16, New York; G-B Pictures, New York, week of May 20, and Chicago, beginning May 27; Fox Film, May 30 to June 1, Chicago; Columbia, Atlantic City, in June.

Previously, Universal had decided upon Chicago and June 1-3 for its meeting, and Warner had tentatively set June 6 at Los Angeles, while June and Chicago were RKO's tentative decisions.

Added to actual product plans already made are those emanating this week from 15 distributors, as follows:

Burroughs-Tarzan

Following a trend in making a feature and serial both out of the film photographed by independent expeditions, for release on the state rights market, Ben S. Cohen, vice president of Burroughs-Tarzan Enterprises, has decided, in Hollywood, so to construct the thousands of feet of material taken by the Ashton Dearholt expedition to Guatemala.

Atlantic City was under consideration by Columbia home office executives as the site for its 1935-36 convention, where, in June, salesmen will hear details of 40 features and 12 westerns.

Fox Film

The Congress hotel will be headquarters for the Fox convention in Chicago, set for May 30 to June 1, in charge of William Sussman, assistant to John D. Clark, general sales manager. There will be 50 features and four George O'Brien westerns on the new program, and the same number of short subjects as this year—58 one-reelers and 52 in two, besides the newsreel. Much of the new lineup was set during the three weeks of studio conferences in which Sidney R. Kent, president, participated with W. R. Sheehan and Sol Wurtzel.

GB Pictures

First convention for GB, previously set for Chicago, will be held in New York and a second meeting for the West will be called on May 27, lasting to May 29, at Chicago's Congress hotel. The New York session will be held a few days ahead.

Gulf Coast Studios

George Orth, in New York this week, was said to have decided on four features and 36 short subjects as the schedule to be produced by the new Gulf Coast Studios under construction at New Orleans.

A series of features for 1935-36 is said to be having the consideration of Victor and Edward Halperin, independent producers of Hollywood.

Mascot

Nat Levine's Mascot Pictures will make 14 features, four of them "specials," and several serials for the new season. He originally intended to make ten features.

Dates for the 1935 annual sales meeting of Paramount Pictures Distributing Corporation were definitely set for June 13 to June 16. It will be held at the Waldorf Astoria hotel in New York. Meanwhile, foreign representatives will gather May 9th at Paris for a sales meeting, at which John W. Hicks, general foreign manager from New York, and Fred W. Lange, chief foreign representative, will preside.

Paramount previously had decided to hold its convention from May 23rd to May 26th, but postponed it until June because the theatre divisions will be out of receivership by June 15th and it is desired to have all theatre partners on hand.

The product program will consist of 65 features, 100 one-reelers and the newsreel. The present flexible sales policy will be continued, and by convention time it is expected that every important sales contract will have been consummated.

The "Popeye, the Sailor" cartoon series will be backed next season by "Popeye Carnival Clubs," to be placed in operation in every key city starting June 1.

Paramount will revive "The Virginian."

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

TOP PICTURES ARE GUARDED WITH SECRECY
PRODUCTION EBB HAS HOLLYWOOD GUESSING
INDEPENDENTS HIT PREVIEW ADVERTISING
ONLY THREE FILMS START; SEVEN COMPLETED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

ANNUAL announcements notwithstanding, every Hollywood studio shrouds some of its picture plans in secrecy. Most of the concealments surround films that break precedent, that may launch a trend, a picture having new and original idea value. Anything gleaned from teacup chatter or around the town pump might cause confusion with these plans.

On each lot, usually one or two pictures a year are guarded with instructions from the front office that there is not to be a peep until either the script is completed or the cameras start turning.

MGM adopted this approach long before the industry became aware that "David Copperfield" was to be filmed. Howard Estabrook, scenarist, responded to those who asked that he "was working on an air story." Before embarking for Europe with all research and pre-production plans established, and with only the selection of young "David" to be made in London, "David Copperfield" was announced to the trade.

Nobody in Hollywood knew much about "Sequoia," or "Malibu" as it first was called, until the preview, which was held a year and a half after the production went into work. John W. Considine, Jr., the producer, in protecting the idea also contended he added to its dramatic premiere by keeping it quiet.

Fox kept airtight all its plans about "Just Imagine." No publicity, no photographs, no information was broadcast until "Just Imagine" had its opening.

The same procedure was followed with "Grandeur Film" when it made its Hollywood bow in "Happy Days."

At Radio, a production revolving around a national personality, is being kept under cover, with no announcement but with preproduction plans proceeding apace.

"The Informer" was shrouded in mystery all during production with only wisps of information wafted about.

Warner, which stole a march on Hollywood with "G"-Men," had Seton I. Miller on the lot writing it, and even his agent wasn't permitted to know Miller's assignment, while he himself reported he was "working on an air story."

The subject matter of "Black Fury" was kept in the dark with little available about its theme.

Columbia never tipped that Clark Gable was to play comedy in "It Happened One Night" and the theme of Grace Moore's present film is most secret.

Darryl Zanuck, who has been known to purchase ideas from one sheet of typewriting, usually has a few writers tucked away working on only ideas.

Production activity, currently at a low ebb, has Hollywood guessing as to the cause. The lull was first attributed to unrest over the tax situation, but that cleared up. Executives, artists, agents, all have theories—the letdown is seasonal, studios are ahead of their commitments, they are waiting for the spring sales conventions. But no one will be pinned down to a definite answer as to why there were only 29 features in work last week, whereas there were 39 in the same week last year. Today, with the exception of Columbia, all major studios have stages gaping and empty.

Mr. Baille is looking into the Technicolor situation with a view to buying up India rights. Incidentally, Mr. Baille is a relative by marriage to Whitney. . . Myrna Loy, feeling that she would be miscast in MGM's "Masquerade," asked to be relieved of her role, to which the studio acquiesced. . . . RCA dropped its long standing suit against Hollywood Motion Picture Equipment Company charging patent infringements. . . . Ben Koenig, personal representative of Nat Levine and Jack Fier, left for New York with authorization to spend plenty of money on story and talent for Mascot's new season program. . . . Exhibitors were incensed at the Fox Wilshire Theatre for advertising a Mae West preview in the local newspapers. The Independent Theatre Owners drafted a registered letter to the Paramount Exchange demanding the preview be considered a first-run, making the picture available to independents henceforth. . . . The Screen Writers' Guild met to discuss new policies and for organizing a board of which Ernest Pascal is the head. . . . Chester Rowell, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, in a talk to the Los Angeles Town Hall at the Ambassador hotel, said the film industry had nothing to fear on the tax situation. . . . The Hollywood extra's limited registration list is dead. The Extra Standing Committee has recalled the list for checkup of possible errors, a matter of form to avoid public announcement. . . . Major studios are now working on a plan whereby twenty films on the new season's program will be produced in the East. . . . Fox West Coast has changed the operating set-up in Washington and Oregon. The Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, a subsidiary of the theatre chain, will no longer work out of the home office—being divided into districts. Frank Newman, president, supervises first-runs. Al Rosenberg leads the Portland territory and Al Finkelstein handles Washington. . . . Bob Sisk planed to New York with a print of Radio's "The Informer."

Something in the nature of a calm struck Hollywood production activity during the past week, and only three new pictures started, and but seven features were completed. Of the new three, two are major studio products, the other an independent. Two independent pictures were completed.

At Metropolitan Studio, Wanger Productions started "Shanghai" for Paramount release. The cast to date includes Loretta Young, Charles Boyer, Fred Keating and Charley Grapewin, with James Flood directing.

Warner started work on "Not on Your Life," a comedy-tinged romantic drama which features Warren William, Claire Dodd, Guy Kibbee, William Gargan, Mary Treen and Leon Errol. Robert Florey is directing.

"The Girl Who Came Back," sixth feature on the Chesterfield program, was put into work. A drama, it stars Sidney Blackmer and Shirley Grey. Support includes Noel Madison, Ida Darling, Torben Meyer, Mathew Betz, John Dilson, Maude Truax, Ed Martindel, Robert Adair, Frank LaRue and Don Brodie. Charles Lamond is directing.

Fox Completes Two

Two of the completed features are credited to Fox. Both appear to be in the big picture class. "Red Heads on Parade," erroneously reported as completed several weeks ago, is a Jesse Lasky production. A musical romance drama, produced on a large scale, its cast includes John Boles, Dixie Lee, Jack Haley, Raymond Walburn, Alan Dinehart, Herman Bing, Patsy O'Connor, William Austin, Duke York, Wilbur Mack, Francis MacDonald, William Davidson and Larry Ceballos. Norman McLeod directed. The other Fox picture is "Black Sheep," a drama which teams Edmund Lowe and Claire Trevor in the leading roles, directed by Allan Dwan, who also did the original story.

MGM completed "Public Hero No. 1," the title of which gives a definite hint of its character. It's a Government man picture, directed by J. Walter Ruben. With Chester Morris in the lead, the cast features a much talked about new comer, Joseph Calleia.

Paramount's contribution to the completed list is "College Scandal," dramatic murder mystery story told against the background of a college campus. Elliott Nugent directed. The cast includes Arline Judge, Kent Taylor, Benny Baker, Wendy Barrie, William Frawley, William Benedict, Douglas Blackley, Edward Nugent, Joyce Compton, William Stack, Mary Nash, Samuel Hinds and Edith Arnold.

"Broadway Gondolier," a comedy with music, was completed except for a few scenes in which Adolphe Menjou appears. Directed by Lloyd Bacon, the cast features Dick Powell, Menjou, Joan Blondell, Louise Fazenda.

At Mascot, "Headline Woman" was completed. Roger Pryor and Heather Angel are starred. William Night directed.

"Champagne for Breakfast," an M. H. Hoffman drama, also was completed by Melville Brown, director. The cast includes Hardie Albright, Joan Marsh and Mary Carlisle.

JUST A MATTER OF CONSONANTS

When Dolores Del Rio decided that she did not like the part of the daughter of a Southern Colonel in "Not on Your Life," Jack Warner permitted her to withdraw like the gallant Kentucky Colonel he is, but the supervisor whipped himself up into a frenzy.

"We go all through the dialogue," he moaned. "Because Del Rio can't say consonants, we take out all the consonants and replace them with vowels! Now look! We've got to put back all our consonants for Claire Dodd again."

A BIG HAND

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 264.—(A) What do you regard as the minimum amount of spare parts, in good condition, that should be carried in a theatre to enable the rapid correction of the more common sound equipment troubles? (B) Indicate why all defective parts should be immediately segregated from the good parts carried in stock. (C) What are the most common causes of flutter in sound reproduction for which projectionists should be constantly on the lookout?

Answer to Question No. 258

Remember, men, that until further notice all questions are being asked by the engineering departments of two of our largest sound equipment organizations, so think them over and be careful. As encouragement I have been most agreeably surprised by the number and excellence of the answers received to question 261, the first of this series.

Bluebook School Question No. 258 was this: (A) By what simple, easily applied experiment may the projectionist prove that the best view of picture detail cannot be had at long viewing distance? (B) Does it not then follow that if good view of picture detail cannot be had at long viewing distance it will be impossible to maintain sharpness of focus without the aid of a good opera glass or its equivalent. (C) Will an opera glass compensate fully where projection distance is such that the unaided eye cannot judge of focal sharpness? (D) Is it not plain common sense to presume that if projection distance be such that sharpness of focus cannot be accurately judged with the unaided eye, and no glass is supplied, the picture will not be kept in the sharpest possible focus?

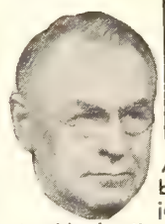
The following made acceptable answers: S. Evans and C. Rau; G. E. Doe; D. Danielson; C. Oldham; L. Cimikoski; G. Edwards; J. Wentworth; T. Van Vaulkenburg; J. R. Sanborne and D. L. Hubbard; L. Hutch and D. Goldberg; C. Umphrey; M. and J. Devoy; G. N. Guidotti and F. L. Savlor; P. H. Kay; C. Mellinger and H. Pitchkey; T. Turk; S. Johnson and E. Hodson; G. Thompson; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; E. Mantol and H. Hughes; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; D. L. Sinklow; R. and K. Wells; B. L. Murphy; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; F. T. Dodd and L. Panley; L. M. Goss and T. Danielson; Bill Doe; B. L. Jackson and N. K. Hendries; T. T. Davidson and R. G. Crews; F. H. and L. Klar; P. L. Nathan; G. C. Sanderson, B. L. Diers and T. Purley; N. L. Loyd; B. H. Thaller and S. Spooner; G. Wayne and D. Stellegos; D. L. Scenneld; T. N. Onby; L. Thomas and L. Boyd; R. Davis and G. B. Lantree; L. Grant and R. Geddings; P. and L. Felt; T. L. Irwin and N. McCoy; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; F. Harlow and G. Harrison; N. Goldberg; H. T. Daniels; B. N. Sommers; D. Breaston and H. Haber; T. L. Samuels.

I have selected the answer of P. and L. Felt as perhaps most informative. They say: "This is a matter that may be demonstrated by standing near any object in which there is considerable detail and moving away from it. The object suggested by Mr. Richardson, namely, a tree, is perhaps as good as any. As we stand close to it, all details of its foliage are distinct. Every leaf may be observed. Unless one has unusually good vision, even at a distance of 50 feet some of this detail disappears. At 100 feet the leaves may still appear as separate items upon close observations, but their details (veins, etc.) will no longer be visible to the eye. At 150 feet the leaves as a whole will blur together. We cannot see each individual leaf except possibly as a more or less indistinct bit of green. At greater or less distance, depending upon individual keenness of vision, all detail disappears and the tree foliage appears merely as a somewhat broken mass of green.



"This, of course, is equally true in observing a motion picture, especially because of the fact that it is viewed under difficulties—through glass and through an opening of restricted dimensions in a wall that usually is more or less lighted. Under these conditions it is doubtful if even a very good pair of unaided eyes can see much of the finer detail, which must be depended upon for sharpness of focus at even one hundred feet."

(B) V. Van Vaulkenburg says: "Yes, it naturally follows that where the projection distance is long, some means must be provided to enable the projectionist to have an occasional 'close up' of the screen. The only available means is a really good 'glass,' so mounted that it may be held perfectly steady and focused permanently upon the screen. I do not believe a hand-held glass is best. I do believe such a glass should be provided, mounted in a special small port in convenient location, and that it should be used at least once an hour during projection. It must, of course, be so located that the projectionist may manipulate the lens focusing screw while looking at the screen."

(C) D. L. Sinklow answers thus: "No, an opera glass will not be the same as being close to the screen, but it will nevertheless help a lot. About six months ago I finally persuaded our manager to get one. To do this I secured the loan of a really good glass and had our manager sharpen the focus as well as he could. Then I had him look through the glass (projection distance 123 feet) and try moving the lens focus screw. He bought the glass, which I then mounted in the left hand observation port by cutting a hole in the glass near the top and making a clamp that held securely the lens and the glass. I used thin, rather hard packing rubber between the clamp metal on each side of the glass. It works just fine and gets used a lot."

(D) Every one of the hundreds answering said yes to this one. L. Cimikoski went considerably further, as follows: "If the management does not supply such necessary equipment as a glass, then he does supply the projectionist or projectionists with an abundance of alibis as to why his picture is not so pleasing as are those of his competitor who does. Moreover, it always is very possible that a projectionist may himself have imperfect eyesight. He may be troubled with an error in refraction. This may be hyperopia (far-sightedness); myopia (near-sightedness); or astigmatism (unequal refraction), or a combination of one or more of them.

"While this may or may not be considered germane to the question, I do believe it 'belongs' in such a discussion. I hold that it is perfectly right and proper that managements demand that the projectionist have his eyes examined and any eyesight defect, such as I have named, corrected—as may easily be done by any competent oculist."

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

Did you ever meet Joe Hewitt, owner of the Lincoln theatre in Robinson, Ill., didja? Well, if you didn't, then that's just too bad.

We got a letter from Joe the other day and enclosed we found a check and instructions to send him the Herald for a couple of years. And the check was too big. Can you imagine that? Well, we would feel like a scurvy pup if we charged him too much, so we wrote him to throw that check in the furnace and send us a new one.

When Joe read our letter and found that we objected to accepting too much money, he fainted and they had to call in a horse-doctor and ring the fire bell. Joe wrote us and sent us a still larger check, but instructed us to send the Herald to R. M. Dalrymple of Oblong, Ill., also. Joe wrote us and said, "Well, for the love of Mike, I have found an honest man in the business." Joe seemed to have forgotten that there are some others besides us, the most of whom are in the exhibition end of the business such as Andy Anderson of Detroit Lakes, Minn.; Bonnie Benfield of Morris, Minn.; A. J. Longaker of Glenwood, Minn., (when he isn't telling about the fish he caught); Bert Silver of Greenville, Mich.; Walt Adams of Mason, Mich.; P. G. Este of Parker, S. D.; Bob Smith of Mission, Shine Mason of McAllen, King of Harlingen, Brady of San Boneta, all in the Rio Grande valley of Texas, and F. W. Zimmerman of San Marcos, Texas (but then we'll leave him out, without some additional proof), and there are a few out in Hollywood.

Fishing Lessons? Huh!

Joe says if we will come to Robinson to visit him again he will take us down to the Wabash river and show us how to catch fish and will give us another lesson in golf. Joe, you will please excuse us for laughing when you say you will "show us how to catch fish and play golf."

As far as teaching us how to catch fish in the Wabash river is concerned, we give it as our conviction that there isn't a fish in that mudhole large enough for bait for the kind of fish we catch, and it may be of interest to you to know that, in the matter of teaching us how to play golf, Sarazen gave that idea up soon after Heck weaned her pups.

If you have never met Joe Hewitt you "hain't never met nobody yet," and the Suckers all rejoice in the fact that the Lincoln theatre is located in Illinois, and we rejoice in the knowledge of having such a good friend as Joe Hewitt. Then, besides that, there's Fred Hinds of Whitewater, Wis.

Last night our old tomcat got to discussing politics with our neighbor's tom out on top of the garage and our wife said, "I just love to hear the crooners sing."

They have started to build that "Shelterbelt" here in Antelope county that the Government is working on to "bring rain" and to "break up the wind." This Shelterbelt is to be ten rods wide and seven miles long, running north and south to "break up a north wind," and all of you children who believe the earth is flat please stand up. Willie, go out doors and blow your nose.

Here's one for you to figure on while the boy is changing reels.

If it takes one salaried superintendent to watch three AAA workers do one-half day's work in six weeks, how long will it take a grasshopper to walk backwards from Grindstone, S. D., to Tombstone, Ariz., during a sandstorm from Kansas? And this "hain't" no reflection on Kansas, either; New York has 'em, too.

When people are broadcasting they sometimes make statements that are not strictly in line with the facts. A national chain broadcaster was recently giving the supposed biography of Josephine Roche, the lady who is now assistant secretary of the U. S. Treasury at Washington.

In his broadcast he stated that her name was Josephine "Roshay" and that she was born in Omaha, Nebraska. We are glad he gave Nebraska as her birth place, but when he singled out Omaha he picked the wrong town. The fact is that her name is Roche and it is pronounced the same as "Roach" and not "Roshay," and the fact also is that she was born in Neligh, Nebraska (our home town, where a lot of good people were born).

She was born in the upstairs part of the Neligh Bank, which bank was conducted by the firm of Roche, Anderson, Hall and Ray, and at the early age of five her parents moved to Omaha, where her father, John J. Roche, operated the Omaha Cattle Loan Company for a while and afterwards moved to Denver, Colorado, where he was superintendent of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Company. It was here that Miss Roche received her national publicity by having something to do with the Denver police force, and her exceptional ability is largely responsible for her appointment to the U. S. Treasury. Her mother's maiden name was Aspinwall and her grandmother's name was Prudence Aspinwall and her grandfather's name was J. C. Aspinwall and he was a Methodist preacher and lived one time at or near Darlington or Argyle, Wisconsin. Josephine is a bright girl but she isn't the only bright girl Neligh has produced. We know, for we have held a lot of 'em on our knee and fed 'em lollypops.

Didn't Get the Idea, Though

A Neligh boy has been appointed superintendent of that "Shelterbelt" that the Government is going to build across Nebraska and other states "to bring rain" and "to break up the wind." We are glad to know that this boy got the appointment because he is a mighty fine chap, and we are glad to know also that this idea of bringing rain and breaking up the wind did not spring from the brain of a Neligh man but rather from the "Brain Trust" back east where the springing is good. We have been connected with a lot of fool things in our time but—

Last night we went down to the Moon theatre to see Shirley Temple and Jimmy Dunn in "Bright Eyes" for the third or fourth time, and doggone the luck, we wish we could tell you about this picture, but we can't do it. When Shirley's mother (Lois Wilson) was run over and killed by an auto, and when Jimmy took little Shirley up in his plane and told her about her mother going to heaven to see her papa, you will hear a lot of sobs and there won't be a dry eye in the audience, and then when "Uncle Ned" got his dander up and laid down the law, face up, so everybody could understand him, you will want to grab him around the neck and say "Bully for you, old man." Well, anyhow, if you haven't already played it, which the most of you probably have, go and get that picture before you do another thing.

Music That Drowns Dialogue

Being from Nebraska, it is, of course, none of our business, we realize that, but when we try to hear the dialogue in a picture that is almost entirely drowned out by some jazz orchestra playing in the wings, it inclines us to use some pretty harsh language. We have seen some pretty good pictures almost ruined by some pretty dam-poor music.

There is one thing that is very commendable about a jazz orchestra. They may not all commence at once but they all quit at the same time. Sometimes the crooner has to sing all by himself.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

PLAN FOR EMPLOYMENT

If an able theatreman of years' standing is let out, for one of a number of reasons, what is to be done to find him new employment so that the industry will continue to benefit from his experience, initiative and effort?

The question is brought up by the perusal of applications from a number of seasoned but unemployed theatremen seeking work—manpower which should not be allowed to go to waste.

Replacing a less than tophole manager with another who is expected to do a better job is not the perfect answer. The problem concerns itself with finding ways and means to utilize the services of the unattached veteran but not at the expense of a brother theatreman.

A possible solution which at least merits discussion has been offered for consideration by one of these applicants—a plan aimed to turn in extra grosses and in the beginning at least enough to pay the added salaries and expenses incurred.

It is proposed that, to start, circuits put these experienced showmen on their payrolls in the proportion of one man to, say, ten houses to do nothing else but act in an advisory capacity under proper supervision to the theatres they service.

The added hand is not to hold any executive position. He is to function under the district or division chief, and, stresses the proposer of the plan, is not to take over any duties of the individual manager, but because of his long experience and general savvy is expected to pull something out of the bag when called upon.

The cost by the proposer's figures should come to no more than $1.25 per theatre per day on the basis of ten houses to one man. It is expected that this expenditure will be covered by the extra take at the box office through such added co-operation.

The success of any such plan would of course depend upon actual performance and upon the tact, discretion, good judgment and cooperation of all parties concerned. Were it emphasized that the seasoned showman was on hand only to aid the individual manager and not eventually to replace him, then the proposal might be a good one and of value.

It is presented for the consideration of executives seeking some way to raise the average grosses and the general standard of showmanship in their theatres.

The Acoustical Society of America meeting in annual convention announces that sound in the theatre can be as easily and efficiently controlled as the lighting system. Managers are praying that this control includes hushing down of loud talkers, audible gum chewers and popcorn eaters.

LEADERS OF TOMORROW

As a source of manpower, the Quigley Awards project has proven its worth according to the promotions already made from the ranks of theatremen listed among the plaque winners. That this same source may be responsible for future industry leaders is indicated by Gene Curtis, who writes:

"In glancing through some back numbers of Motion Picture Herald, I ran across the issue showing the pictures of all the 1934 Quigley Award winners, and was impressed by the fact that most of the men looked so young. This might suggest that the Quigley Awards are bringing to light the new showmen of today who will be the leaders of tomorrow."

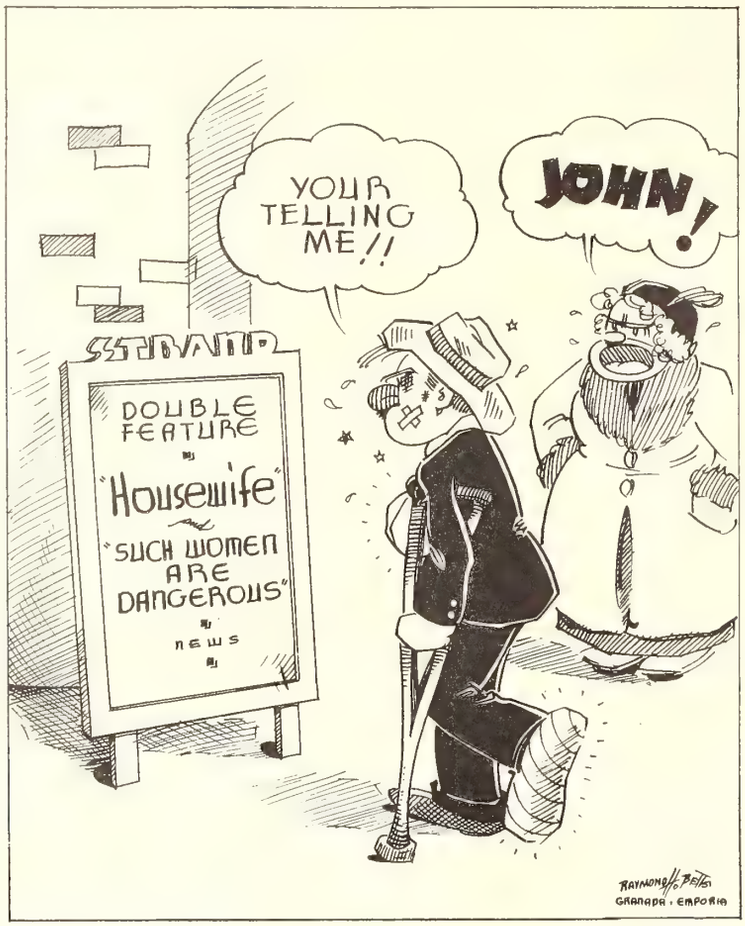
THE HELPING HAND

They're still paying dividends to showmen smart enough to offer their theatres for the advancement of worthwhile community projects. For instance, J. D. L'Esperance of the Fox Florence, Los Angeles, and Merrill F. Hanna, of the Hollywood, Detroit.

With the completion of a new newspaper building in Los Angeles, L'Esperance made available the facilities of his house for the dedication ceremonies. The daily went to town in return and of course the future is very promising for any publicity projects inaugurated by the theatre.

The burning of Detroit's largest high school some weeks ago gave Hanna an opportunity to crash the front pages by wiring the Board of Education offering the Hollywood for "any meetings of the student body that will assist in this emergency," a tender that was deeply appreciated by hundreds of students and their families.



These instances are just two of the many frequently reported by Round Tablers who have learned that the helping hand very often helps the box office.

Paramount Offers Enlargement Service

Rodney Bush, maestro of those snappy Paramount press books, reports a new Paramount service that sounds as if it will receive a ready welcome in the field. Starting with Four Hours to Kill and Stolen Harmony, the press books on these attractions offer enlargements of any Paramount still, or any portion of a still. It's done this way:

Manager squares off in pencil on the back of the still selected the exact photographic matter to be enlarged. Still is forwarded to Paramount exchange and about two-day service plus mailing time to New York and back is indicated. Prices are in keeping, starting at two dollars for a 20 by 30, sizes going up to 40 by 60.

Arthur Host to Premier At Sweet Music Preview

Welcomed to the membership is Jack Arthur, famed skipper of the Imperial, Toronto, who sent in his first instalment of his dues with a rousing campaign on the opening of Sweet Music.

Good sendoff was given the advance with a preview and reception arranged by Warner exploiteer, Laura Elston, to Canadian Premier Hepburn, Cabinet members and the press, followed by special reviews and good mentions in all society columns. Radio buildups were numerous, including a 15-minute broadcast in which Arthur was interviewed by well known commentator on the highlights of the picture.

Leading department store gave main street window to radio displays plugging Vallee, sheet music and music departments and shops also cooperating with similar displays plus other helpful publicity.

Front Sells He-Man Role

Flash front was deliberately aimed to get away from the usual Vallee character and to plant what Jack calls his new he-man personality wherein the star clowns and troupes capably in addition to his singing. Band angle and other stars were not neglected.

Advance lobby contained a lot of stills in flasher shadow boxes, and also framed in colored, gold and silver flitter. Hit songs and comedy slants were sold strongly in the same manner.

Selling Rudy away from his megaphone might also be given consideration by showmen, especially in those spots where there is objection to the crooner type of singer.

Tilts Month's Gross With Memory Contest

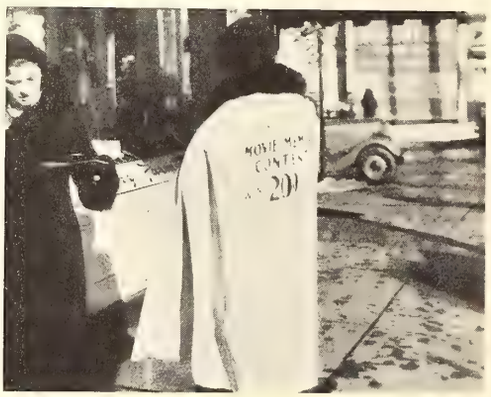
Forty-four merchants of his neighborhood association contributing $700 to help put over a Greater Show Month with a Movie Memory Contest was the score rolled up by Manager Jack Newkirk, of Loew's Granada, Cleveland.

Prizes amounting to $200 were given—100, 50, 25, and five additional of five dollars each—to those turning in correct lists of 44 stars and the titles of the last two pictures in which each star appeared. For this purpose, individual stills of stars were placed in each of the 44 stores, necessitating personal visits to store by contestants.

Merchants availed themselves of this by plugging daily or weekly specials around the display of the stills. Store windows carried streamers and theatre cards for further buildup. Shields for the contest and the "show month" were hung up on all telegraph poles in the community.

All stores distributed folded entry blanks, containing 44 spaces for name of star and pictures with merchant's name above, rules and store plugs printed on back fold. Costumed girls (see photo) also passed out the entry blanks on the streets. Double and single trucks in neighborhood papers were run, downtown dailies also publishing Newkirk's February celebration.

Theatre of course was appropriately decorated to plug the entire month, three and one sheets in the lobby carrying all details of contest and names of participating stores. During the drive frequent mention was made in regular house ads.



Added to the drive was Newkirk's exploitation on the "greater month" bookings, all in all turning in what he reports the biggest month's business in two years and much extra business done by 90 per cent of the cooperating business men.

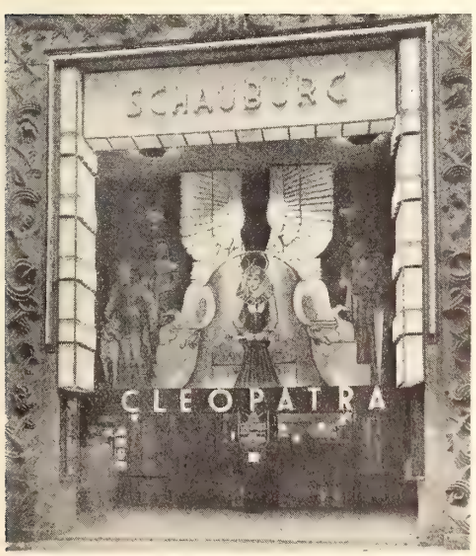
Best Baby Smiles Bring Baby Bonds

With the announcement of the government's new baby bonds, Les Pollock of Loew's, Rochester, N. Y., conceived the idea of tying in the new government security to a "kiddie smiles of '35" contest, to be sponsored by the local Journal American and the theatre through its Rochester news reel. Daily enthusiastically cooperated.

Contest ran a month with following prizes of baby bonds in denominations of $100 for first; $50, second; $50, third; fourth to ninth, $25 each. Prizes were given for the best "smile pictures"—most captivating with the most human interest appeal. Photos of children from six months to seven years of age in the territory served by the paper were eligible for the awards.

Each week of the drive paper ran two full pages of photos submitted during that period, from which the judges selected six of the entrants to be photographed for the theatre weekly newsreel. Public was invited to aid judges in these selections by voting for the babies through ballots printed each Sunday in the cooperating paper, which also ran registration blank daily, these to be filled out and pasted on back of photos.

Unusual indeed was the amount of publicity run by the Journal to plug the stunt. Though the actual contest ran for four weeks, the paper went to town ahead and in announcing the winners, with the theatre mentioned in every piece of copy, in display ads and other breaks for six weeks.



Les says the stunt was purely a good will promotional tieup and as such it certainly proved a pip of a builder-upper.

Lamm Suggests Tieups For Mother's Day

From Louie Lamm, Palace, Lorain, Ohio, a five-way campaign on "Mother's Day," which he has already set for May 12, composed mainly of the stunts he used last year and found very effective. Louie says the ideas were costless and recommends them for use in other spots. Here they are:

First, local paper cooperated on finding oldest local mothers who registered at theatre and were interviewed in advance besides being guested at theatre on Mother's Day.

Second, photographer took picture of oldest mother for display in his window and for possible advance flash in theatre lobby.

Third, florist came in on the idea by making up beautiful bouquet to be delivered oldest mother on morning of "day."

Fourth, automobile dealer furnished new model and chauffeur to transport oldest mother and family from home to photographer and to theatre.

And finally, at the theatre on Mother's Day, program was arranged for a five-minute period at which time Louie made a speech honoring all mothers of his city through the honored guest. Then followed presentation of the photo and flowers, donors being mentioned.

SOME SERVICE REMINDERS

Exhibitor-Executive Emphasizes Vital Need of Perfect Service; Lists Worthwhile Suggestions

by DICK WRIGHT

District Manager, Warner Ohio Theatres

Much has been written about "Service" and its direct reaction at the box office. Many phases of this important department in the-atre operation have been discussed time and again! Occasion-ally, however, a gen-eral airing of those little odds and ends, which we all know, but frequently forget, brings to light some definite incident that in patron relation-ship, may seem in-consequential to you at the time, but the frequent recurrence of which might undo a lot of good will you have built up! The following incident may serve as an example to illustrate this point:

DICK WRIGHT

Recently the writer was among several overnight guests of a prominent doctor in an important Ohio city. During the eve-ning the party decided to attend a showing of one of the season's important movies. Upon arriving at the theatre the doctor in-formed the doorman of his identity and the fact that he expected an important call and requested that he be called to the telephone when it came. Much to his disappointment he was informed that the theatre had no such service for physicians and that owing to the capacity crowd it would be almost impossible to grant his request.

Consequently the plans for the evening were altered. We took our refunds at the box office and left the theatre with no par-ticularly kind feeling. The next day an in-quiry of the manager disclosed the fact that his relief doorman, a newly added employee, apparently had not been informed of this particular courtesy to physicians when he received his general instructions.

Advises Frequent Checkup

The alert manager, the man who is con-stantly on his toes, makes a frequent check-up and a periodical analysis of his service staff to determine how and what methods he can use to improve his inside theatre op-eration. He holds weekly meetings and dis-cusses ways and means of serving his pa-trons. In addition to uncovering some valua-ble suggestions he builds up the co-operative morale of his staff.

At your next meeting satisfy yourself that you are doing everything possible to insure a smooth-running Service Department . . . maybe there is room for improvement! Check these little odds and ends:

1. How accurate are the program sched-ules from which your cashiers, door-men, and ushers quote the feature starting time to inquiring patrons?

2. Would a patron desirous of making a call from your pay phone find it neces-sary to go all the way to your box office for change or is the usher, stationed nearest the phone, provided with a supply of nickels?

3. Does your doorman merely fill the rou-tine post of "Ticket-taker" or does he reflect an attitude of genuine service . . . greeting patrons with a smile . . . thanking them . . . and making their entry into your theatre a pleasure?

4. If the weather is bad do your staff members report for duty a little ahead of time so that your patrons are not kept waiting outside?

5. Are aged people, cripples and blind patrons shown every courtesy and a special effort made to seat them as quickly and comfortably as possible?

6. Does the employee who is responsible for the Lost and Found Department keep a religious check on all articles turned over to him . . . informing you, your assist-ant and cashier daily of its newly added con-tents?

7. Is there a card prominently displayed in your box office giving the opening time of the theatre or do your early patrons find it necessary to inquire from other sources?

8. How efficiently did your service staff handle your last capacity crowd? Are you satisfied that every effort was made to fill "single" seats?

Take an inventory of your service staff, see whether or not you can add some new slant to make your department of distinc-tive service to your patrons!

Carlson's Ruggles Ads Take Unusual Form

Following the idea and format of the Red Gap weekly as published in the period of the picture, Gus Carlson, skipper of the People's, Superior, Wis., broke out with a smart series of two-column displays on Ruggles. THEATRES AND BETTER FILMS

'Child Problem' a Study in Wilby-Kincey Theatres; Plan Explained by District Manager Roy L. Smart

The "child problem" is not a problem but a study with the Wilby-Kincey Theatres in the Carolinas, writes Roy L. Smart, district manager, reporting details of the plan which has enlisted the cooperation of civic-minded citizens and accelerated theatre good will.

The project was broken down into six groupings, as follows: Classification, advertising pressure on better films, advertising copy, bookings, swinging public opinion, and criticism.

Thus all features were classified for audience suitability, such as compilation of estimates from the Hays organization, gathered from those made up by committees of D. A. R., Federation of Women's Clubs, etc. These were published exactly as received, and newspapers induced to run them each Sunday on the coming week's pictures. Many papers welcomed this feature with editorials.

The third phase concerned advertising copy, and here the company's policy of accurate and inoffensive advertising was emphasized. Managers eliminated from all advertising anything that might offend, such as nude girl cutouts, reclining poses and all questionable copy. In extreme cases the regular paper was not used, block paper being substituted.

Suitable Shorts Booked

In bookings, care was taken to book suitable short subjects with family pictures. The idea was also applied to trailers so that those containing sophisticated scenes and used currently with family pictures were edited.

Instant cooperation was won from parents and fair-minded citizens, as the estimates plainly described each picture. As Mr. Smart says, "it stripped from the professional reformer the old argument that a patron could never foretell the true nature of a picture and politely reminded parents that entertainment for children should be selective." Further, cooperation from the schools was encouraging.

Estimates were mailed to community leaders desiring them, and school heads and libraries placed on the mailing list. Parents were advised in case of doubt to obtain classifications from the local theatre manager, and many letters were sent to each town outlining to influential citizens the idea of publishing the estimates.

Different Trailers Used

Classification trailers were extended to the screen with trailer copy as follows: "This picture is recommended for adults; children will neither understand nor enjoy it." and "This attraction is recommended for everybody—bring the children."

Next in the campaign was to place advertising pressure on better films to increase attendance on this type of attraction. Advertising budgets on certain pictures were increased while on others the budget was held down but sales efforts increased through inexpensive methods such as screenings, endorsements and booster campaigns.

To swing public opinion, managers arranged conferences with editors in which problems were frankly and fully discussed, including the dearth of patrons at the very kind of picture for which newspapers were clamoring. Editors were impressed with the necessity of educating the public to attend this type of feature. Following these conferences, many excellent editorials appeared.

The encouragement idea was laid before teachers, ministers, club women, better film committees, etc., requesting specific plugs on particular attractions. These endorsements, carefully worded to emphasize the entertainment value, were published in newspapers, carried in trailer and lobby advertising. Special newspaper stories aimed particularly at non-patrons were published.

Asks for Opinions

After the campaign had been running for a number of months, personal letters were sent to editors, ministers, teachers and critics. To these letters were attached lists of new pictures and clippings on the improvement in product. The letters frankly asked for comment on the situation. Each person addressed was asked for an expression on the change made in the tone of motion pictures generally. Suggestions for further improvement were solicited.

"We believed," said Smart, "that this letter would appeal to fair-minded citizens. In the case of the professional critic, it served to require him to point out a better means of improvement. To the sincere critic it showed proof of real progress. From these letters, we received numerous commendatory replies and no unfavorable ones. This angle was not handled by public announcement. It seemed more practical instead to go directly to a small group."

Says Project Has Progressed

Lastly, as concerns criticism, managers were instructed to receive courteously and consider carefully any criticism or suggestion. Where managers were unable to answer criticism, they were given assistance in doing so.

This resulted in numerous conferences with individuals who had never been given an inside viewpoint on the problems of the industry. If a speaker or writer attacked the industry, a conference was arranged with him. If the attack merited an answer it was subsequently answered publicly, usually through the press.

The project has made progress, indicated Mr. Smart, who says, "It has not been completed and will not be so long as pictures change and grow."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe, Florence Rice, Bela Lugosi—As usual, Holt brings them in, and the picture is O. K., but not quite up to the standard. Personally, felt that too much time was spent underwater playing golf, etc. Played March 26-27.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Howling snow one day and driving rain the next, so only got 50% business, but how they liked it. Don't trust the stock advertising or the trailer to put it over. Neither one gives the least idea of the high spots. The race is a bigger thriller than "David Harum's" Ta Ra Ra Boom De Ay. Running time, 102 minutes. Played April 12-13.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Swell picture but advertising on it very poor. Not one race track scene in the photos, stills, sheets or heralds. Even National Screen trailer no good. How can you expect people to come, leaving the punch of the picture out of all advertising?—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—This is a perfect picture. Don't be afraid to boost it, as the sky is the limit. This fellow Frank Capra is without a doubt the greatest director in the motion picture industry. I only wish that Columbia would let him make four pictures a year instead of one. Running time, 104 minutes. Played April 2-3.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA, THE: All-star—Played this to the lowest Saturday-Sunday business ever recorded at our Temple Theatre. Poorest excuse for a feature picture I have ever seen. Pleased no one. Running time, 92 minutes. Played April 20-21.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

CARNIVAL: Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers—Nice picture but did not draw at box office. Pleased about 75 per cent. Played March 10-12.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT: Clark Gable, Claudette Colbert, Walter Connolly—A fine picture that pleased 100%. Running time, 105 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: Carole Lombard, May Robson, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—I cannot agree that this is another "Lady For A Day." It did not draw as well, nor please as well, but shows some fine acting on the part of the principals. Running time, 78 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

LONE RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—Just a fair western picture.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

MEN WITHOUT LAW (Reissue): Buck Jones—A good reissue western. Will draw here. Running time, 64 minutes. Played April 13.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Victor Jory, Fay Wray—A splendid picture. Better than the average program picture. Gave satisfaction but did not draw business.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MILLS OF THE GODS: May Robson, Victor Jory, Fay Wray—Played this one on our weekend program and did very poor business. It is a good program picture but it has very little drawing power. It was well liked by those who saw it. May Robson is at her best in this picture. Played April 11-12-13.—B. L. Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore, Tullio Carminati—I'm afraid we advertised this picture too highly; it was a disappointment, and we had more walkouts on this than on any picture we have had in a long time. The singing is wonderful; a picture you can play for "prestige." Running time, 80 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

UNWELCOME STRANGER: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—This will perhaps be the first report on this one as we received it as a substitution before release date. Jack Holt always clicks here and this one is no exception. It will satisfy practically every sort, and people who are keen for horses and horse racing will rate it as "the best picture I ever have seen." At least we have had such comments. Running time, 65 minutes. Played April 19-20.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Very good picture but will not draw them in. Lowest midweek business in months. Columbia pictures are not box-office in this town. Played March 26-27-28.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Very good picture that did not draw at the box office. Running time, 92 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BIG-HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Ran this on the weekend, but business below average. Picture very good and comments from patrons very good. Seems as though they want their Westerns on the weekend.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

CASE OF THE CURIOUS BRIDE: Warren William—The best "Clue Club" mystery up to date. Warren William and Allen Jenkins great. Good story, plenty of comedy and well directed. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 19-20.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis—The best I have seen on this star. His playing of the old man was remarkable, and his circus stunts as the son were fine. Good action from the trained lion, and fun all the way through. Running time, 63 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—This was just a fair picture. Nothing big. Pleased about 75 per cent of customers. In my opinion, Warners are fast losing out. Their musicals are only about 50 per cent as good at box office as they were a year ago. Also they are putting Dick Powell in too many pictures. He won't last long. Running time, 97 minutes. Played April 7-9.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—Swell picture. Real entertainment. Lots of suspense.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muire—Played with "I Am A Thief." Both good program pictures but not strong enough to stand alone but with another picture makes a good show. Most of the program pictures today seem to be built for double feature show business. I say the biggest menace yet discovered to kill the moving pictures.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

HAPPINESS AHEAD: Dick Powell, Josephine Hutchinson—Good show. Do not think it is as good as "20 Million Sweethearts." Played March 10-11.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE: Gloria Stuart, Ross Alexander—Played with "Right to Live." Both of these are good program pictures. Played on a double bill and got film rental out of them and that is all I did get.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—Action and plenty of it, which makes it ideal for a Saturday run. Not a special by any means but this proved good entertainment and our patrons liked it. Business good. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 5-6.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—May be O. K., but not in this town; the best I got was a headache. Ain't it bad, boys? Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 15-16.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell—Good fast comedy drama with Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell and William Gargan. Hugh Herbert supplies plenty of comedy. Pleased everyone. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 14-15.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS: Dick Powell—Received many favorable comments on this one. Business not so good due to bad weather. Played February 8-9.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

WOMAN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck—Just another picture as far as box-office draw and patrons' satisfaction were concerned. Too bad to kill a star with such weak productions as this. Stanwyck once spelled box-office but no more. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 10.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—All right; a little slow. Don't if you don't have to. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 17.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—All America has been waiting to see her in a picture like this. Your eyes, too, will brighten and your heart throb when Jimmy Dunn takes Shirley up in a plane and tells her that they are going up to heaven to see her mother, who had just been killed in an automobile accident. A family picture that satisfied everyone. Average business. Played March 7-8-9.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—The little lady still brings them in and pleases, and she was backed up by splendid adults, James Dunn, Judith Allen and Charles Sellon. David Butler's directing is also at par. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 14-15.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple—It's got everything. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 5-6.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Cannot say any more than what has been said by other exhibitors. A honey of a show and business above expectations. Don't fail us in the future, Shirley, and I know there'll be a Santa Claus. Played March 24-26.—E. J. La Qua, La ua Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn, Judith Allen—This little star captivates young and old, and does top business whenever her pictures are shown. It is almost unbelievable that she can make people laugh and cry as she does. She comes nearer having Mary Pickford's ability, when Miss Pickford was playing little girl roles, than any other actress ever on the screen. Played March 17-19.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—My patrons said this was Shirley's best. I have no objections to their comments. I thought it was one of the best pictures I have ever seen. Played March 16-17.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Very good Chan picture, but did not pull on Saturday night for us. Played March 15-16.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—A very good picture of the onetime political days, which haven't changed a bit. The regular fans enjoyed this one to the limit. A picture worth anybody's time and money. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played March 3-4-5.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Like all Fox pictures, okey-dokey, none better. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 11-12.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Disappointed in this picture as it is almost like "Judge Priest." Box office not so hot.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Just as good as ever. Business off on account of heavy rains. Played April 2-4.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FIRST WORLD WAR, THE: Advertised it as having no plot, story, in fact, nothing but actual scenes and cold-blooded facts. Did extra business and received no complaints. Played February 15-16. —H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS: Alice Faye, James Dunn—Patrons quite disappointed with this. Only the comedy saved it. At best only an average production with one exceptional solo dance number. "Entire production conceived, created and produced by George White." You can have it, George!—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—With Colbert in the limelight for her Academy award, she is a box-office natural right now. And you don't have to be afraid to offer this to your patrons. It's one mighty fine little picture that will please. Our patrons liked it well enough to comment most favorably. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 17-18.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HANDY ANDY: Will Rogers—This picture put everyone in a good humor. Will Rogers has an appeal for everyone.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen—Real entertainment. Action all through with plenty of comedy by Stepin Fetchit. Well liked. No draw, though.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Nice little picture. Did fair midweek business.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Rather weak story but somehow it brought in the people on the weekend. Business above on this one. —E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—A good air story, but appealing mostly to the men folks. Did fair business in face of a steady all day and all night rain.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter—Just another air picture. Did good business. Played March 22-23.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore, Evelyn Venable, Bill Robinson—Pronounced the finest in screen entertainment by regular fans. The color sequence in the last reel left the audience gasping. Fox has the right idea in coloring, i. e., coloring only the outdoor scenes and dramatic situations. Lionel Barrymore very good. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 7-8-9. —A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—Drew patrons of every age, many of whom had never been here before, and pleased 100 per cent. Who else in pictures can do that? The smallest star is the biggest box-office attraction and she turns in a grand performance in this one. Barrymore and Robinson deserve a few well chosen adjectives for their splendid roles, too. It's the tops in entertainment. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 14-15-16.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT FORTY: Will Rogers—Another Will Rogers picture and a superb one. By my opinion it is the best one so far. It would be wonderful if we could get more pictures of this type. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 28-29.—Warner McLaughlin, Empire Theatre, Port Henry, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LIFE BEGINS AT FORTY: Will Rogers—Another typical Will Rogers story which will do business. Plenty of Rogers humor to put it over. Better than average picture.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

THREE MORE JOIN FILM REPORTERS

Three new contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" are the following:

KEN HIGGINS, manager, Avon theatre, Edwards, N. Y.

R. D. ASHMUN, Strand theatre, Caro, Mich.

E. J. LA QUA, La Qua theatre, Hankinson, N. D.

The first reports from these Eastern and Northwestern showmen appear in this issue.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres, "Pat" Paterson—One swell picture but a real box-office flop. Don't know why. All that saw it liked it. Perhaps the title kept them away.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—You can't go wrong on this one any time. On a double bill with "The Trail Beyond" did the best business on Tuesday and Wednesday since I've been in this town. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 2-3.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—Very delightful comedy of a shipload of U. S. Cadets on a four-day vacation in Paris. Lew Ayres is one of the most likable young chaps on the screen and put this part over in great style. In spite of an all day rain on Sunday it drew fairly well and was liked very much. Played March 10-11.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—A good picture, however, not the Warner Baxter style of acting. Regular fans enjoyed it. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played March 10-11-12.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Hardly up to the standard of this team's past releases and it proved disappointing from a box office angle and audience reaction. Business slack. Running time, 90 minutes. Played March 31-April 1-2.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD—Alice Fay, James Dunn—Very good entertainment if your patrons are expecting just an average picture. Played February 12-13.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps.

UNDER PRESSURE: Victor McLaglen, Edmund Lowe—Interesting from a technical standpoint, showing the construction of a traffic tube under the East River. Nothing new in plot and on the whole merits only the program rating. Business fair and audience comment fairly favorable. Running time, 68 minutes. Played April 3-4.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

UNDER PRESSURE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Good action picture for weekend but did not draw average attendance.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronge.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Drew well and on the whole pleased well. However, there were many who commented that the picture was not like the book. Typical western fare for those who like it. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 12-13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—How they went for this one, but you wouldn't know it was taken from Harold Bell Wright's book if they did not tell you. Business above usual Westerns.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—As I just said, like all Fox pictures, okey-dokey. None better. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 8-9.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: Loretta Young, John Boles—Best performance by Loretta Young in any picture I've played her in. Good audience reaction and business good. Played February 17-19.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Every exhibitor will get real joy out of running this picture. It's different, it's well done, it will please your customers and will make you some money. I'm very sorry I only played it two days. Played March 31-April 1.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—One swell picture, judging from comments received from the patrons. Played March 3-4.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps.

GB Pictures

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—This picture might have been O. K. a number of years ago but today it is a terrible test of endurance, that is, to sit through the show. The American public doesn't want this kind of stuff and it is a business killer. Running time, 95 minutes. Played March 19-20-21.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—Wonderful! As box office draw, not so hot, but it is worth playing, attracting people who seldom go to movies. Many praised it and it pleased the majority. Running time, 95 minutes. Played April 8-9.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This one is good entertainment for a kiddie matinee, but for an adult audience it's a flop; poor business here. Running time, 81 minutes. Played April 10.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Stuart Erwin, Leo Carrillo, Betty Furness—Good picture; it has humor, suspense, and pleased our people well. Stuart Erwin makes a good picture wherever he is placed. We figure it does the young folks more good to see a picture like this than to listen to a dozen lectures on moral behavior. Running time, 88 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: All Star Cast—Excellent picture that pleased the great majority, although some of the action fans walked out on it. Did very good business here and when I saw the box office statement I caught myself singing "Happy Days Are Here Again." Running time, 132 minutes. Played April 6. —B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Freddie Bartholomew, Frank Lawton, W. C. Fields, Lionel Barrymore, Edna May Oliver, Madge Evans—This is the last thing in entertainment. I call it a 100% picture. Satisfaction, yes, to all. A classic in a class by itself. Too big and good for small towns. Not enough of them in small towns that appreciate this type of entertainment. Over the heads of the masses. (That's my story.) Played April 14-15.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

EVELYN PRENTICE: William Powell, Myrna Loy—This did not appeal to my patrons and we did the poorest three-day business we've had all winter. I cannot figure out why more people would not come to see it. It was very, very good in my estimation, most excellently acted, and has a suspenseful climax. We like Cora Sue Collins. Played March 12-14.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA: Clark Gable, William Powell, Myrna Loy—Old, but it pulled them in and was well liked.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Jeanette MacDonald, Maurice Chevalier—This is a musical treat that brought a fair response from our small town patrons. The only criticism I heard was the "foreign accent" of some of the actors.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel—One of the gayest of new types of musical shows. The costumes are well designed and the picture is very good. Average business. Running time, 82 minutes. Played April 12-13.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce, Billie Burke—A good, clean, exhilarating family picture, well dramatized. The fans liked it. Played to average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played March 14-15-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WEST POINT OF THE AIR: Wallace Beery, Robert Montgomery—Good air picture but not Wallace Beery at his best. Did average business for the three day run. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 16-17-18.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—This is the most disappointing picture that I have played for months. Never pleased one customer. More walkouts on this picture than I have had for a year. As far as I'm concerned, Helen Hayes can go back to the stage and stay there. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 4-5. —Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

WICKED WOMAN, A: Mady Christians, Jean Parker, Charles Bickford—One of the finest productions I have had the opportunity to play. The title is misleading, but the story makes up for that. Why does MGM turn out good pictures and put poor titles on them? This picture should have greater drawing power if the title was changed to something of human appeal. Mady Christians very good. The picture was enjoyed by all. Average business. Running time, 8 reels. Played March 21-22-23.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WICKED WOMAN, A: Mady Christians, Jean Parker, Charles Bickford—This was a very fine picture. Lots of favorable comments, but business was below my Tuesday-Wednesday average. Running time, 74 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lyden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

Monogram

CITY LIMITS: Frank Craven, Sally Blane, Ray Walker—All right. Running time, 67 minutes. Played April 10.—J. T. Justice, Jr. Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Liked by all. A real story for the small town.—Jack Greene, Geneseo Theatre, Geneseo, Ill. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker, Jimmy Fay—One of the best comedy pictures we have played in past year. Story interesting. Acting fine and the kid great. Gave satisfaction to all.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RAINBOW VALLEY: John Wayne, Lucille Brown, Buffalo Bill, Jr.—At last Monogram has taken a decided change in making westerns. A picture well liked, with the usual thrills, but this time with comedy added with the swashbuckling model T Ford driven by the mail carrier of the far western town. Average business. Running time, 6 reels. Played March 14-15-16.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRAIL BEYOND, THE: John Wayne, Noah Beery, Noah Beery, Jr., Verna Hillie—One of he best westerns out. The fighting and riding were out of the ordinary and the scenery superb. Running time, 55 minutes. Played April 2-3.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

WOMEN MUST DRESS: Minna Gombell, Gavin Gordon—We tied in with this as the producer offers many tieups with merchants, and besides the "Women Must Dress" tieup we used more than average newspaper space ourselves, and the effect of same was a frozen box office. We brought them right up to the door, but pretentious lobby would not make them buy that ticket. If you do play this, do not expect too much and you will not be disappointed as I was. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Mary Ellis, Carl Brisson—A very good musical show for the entire family. My regular patrons were well pleased with this one. Average business. Running time, 10 reels. Played February 28-March 1-2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—Comments from patrons are that when you see Mae in one picture you've seen all of them. Not worth the rental paid for this picture.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—A very good program picture for any night of the week. Sylvia Sidney very good. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played March 28-29-30.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Osceola, Mich. Small town patronage.

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Good picture to average business. Played April 17.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

ENTER MADAME: Elissa Landi, Cary Grant—Produced on a grand scale, combining the highlights of famous operas with the life story of an exotic singer and her Quixotic husband. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played February 24-25-26.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—A good picture. Patrons satisfied. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played April 4-5-6.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred

MacMurray—A swell picture but failed to do the business that it should. This happens oftentimes. Fred MacMurray was outstanding and is bidding for stardom, which he should make nicely. Claudette always good but not a big box office star for us. Running time, 80 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray, Ray Milland—A splendid romantic drama that had comedy in it and was well liked by the cash customers. Played to above average business. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 5-6-7.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—Advertising a Crosby picture in this man's town is dynamite. A smallpox sign posted in the lobby would get the same effect at the box office. Played this as a surprise showing and as such it got by nicely, though many walked out. Personally I thought it good entertainment in the typical Crosby style with comedy and music predominating. Played April 13.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott, Jackie Coogan—Just a fair western picture but did a nice business. Joe Morrison singing "Home on the Range" added considerably to the picture. The picture was popularized by the song over the radio. Running time, 55 minutes. Played March 22-23-24.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott, Evelyn Brent—An average western except for Joe Morrison's singing, and good acting by the principals. Story not so strong. Brought more than average business, however. Fifty-five minutes pretty short for a feature; takes too many shorts to build up. Running time, 55 minutes. Played March 29-30.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Jackie Coogan, Randolph Scott—Did not draw as well as "Wagon Wheels" and did not please quite as well. However, it is a splendid weekend attraction.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing—A good, clean, fast, action picture of the Bengal Lancers. Excellent outdoor photography. Has Paramount taken a decided change in photographing: i. e., developing their prints to bring out all the highlights, so the audience can see the characters without straining their eyes? Average business. Running time, 11 reels. Played April 10-11.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing—They were a long time making this, but they turned out a first class picture that drew and pleased. Played March 31-April 1.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—A very good dramatic picture of two young lovers seeking a livelihood in this mad world. Gracie Allen and George Burns supply the comedy. Many comments on the singing by Joe Morrison and Dixie Lee. Everyone well satisfied. Average business. Running time, 9 reels. Played March 31-April 1-2.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

LOVE IN BLOOM: Joe Morrison, Dixie Lee—Good songs, well done by Morrison and Dixie Lee, save this otherwise poor picture. Burns and Allen o. k. until their act gets so sily that it ceases to be funny. Fine recording deserves special mention.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter C. Kelly, Andy Clyde, Richard Cromwell, Betty Furness—One of the best of the Irish dramas since the "Cohens and the Kellys." Enough belly-laughs to rock the Rockefeller Music Hall. Well done and satisfactory to the regular fans. Average business. Running time, 7 reels. Played March 24-25-26.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—A good Friday-Saturday comedy that was well liked by our patrons. Business below average. Running time, 61 minutes. Played April 12-13.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Walter Kelly—Plenty of comedy in this democratic tale of the Scotch and the Irish. My audience enjoyed it, and while not outstanding, it should draw well and please especially in towns where the Scotch and the Irish predominate.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields, Zasu Pitts—This is a very good picture for the small town. Although I didn't do much at the box office, it is no fault of the picture. Pauline Lord is the best actress that I have had the pleasure of seeing for some time. Step on this picture. Running time, nine reels. Played April 12-13.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—This picture is no good for you. Cancel it out and save criticism. Pictures like this would soon put the show business in the red. Running time, 83 minutes. Played April 9-10-11.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Chas. "Chic" Sale—Not much of a picture but did a nice business. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 12-13-14.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Chic Sale—Good picture; did average business. It's more of a mystery story than a western. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 13.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charlie Ruggles, Zasu Pitts, Roland Young—Charles Laughton is a wow. He bowled them over with that poker face of his when he arrived at Red Gap. The picture was well done and well liked by the regulars. Running time, 10 reels. Played March 17-18-19.—A. F. Affelt, Iosco Theatre, Oscoda, Mich. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—A nicely made picture. Maybe an impossible story but good entertainment just the same. Running time, 75 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—A good action picture that pleased all and should be played on Saturday or Sunday. Did above average business. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 3-4.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

YOU BELONG TO ME: Lee Tracy—Patrons' comments "swell show," and average business one day.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

RKO Radio

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A fine show that brought them in on Tuesday and Wednesday. It takes the best to do that for me. You can't boost it too hard. Running time, 79 minutes. Played April 8-9.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

BACHELOR BAIT: Stuart Erwin, Rochelle Hudson, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher—This one has plenty of laughs in it. Some people think Stuart Erwin looks and acts a lot like Will Rogers and they all think he's plenty funny. Played April 16-17.—B. L. Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. Small town patronage.

ENCHANTED APRIL: Ann Harding, Frank Morgan—This picture should be shelved and save Miss Harding what few admirers she has left. It is a shame to ruin a star with such pictures. The further away the American producer gets from this English stuff, the better it will be for the exhibitor. Just cancel this one out. Running time, 70 minutes. Played April 16-17-18.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Hale Hamilton—Picture not bad but absolutely nothing at box office. If you have opposition cancel it out. An old star has no appeal to the young folks and the younger set get all the schooling they want. A poor title and a poor subject for the box office. Running time, 78 minutes. Played March 26-27-28.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

GRIDIRON FLASH: Eddie Quillan, Betty Furness—Do not know why this picture flopped at the box-office. Personally I thought it a very good Friday-Saturday picture but failed to get film rental in two nights. Played February 22-23.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—Poor title, poor at box office. These little miss-outs will soon queer pictures. If you can, cancel this picture. Running time, 64 minutes. Played March 5-6-7.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—This is a truly worthwhile production, but it did not make expenses. A lot of older folks came out to see it, but the young people were conspicuous by their absence. Played March 24-25.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—One grand flop at my box-office. Played two days and did not take in enough to pay expenses. I wonder where all the people who want clean shows are. I can't get them out. Played March 24-25.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

RED MORNING: Regis Toomey—Good South Sea Island picture. Played March 8-9.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Frances Lederer—A nice picture that failed at the box office. Would class as a good program only. Lederer good but too foreign to get very far with the American public. He would be good if placed right but a very poor lead to win a beautiful girl like Ginger Rogers. Running time, 78 minutes.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—A wonderful picture with action, scenery and good clean entertaining. Pleased my audiences and did average business. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 7-10.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD: Karen Morley, Edward Arnold—Set a record for low gross since 1924. I thought it to be a very good picture and the 25 or 30 that came to see it said it was good. Played February 26-27.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

State Rights

MILLION DOLLAR HAUL: Reed Howes, Tarzan Police Dog—The splendid acting of the dog, Tarzan, had the kids shouting their heads off. The action does not lag for a minute. Recording not so good, but all in all it is a good Saturday picture. Played April 12-13.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

United Artists

AFFAIRS OF CELLINI, THE: Fredric March, Constance Bennett, Frank Morgan, Fay Wray—Drew the poorest Sunday business we have had all winter. This type comedy does not appeal to our folks. Running time, 79 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young—Stupendous just fits this. The conquering of India furnishes a thrilling story and a background for colorful sets. Our patrons were loud in their praises but the picture failed to draw the business it really deserved. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 7-8-9.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Ann Sothern, Merle Oberon—It may be good in a big "throw," but you little poor boys like me leave it off. Out of one dozen United Artists I have made film rental out of two. If this is good business, I will henceforth try to make my fame and fortune by flying to Bermuda on an ironing board with a bundle of fodder under each arm, a crosstie on every toe, and an anvil tied to my neck with a silk string a mile long. This picture made about as much fuss as a lamb beating his tail in a felt hat. Running time, 85 minutes. Played April 18-19.—J. T. Justice, Jr., Pickfair Theatre, Kernersville, N. C. Small town patronage.

KID FROM SPAIN, THE: Eddie Cantor—We had never used the Cantor features and this one, so old it could vote, drew and pleased. We have the newer ones coming, and if they do as well we will be well plased, indeed. Played April 5-6.—P. G. Estee, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

SORRELL AND SON: H. B. Warner—Poor sound. English stuff absolutely no good. Running time, 85 minutes. Played March 12-13-14.—Wm. A. Clark, Garden Theatre, Canton, Ill. General patronage.

Universal

CHEATING CHEATERS: Fay Wray, Cesar Romero, Minna Gombell—Brought me the smallest Friday and Saturday for three months. Got no kicks, neither did I hear the regulars say on the way out, "Another good one." It's one of those so-so ones. Running time, 67 minutes. Played March 29-30.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

THE CRIMSON TRAIL: Buck Jones—Beautiful scenery and plenty of action but children were frightened by the madman "Loco." The picture would have been more pleasing to a great number with this "crazy" part left out. Played March 8-9.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

GIFT OF GAB: All Star Cast—This is a fair picture. Some of the humor was over the heads of the average showgoer. However, there is great variety in the picture, and there ought to be something in it to please everyone. Music was fine. Running time, 70 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—We tried to put this over by advertising that the public might not be fooled by this title, but they stayed away in spite of all we could do to overcome the handicap. Socalled sophisticated comedy will not click in this town and so even those who did come were not too well pleased. Personally, I thought it a fine picture. Needing a little cutting to speed it up was the only fault. Business very poor. Running time, 98 minutes. Played March 29-30.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Rochelle Hudson, Louise Beavers—The first time I saw this picture, thought it not so good, but after seeing it go through the run of four days bringing in better than average business, have decided it is more than good.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert—One of the finest productions of all times which any theatre can take pride in presenting to its patrons. But despite all the arguments set forth by Fred Hinds, this proved to be just what this small town did not want. It pleased those who came and knew what they were coming to see but others were not lured to the box-office. Business not too good but audience reaction all to the good. Running time, 114 minutes. Played March 27-28.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—Great acting by Colbert and Beavers. Women sniffled and came out praising the picture. Business fair.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—A great picture, very interesting story and acting fine. Pleased all we got but did not draw us any special business. No fault of the picture. I never saw better entertainment in any picture. Played March 31, April 1.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

IT HAPPENED IN NEW YORK: Heather Angel, Lyle Talbot—Best picture Universal has turned out in a long time, so said our patrons. Plenty of comedy, excitement and everything needed for satisfactory entertainment. Running time, 72 minutes. Played April 15-16.—Mrs. N. Monte Gill, Strand Theatre, Montpelier, Vt. General patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD, THE: Claude Rains, Joan Bennett, Lionel Atwill—A well made, well acted picture, with Paris and the start of the World War as locale. Did not draw and did not please; due, perhaps, to fact that picture is unrelieved by comedy and built on the premise that munition manufacturers cause wars, and patrons are fed up on the subject. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 7-8.—P. G. Estes, S. T. Theatre, Parker, S. D. Small town patronage.

MYSTERY OF EDWIN DROOD: Claude Rains—One of the really fine productions of the year. Universal did a splendid job of transferring this Dickens tale to the screen and supplying an ending that is logical and Dickensesque, if you know what I mean. Our patrons liked it immensely as a preview feature but I doubt its pulling power for us on a regular run. Running time, 87 minutes. Played April 6.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—We liked this picture, and I think everyone who saw it enjoyed it. One man, a banker, said it was the best we had ever shown. It did not draw so well, but I think Binnie Barnes has a personality one cannot forget. Running time, 70 minutes.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—After putting out a good advertising campaign on this picture for two weeks ahead we had a wire from Universal that they were pulling it out three days before showing and putting in an old western. They gave us no time to protest or to get advertising for the picture they substituted. Maybe the picture is all right, but service and consideration from distributor is nil.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

THERE'S ALWAYS TOMORROW: Binnie Barnes, Frank Morgan—Great performance by entire cast but as a box office picture, no. Would have done better with a Western. Played March 3-5.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

TRANSIENT LADY: Gene Raymond, Henry Hull—A very good program picture. Played on double bill and gave satisfaction to a very poor business.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—This and "The Dionne Quintuplets" cracked my Tuesday and Wednesday business for 1935. It's a good show. Running time, 60 minutes. Played April 16-17.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Warner Bros.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Very good air story. Plenty of thrills and lots of comedy. Did excellent business for three days. Pleased everyone. Running time, 86 minutes. Played March 19-20-21.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

I AM A THIEF: Mary Astor, Ricardo Cortez—Played with "Gentlemen Are Born." Both good program pictures but not strong enough to stand alone, but with another picture makes a good show. Most of the program pictures today seem to be built for double feature show business. I say the biggest menace yet discovered to kill the moving pictures.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO: Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee—Gave most of our patrons good entertainment. Some thought it was just a little to fisty. Played February 19-20.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC Camps patronage.

RIGHT TO LIVE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Brent—Played with "Maybe It's Love." Both of these are good program pictures. Played on a double bill and got film rental out of them and that is all I did get.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne, Donald Woods—Picture pleased well. Warners sure can produce the musicals. Irene Dunne splendid and just enough comedy relief to put the picture across. This Donald Woods has got something and here's hoping Warners keep him. Played April 19-20.—Ken Higgins, Avon Theatre, Edwards, N. Y. Rural and small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—This is an extra good musical feature. Story entertaining and the stars and all the cast fine. Did not draw very big but pleased them all. When they say it's a good show when they leave the theatre, you can bet they were satisfied. Very few pictures get that now. This one did. Played April 7-8.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

MEN IN BLACK: Broadway Comedies—When you play one comedy with the 3 stooges you have played them all. Same old bunk all the way through.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

Educational

DUMB LUCK: Marriage Wows Series—Weak two-reeler featuring the "Easy Aces." All talk and no action.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

FIREMAN SAVE MY CHILD: Terry-Toons—Weak cartoon. Cartoons are funny if they don't go too far. This one is impossible.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

GAY OLD DAYS: Song Hit Stories—Very good musical short of the type that takes you back to the "gay nineties." Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

GAY OLD DAYS: Song Hit Stories—Played with "Way Down Yonder." Patrons commented on these shorts and never mentioned the features. They like them.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

HELLO SAILORS: Coronet Comedy—Will take some more as good as this one any time. More laughs than a dozen of the ordinary socalled comedies. Running time, 21 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town rural patronage.

JAIL BIRDS: Terry-Toons—Extra good cartoon. Running time, seven minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE BIG TOP, THE: Poodles Hanneford, Junior Coghlan, Ben Turpin—Lots of folks told me this was the best part of the program and it is above average for a two-reel comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

MANAGED MONEY: Shirley Temple—Shirley Temple has a way all of her own and makes any picture in which she appears a great success.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUPER-STUPID: Coronet Comedies—Fair comedy. Not up to Educational standard. Two reels.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

THREE BEARS, THE: Terry-Toon Series—The music of the Terry-Toons always sets these cartoons just a little above average for us.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

TWO LAME DUCKS: Coronet Comedies—Very good comedy of the slapstick variety. Running time, two reels.—E. J. La Qua, La Qua Theatre, Hankinson, N. D. Rural patronage.

GEM OF THE SEA: Magic Carpet Series—A nice little travelogue on Ireland with interesting comments.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

GENEVA-BY-THE-LAKE: Magic Carpet Series—An outstanding number in this series. Entertaining all the way through. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

Metro Goldwyn Mayer

BEGINNER'S LUCK: Our Gang Comedy—Our Gang Comedies are consistently good and please everyone. This one is very, very good. Running time, 20 minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

BUM VOYAGE: Todd-Kelly—This was just a fair picture. Have had much better from them. Running time, 19 minutes.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

CARETAKER'S DAUGHTER: All-Star Comedy—A good comedy for those who like plenty of slapstick. I heard a lot of laughs.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

COLORFUL PORTS OF CALL: FitzPatrick Travel Talks Series—I thought I was getting a colored reel, but this is just in plain black and white film. Not very good. Not to be compared with "Zion, Canyon of Color." We cut this out on second show.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

DUKE FOR A DAY, A: Musical Comedy Series—No good. Nothing but idiotic slapstick. We were ashamed to be showing it on Easter Sunday but had nothing else.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

FIRST ROUNDUP, THE: Our Gang—Brought plenty of joy to everybody. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

FOUR PARTS: Charley Chase—A clever idea that seemed to go wrong. Started out good, then flopped. Running time, 19 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

HEY, HEY, FEVER: Happy Harmonies Series—A fairy tale that was beautiful, in color, and had the children pleased. Running time, 9 minutes.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

LITTLE FELLER: Chic Sale—Anyone who likes horses will like this rather dramatic one-reel. We thought it very good.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

MISSES STOOGE, THE: Todd-Kelly—Average Todd-Kelly. The girls help a magician put over an act. O. K.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHEN MY CAT'S AWAY: Happy Harmonies Series (Harman-Ising)—Splendid. Nobody is making better colored cartoons than these two boys. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

WINDY: Oddities—Very good characterization by "Chic" Sale of an old prospector whose love for children gets him in wrong with the board. However, he saves a child from a rattlesnake and all is forgiven. Worthwhile short, especially for Sundays.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

ZION, CANYON OF COLOR: FitzPatrick Travel

FINDS REPORTS ARE HELPFUL

"I think your department is very helpful to the exhibitor and I will try to make all the reports I send in as instructive as possible."

This from B. L. Smith of the Liberty theatre at Quinton, Okla., who goes into cooperative action at once by sending in several reports which appear in this issue of "What the Picture Did for Me."

Talks Series—This was one of the best. The singing was good, the color was natural. Had good comments on this one.—Harry M. Newman, Liberty Theatre, Lynden, Wash. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

CAB CALLOWAY'S HI-DE-HO: Headliners—A very poor subject. This Negro jazz might be all right in Harlem. But it is just a pain in the neck anywhere else. Running time, 10 minutes.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

FEMININE RHYTHM: Headliners—Zowie! This one has everything that a good band reel should have. Plenty of pepper and Ina Ray Hutton putting the reel across. The boys want another one with Ina Ray Hutton.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR NOTES: Headliners Series—Very good musical reel.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

MONKEY SHINES: Paramount Varieties Series—The many cute things that a monkey can do are very entertainingly shown in this reel. We had a number of compliments on it. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

POPEYE THE SAILOR CARTOONS: These are the finest one-reel subjects on the market. In my opinion they are far ahead of Mickey Mouse in both entertainment and box office value.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

SCREEN SOUVENIRS: No. 2—Up to the usual good standard of these shorts. Running time, 10 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Claskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

SWAT THE FLY: Betty Boop cartoons—Good Boop cartoon. These Boops and Popeyes are very consistent.—John A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WATER RODEO: Grantland Rice Sportlights (New Series)—A thoroughly enjoyable reel of speed boat racing. Will fit into any program. We used it on the weekend. Running time, 10 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

RKO

DIONNE QUINTUPLETS: Good investment. Our advertising "Dionne Quintuplets" and "When A Man Sees Red" seemed to stir up a lot of amusement. Incidentally it meant more publicity. Running time, 10 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

DIONNE QUINTUPLETS: Very, very entertaining, but I don't think it drew the extra business we thought it would. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

EDGAR KENNEDY COMEDIES: These are the poorest short subjects being produced by any major company. Absolutely nothing to them.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

HOW'S CROPS? Cubby the Bear Series—Very clever. Running time, 1 reel.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

IN A PIG'S EYE: Clark and McCullough—All right for Saturday. Has several good laughs. Running time, 20 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LA CUCARACHA: Steffi Duna, Don Alvarado, Paul Porcasi—Show it by all means. Running time, 20 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

PARROTVILLE FIRE DEPT.: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—A very good color cartoon. Running time, 7 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

PATHE NEWS: Always fine, and getting better. We like the kind of service we get from RKO of Denver.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

POISONED IVORY: Edgar Kennedy—Not much good. Weak attempt at comedy. Running time, 21 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

SUNSHINE MAKERS, THE: Rainbow Parade Cartoons—The finest color we've seen yet. Would have been an extra good cartoon if only in black and white. Running time, 8 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

THIS BAND AGE: Headliner Series (1934-35)—One of the finest musicals I have ever run. Nothing keeps them coming like a good laugh and the rocking chair and the cat's tail gave my folks the best laugh I've heard for ages. The first nighters boosted it to the skies. Running time, 20 minutes.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

Universal

BEAU BASHFUL: Herbert Corthell, Grady Sutton, Sylvia Picker—We enjoyed this comedy and so did all our patrons. Held interest and amusement all the way through.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

GOING PLACES WITH LOWELL THOMAS: This was well received; fine scenes of wild animals, and of the ski jumpers of the Alps.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

GOLDIELOCKS AND THE THREE BEARS: Oswald Cartoon—A pretty good cartoon that pleased the children and their parents.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

WHERE'S ELMER? Vincent Barnett—I was sorry we showed this, it wasn't funny and the gangster part displeased the church people. Story of a gang that took over a hospital and broke people's legs, etc., so as to make money on the outlandish charges. It seems wrong to burlesque such life-saving agencies as hospitals and doctors.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

ALL SEALED UP: Ben Blue—Good comedy that pleased everyone except where Ben Blue eats the sandwich with a sardine can. The trained seals remarkable, and the story well worked out.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. General patronage.

NOT TONIGHT, JOSEPHINE: Broadway Brevities Series—Color musical, just fairly entertaining. Running time, 20 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

ONCE OVER LIGHTLY: Roscoe Ates—Better than average. Running time, 22 minutes.—M. R. Harrington, Avalon Theatre, Clatskanie, Ore. Small town and rural patronage.

PAREE, PAREE: Broadway Brevities—A very fine musical short with some beautiful scenes and swell music.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

PILGRIM DAYS: E. M. Newman Series—A good educational number that is worth a week's history teaching in school.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RHYTHM IN THE BOW: Merrie Melodies Series—This was a cartoon that pleased beyond average. A tramp fiddler accomplishes great surprises with his violin.—F. R. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RIMAC'S RHUMBA ORCHESTRA: Melody Masters Series—The fastest musical short we have played for some time. Patrons applauded at the finish. Running time, eight minutes.—R. D. Ashmun, Strand Theatre, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

SOFT DRINKS AND SWEET MUSIC: Broadway Brevities—This is just a fair musical comedy. Would have been much better if they had starred someone who could really sing. As it is, just fair. Running time, 20 minutes.—Paul McBride, Avalon Theatre, Fillmore, Utah. Small town patronage.

Serials

Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—We have played three chapters of this serial and most of the people like it fine. It has plenty of action and thrills. We are playing this on 10 cent nights and they come back to see the serial regardless of the feature picture.—B. L. Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. Small town patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—Played Chapter One April 9-10 and it looks like a ringer. Running time, 20 minutes each.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Small town and rural patronage.

'Kansas City Star' Depicting History Via Film "Stills"

History, as it has been depicted over the years by the motion picture, is the theme of a new pictorial feature, titled "Unreeling History," and appearing on Sunday as a weekly feature in the rotogravure section of the Kansas City Star.

The series was prepared by John C. Moffitt, film editor of the Star, and is being released to other newspapers through the Bell Syndicate. Several months were required in the compilation of a collection of approximately 1,000 stills from historical pictures produced in the United States and abroad. It is estimated that the feature, with its weekly appearance, will run for a year. Stills from historical motion pictures depicting major events of the world, or phases of them, will range from ancient times and "The Ten Commandments" to the modern day.

INLAID FORMICA DOORS AT THE MANHATTAN THEATRE, N.Y.

» THE snappiest modernizing jobs on theaters are being done this year with Formica. They make an old theater really modern, up-to-date and attractive. Such an improvement in appearance is immediately felt in better business.

The picture shows a battery of Formica doors with inlays installed at the Manhattan Theater, Times Square, Forty-second Street and Seventh Avenue, New York.

Formica in more than 40 colors, and in combinations of colors, is used for theater fronts, marquise linings, lobby walls, ticket booth paneling and doors.

The cost is moderate. It is quickly and easily installed by carpenters with a minimum of interruption to business. Get the facts before you do any work of this kind.

Better Theatres

MAY 4, 1935

THE LESSON OF OBSOLESCENCE

Theatre modernization, beginning about 20 months ago and increasing by easy stages, has reached the "boom" stage. This was foreseen by those who realized that the average theatre had got into pretty bad shape because of retrenchment throughout the worst of the depression. There was no normal maintenance for a long period following 1930, and the rate of depreciation applying to the property as a whole was accordingly accelerated. Hence there was no real saving in retrenchment.

But only a part of the forces underlying the present wave of building remodeling and equipment replacement are the outgrowth of the depression. The necessity of widespread modernization would have come anyway, at least as soon as income from the exhibition of motion pictures made it possible. Obsolescence was at work even before the depression struck. Some theatres opened during the late twenties had begun to be obsolete, indeed, soon after the first performance. The opening of the present decade saw the promulgation of radically new values in architecture generally, and at the same time there was growing the new approach to theatre design which emphasizes its function.

This would seem to us to dictate a well-counseled policy in planning present remodeling projects. Some theatres, so badly designed in the first place, or so old or structurally restricted that only temporary schemes are suited to them, warrant little more than patch jobs—to continue their existence a little longer. But many are the theatres which, while poorly suited either architecturally or functionally to public tastes and economic conditions of today, lend themselves to sound revision. Concerning them the question should not be the one frequently heard, "What can I do real cheap to fix this shack up a little?" Rather, the remodeling of such a theatre should proceed from the outset toward the correction of fundamental errors. Faking will achieve no real improvement except a superficial one that will disappear in a period of mere months, and many of the most serious faults will not be touched at all.

THE HARVEST TO COME IN THE FALL

The next harvest moon is to mean something. The business upturn of this spring is not to be taken very seriously. But in the fall . . .

So does Forbes Magazine for April express itself. Commenting on the current ascent of the business curve, that publication asserts, "If you want to be fooled, just assume that it is going to continue to rise." Mr. B. C. Forbes, the editor, permits himself frequent criticism of the New Deal and is not wont to have much confidence in it. However:

"By next October we should have experienced the strongest upturn that business has known since the spectacular rise from March to July 1933. . . . Do not expect this rise to get under way rapidly. At the outset, general news may continue to be disturbing. But one by one those industries which have fallen below last year will be lessening the gap between 1935 and 1934, and those which have stayed ahead of 1934 will be widening the gap."

We don't know how he knows—but we believe him!

PUTTING VALUE INTO ORGANIZATION

By J. T. KNIGHT, Jr.

Examining what it takes to build up a theatre organization for the theatre's sake, not for organization's sake

OF ALL COMMERCIAL endeavors, a motion picture theatre probably requires the smallest number of employes in proportion to the total volume of business done, and to the total number of individuals of the general public contacted. Again, in relation to other businesses, motion picture theatres represent a very great diversity of conditions and physical differences. Yet this is no sound argument that general principles cannot be applied to the organization of a theatre. There is no rule-of-thumb that, once learned, can be applied in all cases with the assurance of co-operative, economical and efficient results and a sure "royal road" to success in theatre operation.

As emphasized in an earlier article, organization must start with the theatre manager. He can't side-track his organizational responsibilities because he earned his job by excelling in advertising or as a showman; once he becomes a manager he must develop an organization. Some managers favor a military organization—they demend precision, exactness, carefully defined lines of authority and responsibility. They attempt to regiment the employes of a theatre along such lines indiscriminately. Another type of manager leans strongly toward the functional organization in which the clearly defined and highly specialized kinds of work are all-important, and where expert and specialized skill in the performance of certain jobs is emphasized. This manager will try to apply this "functional organization" to every type of theatre, large or small, neighborhood or small town, regardless of advantages or ultimate results.

Then there is another type of manager —the man who believes that an elaborate set of forms, reports and records indicate efficiency, and he in his turn applies this principle of statistics to any and every type of theatre. This is perhaps the most worthless approach to organization and the one approach that is strewn with most pitfalls. No one should interpret this as meaning that records are non-essential—frequently it is the examination of existing records, or the development of important and necessary records, that leads to the most vital steps in organizing. Records exact and carefully kept, are a part of good organization, but thoughtful consideration of the real value of reports, forms and statistics should precede the establishment of them.

A fourth type of manager is the happy-go-lucky fellow who books his pictures, plans his advertising, memorizes his box office receipts and lets his employes establish their own kind of organization. This manager is the one who always seems to be confronted with some emergency, primarily because he "lets George do it," and frequently George slips up or forgets.

The fifth type of manager is the egotist that knows it all—he must do everything because no one else is capable of doing it quite so well as he. This particular manager always labors with a "dumb" organization and employes, because no intelligent individual who knows his job will work very long under such a manager. When this manager is away from the theatre for a day nothing goes as it should, because the employes have never had any practice in making decisions and have been taught to do just what they have been told, nothing more, nothing less.

ELEMENTS OF ORGANIZATION

It is, of course, true that in some degree the qualities displayed by the types described above are all essential to good organization. Organization begins with the definite knowledge of what must be accomplished to make the theatre profitable: controlling employes effectively, getting the most out of the variety of skilled labor required in theatre operation, and securing the co-operation of all so that each employe helps, not hinders, the financial interests of the theatre. Systematic and orderly methods of accomplishing the more-or-less routine functions must be established—planning must be done to eliminate negligence, minimize the loss of time, and effect economies.

In spite of the widely different problems presented by the many types of theatres and locations, we can establish a foundation for organization. We cannot conceive of real organization without a definite plan. Regardless of the personal methods used by a manager in establishing working schedules, hiring and firing, directing and coordinating the efforts of all, his methods must have the definiteness of a plan to be truly effective. Many mistakes may occur in any group, but if there is some plan in the allocation of duties and responsibilities, and some order and regularity by which the necessary duties are performed, there is the beginning of an organization.

PLAN

In deceding upon a plan of organization, careful consideration must be given to lines of authority and responsibility. Such lines when clearly established, provide control, direction and decision, all of which provides the means of eliminating confusion and settling arguments and disputes, and expedites the performance of routine functions. The method of tapering authority downward never leaves the theatre without an acting manager. Lines of responsibility permit the accurate placing of praise or censure where it belongs. As responsibility is segregated, and split responsibility is minimized, incentive increases. This is a healthy indication of organization.

SYSTEM

System is another indication of good organization. System is distinct from the plan of organization—it is the mechanism or the functioning of the organization; it transmits order and method, relieves the manager of the details of execution, and moves employes in the accustomed functioning routine.

DISCIPLINE

Discipline is an important factor in any system of value to an organization, as it brings all employes into the system and working order of the theatre. Discipline has to do with rules and regulations, particularly obedience to such rules and regulations, and results in the full understanding of the plan of organization with complete appreciation of progressive training.

The only measure of a good organization is, of course, results, and results are determined by the inspections made by the manager and the records. It is not intended to discuss theatre records here, but emphasis is placed upon inspection—personal inspection—by the manager, of every phase of his organization in determining the degree of the success of the results.

MORALE

A good theatre organization is not a machine, it is not cold-blooded, it is not an artificial thing that recognizes only such realities as plan, order, system, discipline, skill, ability and inspections. Organization is living, human, and vital, the coordination of effort toward a worthy goal, breathing the spirit of the employes and the manager, inspired by pride of service and by the attitude of the manager or owner of the theatre toward those who patronize the theatre. This spirit of organization inspires unselfish effort toward the promotion of the theatre, enthusiastic and loyal support of theatre policies. This spirit comes down from the top, it's like roots that grow downward into the ground and draw the nourishment for the whole plant. So the spirit is the life blood of an organization. An organization can be plotted on paper, it can be made to look very workable, but much depends upon the spirit of the physical organization as to whether or not it really will work.

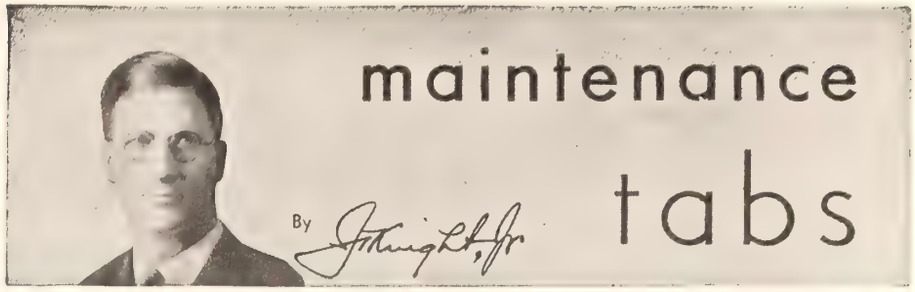
This spirit of organization is frequently called loyalty, and loyalty is usually of a personal brand, inspired by an individual; but very seldom does a large firm or corporation come close enough to an employe to arouse loyalty. Some employers feel that the payment of weekly pay checks is sufficient reason to expect loyalty! The employe feels that he has worked for that pay check and that it is his just due. But it is the manager of the theatre that personifies loyalty to that employe. If the manager has been successful in arousing loyalty in employes he can count on that unscheduled co-operation and genuine, alert effort on the part of each employe in meeting every situation that arisis.

PURPOSE OF ORGANIZATION

From the foregoing rather sketchy outline we begin to realize that there is an art in the organization of motion picture theatres that requires knowledge of the aims, methods, men, conditions, technique and human nature, as well as principles of organization.

As implied earlier in this article, when describing certain types of managers, there are definite limits to organization. When applying the method of organization to any trying situation, the benefits are so pronounced that it is easy to convince ourselves that we cannot get too much. But organization in a theatre is very much like the farmer and his pills, one made him feel so well that a second was bound to make him feel better, but unfortunately the second pill killed him. So there is a limit to the benefits accruing from organization along any particular line. Organization as an end in itself has no value in any line of business whatsoever. A theatre organization is for the purpose of presenting entertainment in a clean, safe, wholesome theatre, making the fullest use of all mechanical equipment available and providing as many comforts and conveniences as possible, with courteous service to all who visit that theatre. When the manager of the theatre is absolutely assured that this is being accomplished, then he should proceed further in the development of organization with great caution.



RELATIVE VALUES

To get results in a theatre a manager must go beyond the mere perfection of organization machinery, he should know in what direction his efforts will yield returns at the box office, and which phases and factors of theatre operation have the greatest bearing on the theatre gross. Careful study will determine those important factors and the less important functions, the responsibility for which should be placed upon a subordinate. So far as the manager is concerned, the object of organization in his theatre is not to make less work for himself or to establish short cuts or to save time, but to make the effort expended more effective, to utilize the time and energy of the group of employes in the way that it will accomplish the most. With an individual so much depends upon his particular abilities and upon his attitude towards his job that sometimes it is difficult to decide from cold analysis just where more effort should be applied and what functions might be dispensed with. In the smaller theatres during the last three years managers have been operating undermanned to such an extent that at times it was difficult to decide which work should be eliminated in order that more important functions might be performed. In the larger metropolitan theatres, when theatre staffs become numerically greater, the problem of determining the dominant factors becomes a very important one.

Cost is another vital controlling factor of organization. This element might be used in determining the unessential, but it is not always a true measure of the insignificant. We of the theatre know only too well from our experience of the present and recent past how many necessary things have been eliminated from our schedules of work to pass this phase over lightly. The balancing of this factor with the analysis, judgment and the choice of the "necessary" have been heroic accomplishments for the past few years, and recommendations have been made with one knowing full well that in omitting or neglecting certain things today we have been piling up future costs that possibly may be all out of proportion to the income of the theatre.

HEATING PRACTICES: Why should steam mains pitch down and away from the boiler, and return mains down and toward the boiler? This should be done so that the steam and any condensation (water) will move in the same directions in the pipes and thereby eliminate noise from water hammer.

What is an overhead main? It is a steam main that runs approximately horizontal at a point higher than the highest radiator in the system and feeds the steam down from the top to the radiators. A system designed along this line is frequently referred to as a down feed system. The overhead main is supplied steam from the boiler by a rising main.

What is a dry return? It is a return main for conveying the water of condensation back to the boiler but run above the water line of the boiler and is partly filled with steam from the boiler.

What is a wet return? It is a return main run below the boiler water line and as a result is filled with water at all times.

What is direct radiation? It is a term applied to all kinds of radiators or coils placed inside the actual space or room to be heated.

What is indirect radiation? A term applied to coils or radiators or other types of heating surfaces that are located outside the space or room to be warmed, and the heated air is conveyed by ducts and fans to the place to be heated.

HEATING PLANT REPAIR: The spring is the time at least to plan the changes necessary for the heating system. When the heat is finally shut off and the system is shut down for the summer season, the whole system should be drained and cleaned out—especially the return main and the boiler. Valves and traps should be carefully examined, and if you do not immediately have them repaired, at least in this way determine the cost of repairs for the fall and plan for them. After all parts of the system have been thoroughly cleaned, the boiler should be filled with water to stand over the summer months. This is especially true of sectional boilers, which, if left standing dry, will probably be leaky in the fall due to drying out at the section joints. The summer months provide ample time for checking the pitch of all steam and return piping.

TIDINESS: Don't permit rags, mops, brooms, brushes and pails to be left about toilet rooms. Every person knows that such utensils are used for cleaning purposes, and they make one think of dirt and the necessity of cleaning. Such conditions are signs of untidy housekeeping.

NEW THEATRES FROM OLD: AUDITORIUMS

THE THIRD OF A SERIES ON REMODELING, CONSIDERING IN SUCCESSIVE ISSUES: FRONTS, LOBBIES AND FOYERS, THE AUDITORIUM, AND LOUNGES

I.—METHODS and MATERIALS

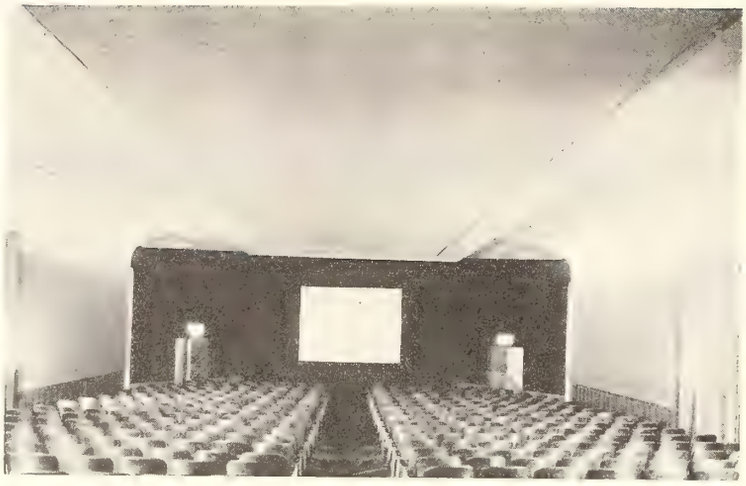
By EUGENE CLUTE

IT USED to be thought that "palatial" surroundings (mostly shoddy imitations of them) created the required atmosphere for an auditorium. If that was ever the case (for special reasons obtaining at the time), it is not true now, for such auditoriums, overloaded with ornamentation, are as out of date as the "bird on Nellie's hat." The prevailing taste for smart simplicity, for the bold use of color, and for practical ingenuity in design represents a mature appreciation of modern interests and materials. Also, it makes possible highly effective interior treatments of moderate cost, and stunning ones for as much more as you please. Then, too, the modern, broad, simple effects are especially well adapted to the conditions in a motion picture theatre auditorium, where there is but little light during the showing of the picture, and usually, only moderately strong illumination for comparatively brief periods at other times.

Plain surfaces and relatively big, simple divisions of the walls are best, but they should form a well-studied design, and they should be made interesting by the use of lighting effects, or of such means as color, texture, and the combination of materials.

The possibilities of a very bold, simple type of treatment are suggested in the accompanying sketch for the modernization of a motion picture theatre auditorium by Ben Schlanger, New York architect. It is especially interesting because it shows what can be done with an auditorium of ordinary size and of a kind that is common everywhere. The condition before modernization shows structural piers projecting into the auditorium along the side walls, features that are found very often and that are objectionable because they break up the walls unpleasantly and are obtrusive. It will be noted that Mr. Schlanger disposes of these piers neatly and effectively by furring out the walls flush with the face of the piers down to a point well above the heads of the audience. In this way, quiet, plain surfaces are secured without encroaching upon the floor space.

The lower parts of the piers, which are exposed, are of good proportions and add to the interest of the design by breaking the lower wall space. They also give a note of strength through their suggestion of the construction. These lower wall areas and short lengths of piers provide an important accent in contrast with the large plain wall areas.



This accent can be heightened by painting the walls between the columns in a strong, rich color, such as Pompeiian red or ultra-marine blue; and the sides of the piers, together with the horizontal soffits connecting them at the top of the recess, in a light chartreuse yellow. The faces of the columns could then be painted in a soft medium blue-gray, toning-in with the gray-white of the unfinished plaster or painted walls above.

A strong note of color can well be introduced into such an interior by upholstered seat backs in a plain, rich mohair pile fabric of either Pompeiian red (a deep brownish red) or dark ultra-marine blue color, contrasting with the color of the lower wall areas. Streamlined edges on the seat backs in chromium or black enamel are effectvie. This will compensate for the lack of color in the walls, give the requisite richness, and make a well-balanced color scheme. The carpet in the aisles would be best in a fairly dark, plain blue-gray, with either red or blue upholstery; or a carpet with a small, not too distinct, modern-style all-over pattern in tones of blue gray (which would soil less readily) might be used.

The basic idea of the design shown in this sketch—the breadth of treatment and the effective composition of plain wall areas—can be employed in various interior schemes suited to the conditions met with in widely different auditoriums, the wall piers being merely incidental to the particular problem in this instance. Ways in which this method of interior treatment can be applied under different conditions are exemplified in the Thalia Theatre in New York City, of which Mr. Schlanger was the architect. (See photo.) The fact that in this theatre the auditorium floor slopes on a curve that is the reverse of that which is usual—upward instead of downward—is aside from the matter of general interior treatment. Walls and ceiling of plain plaster are made interesting by slight differences in the planes, which draw free-cut straight lines, varied by quarter-circles at some of the corners; and by heavier shaded areas where one surface is stepped out beyond another; or where there are boldly overhanging simple masses.

The sketches above indicate a modern retreatment of an auditorium by Ben Schlanger, New York architect. The first sketch is Mr. Schlanger's conception of a typical auditorium of obsolete type — structural piers and ceiling beams and an ornamental proscenium arch, while lighting brackets on the piers produce a spotty effect and hamper focusing attention on the screen. In the second sketch he has changed this scheme by furring out between the piers and ceiling beams, and for decorative reasons, by exposing a portion of the wall piers and ceiling beams. Lighting is by means of concealed lamps or gas tubes in the soffit of the structural element over the piers, and in a small vertical drop along the line of the exposed ceiling beams.

Auditorium of the Trans-Lux theatre on Madison Avenue, New York City; Thomas W. Lamb, architect. Soft light from rows of lamps in the sides of the hung central portion of the ceiling is reflected from curved surfaces at top of the side walls, permitting a relatively high level of illumination during performances, as required by this type of house showing short subjects.

DECORATING WITH LIGHT

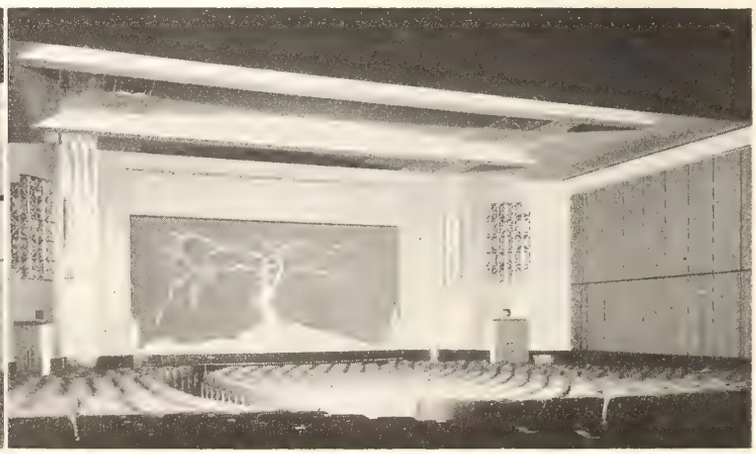
LIGHT PLAYS a leading role in the decorative schemes of theatres today. In the auditorium of the Thalia theatre, for example, a soft flood of light pours down from coves concealing lamp bulbs in the walls. The light is reflected twice from the dull white surfaces within the coves, which softens it. (The construction of these coves was shown by a detail sketch in the October 20, 1934, issue of BETTER THEATRES.) There also are trough reflectors on the ceiling. Such light sources are simple to make and can be constructed by contractors practically anywhere.

The walls of the Sutton theatre are of unpainted plaster and light is projected upward upon them from metal trough reflectors. In both the Thalia and the Sutton the soft glow of light on the walls is very agreeable.

An excellent method of illumination from rows of lamps concealed in the sides of the broad central hung ceiling and projecting their light upon the curved surfaces of coves at the tops of the side walls is shown in the accompanying photograph of the Translux Madison theatre in New York City. Thomas W. Lamb was the architect.

Reflector lighting directed upon the walls, as in the examples just cited, is especially well suited to the illumination of motion picture theatre auditoriums. It delivers the light just where it does the most good, showing the wall treatment in spite of the low level of illumination throughout the room, and serving as an important element in the decorative scheme. Also, the quality of the light, its direction and location can be such as to produce no substantial interference with a clear view of the picture on the screen. The amount of light from such sources can, of course, be dimmed to any degree desired.

It is marvelous what richness and beauty of decorative effect can be attained by the proper use of light on plain plaster walls, especially when colored light is used. In the Sutton theatre, with plain unfinished plaster walls and simple, well-designed trough lighting, very beautiful effects are attained. The richness of the colored light effects may well be enhanced by painting the plaster surfaces of the walls or ceilings in a soft, light, neutral color, such as on the main surfaces in the immense Music Hall in Radio City.



In this auditorium, the side walls and ceilings are merged in colossal, plain arched surfaces of acoustic plaster that span the auditorium from side to side in overlapping cross-bands. Rows of electric bulbs (red, amber and blue in reflectors) are concealed in the overlapping edges of the sections, and their light shines out towards the stage (away from the eyes of the audience) upon the slightly sloping plaster surfaces adjacent to them.

The paint used on the plaster was chosen to avoid any undue reduction of the sound-absorbing quality of the acoustical plaster, and the coloring is the result of especially careful study and experimentation for the purpose of producing a surface that would light up with the greatest possible degree of richness and vibrancy under light from the lamps of different colors. Though it may, perhaps, best be described as a light grayish-buff color in general effect, it is a blend showing, upon close inspection, a wide variety of such related colors as browns, yellows and reds, with traces of the cool colors as well, all united without losing their identity by working them into and upon a background of light neutral color. This enables the surface to reflect with vibrancy any colored light.

Where the surfaces are not at a great distance from the eye, there is not the same need for this color treatment, but the

Two auditoriums featuring lighting in the decorative scheme are pictured below. In the lefthand view is shown the Thalia in New York City, designed by Ben Schlanger, New York architect. idea can well be adapted to the painting of walls or ceilings in theatres of moderate size, these areas to be used as surfaces upon which to project colored light for combined illumination and decoration.

In the Music Hall, when the amber lamps are on, the whole great domed surface of the interior appears as though of gold, pebbled enough to give it a lively sparkle, but free from any suggestion of garishness. When the other colors are on, the effects are also of remarkable depth, luminosity and vibrancy. The sensation is more like that of being in a huge tent than in a massive structure, for there is a feeling of lightness, freedom and openness, due very largely to the lighting of these surfaces.

ILLUMINATION LEVEL

Much more light than is now found in most motion picture theatre auditoriums during the showing of the pictures is both desirable and possible. Of course, you can-

II.—LIGHTING IN TODAY'S TREND

By FRANCIS M. FALGE

THE AUDITORIUM and its entertainment are the culmination of the theatre's attempt to please patrons. After every effort has been made to attract people to the theatre, the success of these efforts stands or falls on the impression that the theatregoer receives during the two hours or so he spends inside the auditorium. And because this impression will be the determining factor in how often he returns, it is of utmost importance that everything possible be done to satisfy him.

Although it is true that the picture is the principal factor in the entertainment, nevertheless the appeal of the theatre must be built around more than just the pictures offered, because in many cases other houses have access to the same pictures. It is the plus-value of other attractions added to good pictures which induce people to come to your theatre rather than to go to somebody else's. And this appeal must be built on beauty that is more than skin deep; attractiveness and smartness, warmth and good cheer, comfort and healthfulness, and freedom from fears and cares must characterize all parts of the theatre. Lighting is of prime importance in all of these "patron-appeal" factors.

To provide utilitarian light for a theatre auditorium would seem to be a simple matter, but it is a noticeable fact that some of our reputedly fine theatres actually offend their patrons and make it difficult for them to find their seats because of too great a contrast between the lighting in the foyer and in the darkened auditorium. This means that patrons must be carefully and personally conducted to seats, for if they are left to make their own way there is likelihood of dissatisfaction and danger of accident. To eliminate this dissatisfaction and its intangible costs, sufficient light should be provided so that the eyes will accommodate themselves without difficulty, and yet there should not be so much light that the movements of other people become distracting.

Satisfactory lighting in the auditorium has the following advantages:

1. Freedom from eye strain while watching the pictures.
2. Best picture value through freedom from spilled light.
3. Discouragement of undue familiarity.
4. Satisfactory accommodation of eyes when entering the auditorium.
5. Reduced cost of usher service.
6. Increased speed and ease in emptying and filling the auditorium.
7. Fewer accidents and consequently reduced insurance costs.
8. Light for cleaning purposes.

The decorative effectiveness of the lighting in the auditorium is more or less difficult to determine, and yet attractively decorated interiors have proved of great value in creating patron satisfaction. It might be said that decorative features bring people back to the theatre, whereas the lack of certain utilitarian lighting features often keep people away. This discussion is concerned with the newer lighting developments in relation to these phases of decoration.

Cove lighting represents our most familiar type of indirect lighting and it usually consists of lamps concealed in reflecting troughs. Considerable light is trapped, and as a result these systems have an efficiency of light utilization of about 20%. Cove surfaces for greatest efficiency should be light in tone, reflecting at least 70% of the light, and the concealing lip should be kept white. Where spottiness is to be avoided, the ceiling should have a mat finish. Good reflectors increase the efficiency of the cove to 25% or 30% and make color effects more easily obtainable with low-cost standard lamps.

Ceiling coffers, with lamps concealed in a centrally-located member, offer a variation from the more usual cove forms and give, as well, a modern feeling. This system requires fewer lamps than does the cove system, and the efficiency of such units is approximately 50%, although this is affected by the reflection value of the ceiling as well as the suspended members.

Multiplanes of colored light, such as illustrated by the dominant luminaire of the auditorium shown in Figure 1, provide an indirect system with maximum contrasts which serve to accentuate the color of the neighboring planes. This same method is very flexible, and can be used to advantage as strips in a ceiling or sidewall treatment, or as an offset treatment to feature the proscenium arch, or as an outline for the screen. The efficiency of such a system varies considerably with the openings provided, and may be anywhere from 20% to 50%.

Silhouette lines which are featured as a decorative element in the complete design, are well illustrated in the Titania Palast Theatre, Berlin (Figure 2). Here the architect has boldly accepted the channels needed to carry the lamps as decorative elements. Lamps in the channels are spaced approximately twice as far apart as they are from the surface, and this, together with a mat ceiling, produces a completely smooth-lighted effect. The inside of the channels is a good reflecting white finish, which, with the high reflection factor of the ceiling, produces an efficiency of about 50%. Three color circuits in each of the rectangular shapes, independently controlled by dimmers, provide for an almost unlimited play of color harmonies.

In general, direct lighting is more efficient than indirect lighting. This is true especially where walls and ceiling are of dark tones and do not reflect much light. However, for the best ultimate results efficiency must be balanced with decorative effectiveness.

Suspended luminaires with varying degrees of ornament, have been characteristic of direct lighting practice in the past. Sometimes the complete decorative scheme of the auditorium has been built around one immense luminaire. This is by no means inexpensive and requires high auditorium

III.—PLANNING FOR SAFETY

By J. T. KNIGHT, JR.

IN ANY CONSIDERATION of the remodeling of the auditorium, careful thought should be given to the safety of patrons. That accidents of all kind have increased in theatres, both in number and in sums paid in settlement, is substantiated by the decided increase in Public Liability rates by all insurance companies during the past few years.

It is very much worth while to submit proposed changes to the engineer of your insurance company for suggestion and recommendations. This is a service which any company will be glad to render, and often it saves time and money at a later date. Of course, changes in any theatre must be approved by the local or State building department, but such departments are governed by a fixed set of ordinances, whereas the insurance company has a much broader background and experience to draw upon.

Figure 5, illustrating discussion of lighting by Francis M. Falge. Sketch indicating possible solution of a balcony soffit problem. A cavity has been arranged so that light from a continuous row of Lumiline lamps is not objectionable to persons seated beneath the balcony, while the edging with a line of colored light contributes to the decorative scheme. E. F. Lumber, designer.

As fire is perhaps the most dreaded catastrophe confronting theatre operation, any changes whatever should include improving existing fire protection. The proscenium wall is supposed to be a fire barrier. It is to the theatre's advantage that it be made so. A steel and asbestos curtain, or a heavy asbestos curtain, will go a long way toward really making the proscenium a fire stop. Frequently the fire fighting equipment—extinguishers, hoses, axes and pike poles—are badly located. While making changes it is advisable to locate such equipment in the most convenient places.

Perhaps the most satisfactory plan is to have cabinets inset in the walls. Each cabinet should have a hose connected up, a fire extinguisher, possibly an axe, and a pike pole on hangers just outside the cabinet. In many cities glass curtains are permitted on the inside of the cabinet doors. The cabinets should be lighted on the inside with a red light, and such a light should be on the theatre emergency circuit. Fire escapes, exit doors and panic bolts should of course be carefully reconditioned.

It may be necessary to rehang some doors so that they swing freely, others may have to be replaced. The panic-bolt hardware should certainly be brought up-to-date, as some types of old equipment are not reliable in their action. The passageways or aisles leading to exit doors should be clear of all obstructions; hazardous steppings in front of exits should be replaced by ramps

AIR CONDITIONING

THE six factors* vital to year-round Air Conditioning demand even more exact timing and coordination than the crack squad. Only under the guiding hand of automatic control, they reach real effectiveness, with resultant increase in patronage during the day as well as in the evening.

Minneapolis-Honeywell, pioneer and leader for fifty years in the development of Automatic Controls, manufactures the Modutrol System, which will automatically control any Air Conditioning installation, large or small. The great versatility of this system makes it readily applicable to any standard or specialized installation. Under Modutrol guidance, that installation will operate at its maximum efficiency.

Minneapolis-Honeywell has available a brief informative book on the vital subject of Air Conditioning and its Automatic Control. It is a clear explanation of a subject, the uses and terms of which are often misunderstood.

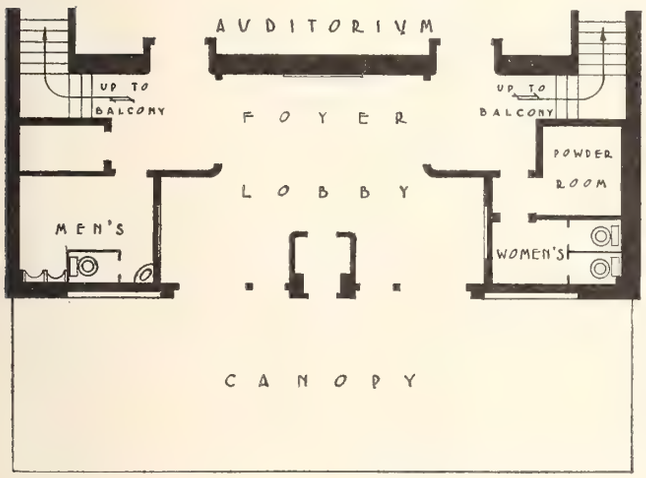
FRONT AND LOBBY OF THE BANNER THEATRE IN CHICAGO PRIOR TO REMODELING

THE BANNER THEATRE in Chicago was a dilapidated relic a quarter of a century old—going back to far distant day of the motion picture—when purchased by Mr. Abe Gumbiner, well known Chicago exhibitor, in 1934. Striking, therefore, has been the change achieved through remodeling.

The greatest problems confronting the architect, Mark D. Kalischer of Chicago, lay in the revision of the front and forward area. The old front consisted in a series of storm doors set out on the sidewalk with a large display case in the middle, and behind this was a 7-foot pier which supported the front of the building. Inside the entrance was a lobby 48 feet wide and about 8 feet deep, with the entire central portion occupied by a huge ticket booth. Next to the lobby was a very narrow passage that served as a foyer. This opened on to very small toilet rooms at both end.

The immediate problem, as described by the architect, was to provide from this antiquated layout, good traffic conditions, adequate display facilities, and the necessary sanitary conditions. After that the purely architectural elements could be applied.

Accordingly, the entire front portion of the theatre, from the sidewalk as far as the auditorium, had to be rebuilt. First of all, the large pier in the center of the front was removed and a box office built in this location. The long foyer area as eliminated and replaced with an open foyer just to the rear of the lobby, while two small foyers were added, each opening on to the auditorium, a stairway to the balcony, and a toilet room. The toilet rooms were built in by partitioning off a portion of either side of the lobby.



The front was covered with light gray Carrara glass with a base course of black glass. A circular opening in the center of the front forms the box office window. On either side of this are three doors, which are flanked by stainless steel display cases sunk flush into the face of the building and illuminated by concealed gas-tube lighting.

The new marquee was designed as an integral part of the architecture, with an attraction board below. Rows of flashing gas-tube lighting travel around the attraction board.

The lobby-foyer area was changed in plan (see accompanying drawings) to meet present-day needs in traffic and lounge facilities. The lobby was treated very simply with plain plaster surfaces decorated in contrasting colors—chrome yellow, royal purple, orange and silver. At both sides of the lobby large display cases are sunk flush with the wall, illuminated with concealed gas-tube lighting. Lobby illumination is accomplished with flush units designed as architectural elements.

Facing the entrance is a large circular mirror, which acts to make the small lobby area seem larger and also forms a focal point from which alternate bands of white and purple terrazzo form concentric curves throughout the lobby floor. The terrazzo bands are separated by white metal strips.

The photographic reproductions and floor plan on the opposite page, showing the old Banner theatre as it originally was, are directly contrasted with the results of remodeling pictured on this page. The box office was placed at the center, with a circular ticket window, a change permitted by the removal of a structural pier. The entire appearance was transformed by the application of Carrara architectural glass and the erection of a marquee as an integral part of the architectural scheme. Instead of the former large lobby, there is now a smaller lobby adjoining the open foyer.

BANNER FRONT AND LOBBY AFTER REMODELING. MARK D. KALISCHER, ARCHITECT

The new toilet rooms provided have tiled walls, terrazzo floors and metal partitions.

The auditorium was also given an entirely new decorative treatment, along with reseating and recarpeting. The color scheme consists in vermilions and siennas contrasting with silver and cerulean blue. Along the side walls are ten vertical lighting troughs, each approximately 24 feet. Spaced at intervals and inverted, these provide the auditorium illumination as well as contribute to the decorative scheme. Concealed in them are red and blue gas tubing together with white incandescent lamps, and these light sources may be controlled to illuminate the auditorium with red, blue, purple or white light.

In commenting on his approach to the problems offered by this remodeling project, the architect asserts certain general principles: In the design of a theatre the first consideration is always the plan. Is it efficient? Does it fulfill the requirements for which it was intended? In answer to these questions: The plan should be formed so as to provide for the efficient, convenient handling of patronage; it should provide ample means for advertising the current and coming attractions; and it should make toilet facilities that are clean and pleasantly environed readily accessible.

The drawing showing the new floor plan indicates how the old lobby-foyer space was "robbed" to provide for modern traffic and toilet requirements, with no interruptions between entrance and auditorium.

THE LEGAL AUTHORITY OF A MANAGER

By LEO T. PARKER

Concluding a discussion begun in the April 6th issue on personal liability in acts performed on behalf of the employer

CONSIDERABLE discussion has arisen from time to time whether or not a theatre corporation is liable for contracts made by its president without proper authority of the board of directors. The courts have consistently held that a theatre corporation is bound by any and all contracts signed by its president, particularly where such contracts relate to the corporation business.

CASE

For illustration, in Browne v Hinton (18 S. W. [2d] 369, Ft. Smith, Ark., it was disclosed that the president of a corporation signed a release for certain money owed to the corporation. Controversy arose whether the release was valid, but the court held it valid, saying:

DECISION

"Browne was president and general manager of appellant (corporation). This gave him authority to execute contracts which were necessary to conduct the business of appellant. The release was a contract which was necessary to carry on the business, and Browne had the authority to execute it."

MANAGERS' AUTHORITY

Moreover, a corporation, or private theatre owner, is liable for all contracts made by the general manager, or manager of a department, so long as such contracts are within the scope of his authority. Generally speaking, a contract is valid and binding, although the manager was not specially authorized to enter into the agreement, providing it is within his general authority and relates to conduct of employer's business.

CASE

For instance, in the late case of Municipal v Zachry (294 Pac. 114, Muskogee, Okla.), it was disclosed that a corporation general manager employed an attorney to represent the corporation in legal matters. The corporation refused to pay the bill presented by the attorney on the grounds that the manager had exceeded his authority when entering into a contract of this nature without having the approval of the board of directors.

The attorney proved that the manager was in charge of the affairs of the company at that location. Therefore, the court promptly held the corporation liable for services rendered by the attorney, saying:

DECISION

"The president and general manager or general manager of a corporation has the implied authority to employ counsel to represent it in litigation, instituted for or against the corporation or in an advisory capacity, without special action of the board of directors authorizing it."

PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE

THE LEGAL question often has arisen whether or not a theatre corporation is liable on contracts for purchase of real estate made by its general manager without direct authority of the board of directors. The courts have held that where the power of a general manager is not limited, he has implied authority to bind the corporation by contracts for purchase of real estate made in good faith and within the scope of the corporation's business.

CASE

For example, in Warren v Littleton (168 S. E. 226, North Carolina), it was disclosed that a general manager of a corporation entered into a contract for the purchase of real estate to be used by the corporation.

Later it was contended by the counsel for the corporation that the contract was not valid for the reason that the manager had no authority from the board of directors to make the contract. However, since it was shown that the board of directors had not limited the power of the general manager to transact business of this nature for the corporation, the court held the corporation liable on the contract, and said:

DECISION

"A general manager, if his authority is not limited, has power to bind the corporation by contracts made in good faith and within the corporate power, without any resolution of the board of directors expressly authorizing the contracts. . . . Upon the undisputed evidence we are of opinion that the authorization of the directors was not essential to the validity of the contract."

CASE

Also, in Cook v Ruston Company (127 So. 347, Ruston La., it was also disclosed that an indemnity agreement was signed by the general manager in furtherance of the business interest and for the promotion of the welfare of the corporation. Later the corporation attempted to avoid liability on the bond contending that a general manager has no legal right to obligate a corporation on a bond. However, the court held the bond valid, saying:

"The governing principle with reference to the general power of a manager is that where he has the actual charge and management of the business, by the appointment of or with the knowledge of the directors, the corporation will be bound by his acts and contracts which are necessary or incident in the course of the business, without other evidence of actual authority."

Therefore, it is quite apparent that a corporation is liable for all contracts made by a manager, with respect to the ordinary character of the theatre business, provided the other party to the contract believed the manager had proper authority to make the contract and the corporation officials did not notify the complaining party that the manager's authority was limited.

However, there are many acts which the law does not imply that a manager has authority to do in connection with the business, or department of the business he is employed to manage, unless he is given full control and operation of the whole business. And, although the manager is given complete authority to operate the business, the employer is not liable if the manager borrows money for purposes other than for strict conduct and furtherance of the theatre business. For illustration, the corporation or employer is not liable for a statement or contract made by a manager, unless such statement or contract is connected with the business being operated by the manager. Therefore, a corporation would not be liable for a contract made by a manager which the other party could by using ordinary care determine was not connected with the business or department of the business being operated by the manager.

FACTS INDICATE CONTRACT VALIDITY

VERY OFTEN theatre corporations and owners have been held liable on contracts not authorized by a proper official or employe. This situation may exist where a Court implies a valid contract, although no direct proof is given showing that any one has agreed to assume such obligation.

CASE

For instance, in the recent case of Western Theatre Equipment (3 P. [2d] 1003, Washington), it was shown that a theatre corporation had possession of certain equipment. The theatre corporation did not orally or in writing directly assume obligation to pay for the equipment. However, knowing that the equipment had not been paid for, the theatre corporation paid the owner approximately $1,000 and used it.

The owner of the equipment sued the theatre corporation for the balance which the former contended was due. The counsel argued that since the corporation officials had not signed a contract to pay for the equipment it was not liable. The lower court held the theatre corporation not liable, but the higher court reversed this verdict, and said:

DECISION

"If a person conducts himself in such manner as to lead the other party to believe that he has made a contract of his own, and his acts are only explicable upon that theory, he will not be permitted afterwards to repudiate any of its obligations."

DAMAGING ACTS OF EMPLOYES

ALL EMPLOYES are legally either general or special agents of their employers. While a corporation is liable for all acts of its general agents which relate to the employment, yet it is responsible for only such acts that a special agent performs within the actual scope of the authority given him. For example, a bookkeeper, cashier, usher, doorman, or a janitor is a special agent whose implied authority extends no further than to perform the exact duties assigned to him. So, therefore, a theatre corporation which employs these employes is not liable for any act, statement or contract outside the regular scope of the employment.

Obviously, however, a theatre owner is liable for acts of either a manager, a doorman, or usher who uses force or otherwise wrongfully ejects a theatre patron, causes his arrest, or the like.

CASE

For illustration, in McLoughlin v New York (169 N. E. 277, New York), it was disclosed that two theatre employes accused a patron of committing a theft. One of the employes caused the patron to be placed under arrest. Later it was proved that the patron was not guilty of the theft and he sued the employer for damages. The court held the theatre owner liable for false arrest, and said:

"Private persons may not make an arrest except for a crime committed in their presence, or for a felony which has been committed although not in their presence. . . . It follows that a cause of action for false imprisonment accrues whenever a person is arrested and detained by one not an officer acting without a warrant when no crime has in fact been committed by him, no matter with what good faith the party who caused the arrest acted."

On the other hand, neither a theatre owner nor a theatre corporation is liable when a manager, or other employe, acts outside the scope of the employment. While it is true that the general authority of a theatre manager cannot be limited by the employer giving any private order or direction not known to the party dealing with the manager, yet the employer may limit the manager's authority by notifying persons accustomed to transacting business with the manager. Moreover, an employer is not liable for any act of an employe which apparently is outside the scope of authority.

THE RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS

By M. MARVIN BERGER
Member New York Bar

WE CONCLUDE the current series of articles on corporation law with a description of the rights of stockholders. These rights are enjoyed by common stockholders, and unless otherwise provided by the charter or by law, by the preferred stockholders as well. Among the most important of these rights are:

1. The right to share, in proportion to the amount of stock held, in the net profits or surplus of the corporation at such times and in such amounts as may be authorized by the board of directors. Such net profits or surplus when set aside for distribution by the directors are known as dividends and may take the form of cash or new or unissued stock.

2. The right (described in detail in the April 6th issue of Better Theatres) to subscribe to new issues or increases of capital stock in proportion to the amount of stock held at the time of such increases.

3. Upon the winding up of the corporation, to share in the assets remaining after the corporation's debts have been paid, in proportion to stock held.

4. To inspect the corporation's books and records at a proper time and place, providing the inspection is sought in good faith and for a proper purpose. A corporation, refusing without good cause, to permit inspection of its books by a stockholder, may be ordered by the courts to submit its books for scrutiny by the stockholder and may become liable to pay a fine and other penalties for the unwarranted refusal.

5. Upon the corporation declining to do so, a stockholder is permitted to bring legal action on behalf of himself and other stockholders where the directors, officers or other stockholders are guilty of fraud, mismanagement or oppression resulting in injury to the corporation or stockholders.

6. Among the most important privileges of stockholders is that of attending at stockholders' meetings and voting for directors and upon any other matters coming before the meeting.

Corporations are required by their charters or by law to hold an annual stockholders' meeting. Unless otherwise permitted by law, the annual meeting must take place in the state where the company is incorporated. At such annual meetings, in addition to the election of directors, the stockholders receive the reports of officers and vote upon any other matters which may require action by the stockholders such as amendment of the charter or dissolution of the company. In cases of necessity, by vote of the board of directors, special meetings of the stockholders may also be called, in which case appropriate notice of such special meetings must be given the stockholders.

To constitute a quorum at a stockholders' meeting, it is usually required that a majority of the holders of outstanding stock be present either in person or by proxy. A proxy is a power of attorney authorizing another person to attend the meeting in place of the stockholder and to vote the stockholder's stock.

Each stockholder is entitled to one vote for each share of stock held by him. For example, at an annual meeting at which five directors are to be elected, the holder of one share of stock is entitled to one vote for each director to be elected. In order to give a minority among stockholders a place on the board of directors, some states permit cumulative voting. Under the cumulative system, the holder of one share of stock at a meeting at which five directors are to be elected may cast one vote apiece for each of five candidates or may cast all five votes for one director.

To permit the management of the corporation to remain in office for a longer period of time than the one year ensuing between annual elections, a voting trust is often set up. By means of this arrangement, the stockholders participating in the trust place their stock in the hands of trustees for a period of time and the trustees are given the power to vote the stock so entrusted to them, either without restriction or subject to the limitations which may be provided by the voting trust agreement. In some states the period during which such a trust may continue in operation varies from five to ten years. In other states no specified time limit is set up but the trust may continue in operation for a reasonable length of time. In still other states, no voting trusts are permitted.

CHARACTERISTICS OF SUPREX CARBONS

By HARRY RUBIN

The first of a series of articles describing the operating features of Suprex illumination

SUPREX CARBONS differ materially from all other common types. They are truly high-intensity carbons and therefore have operating characteristics which are in some respects similar to the older and better known so called Hi- and Hi-Low carbons. The Suprex high-intensity carbons, however, are burned with both carbons in the same horizontal plane, and the positive is not rotated, whereas the regular high-intensity positive carbon is usually rotated, and its corresponding negative is usually burned at an angle with respect to the positive.

Both the positive and negative Suprex carbon is copper plated, which copper plate, or shell, has the effect of increasing the mechanical strength of the carbon, lowering its resistance and preventing penciling at current densities that might otherwise render the carbon useless. The need for additional mechanical strength is occasioned by the fact that Suprex carbons are small in diameter. The need for lowering the resistance is due to the fact that with the small area of the carbon and the high current density at the arc, there would be a considerable voltage drop between the point where the carbon was clamped and the arc, resulting in considerable wattage loss, and requiring a higher voltage to supply the arc. Without the copper coating it would be difficult to make proper contact between the carbon and its holder, and further wattage losses would be had due to contact resistance. Were it not for the copper plating the carbon would pencil rapidly, due to the high current density at which the Suprex carbon is operated.

The Suprex positive carbon differs materially from the Suprex negative carbon. The positive has a very large core with respect to the size of the carbon as a whole, while the negative has a very small core with respect to the size of the carbon.

The core of the positive Suprex carbon, I am informed, is composed of several of the alkaline earth metals such as calcium, magnesium and cerium. The carburetion period of the core material is quite long as compared with other common core materials, and as this highly efficient core fuses in the arc, an extremely white brilliant and high intensity crater is formed.

The negative Suprex carbon also plays an important part in keeping the arc stable, quiet and at high intensity. It is therefore of great importance that the proper combination of carbons be used.

ECONOMICAL OPERATION

I know of cases due to unfamiliarity and lack of experience with the burning of Suprex carbons where two negatives are being used as a trim, also where an 8-millimeter low-intensity negative carbon is being used with Suprex positives, also where two positives are being used as a trim, and also plenty of cases where the wrong size of Suprex carbon is being used for the current being used at the arc.

In this latter case there is a mistaken idea of economy, the belief being that by using, for instance, an 8-millimeter Suprex positive carbon at an amperage of 32 to 50 amperes and the consequent slower consumption of this (its rating being 56 to 65 amperes), there is a saving of carbon expense. If a real test were to be made, however, it would be found that there is a loss and not a saving, because more light would be obtained from the same amount of current burned by a smaller carbon of lower current rating, and the carbon itself would cost less, although consumed at a faster rate than the larger carbon.

For instance, the 6-millimeter positive carbon in combination with the 5-millimeter negative, and burning 32 amperes, will give more light than the 8 and 7 combination burning at 40 to 50 amperes, because the 8 and 7 combination does not burn right at that low amperage. There would be more linear inches of carbon burned in the 6 and 5 case at 32 amperes than there would be if the 8 and 7 carbons were burned at 32 amperes, but the light would be much better in the first instance, so in order to equal that light with the 8-millimeter positive, the current would have to be raised to a point where the very slight difference in carbon cost would be lost several times over in added current consumption.

There is no saving to be made in this direction, and the carbons are made in several sizes and current ratings to suit the varying requirements of screen illumination.

Operating carbons at ampere rates lower than their recommended rating is like buying a 10-ton truck to haul loads that will never exceed one ton.

For arc currents of from 32 to 40 amperes, the proper trim is 6-millimeter positive and 5-millimeter negative. For 42 to 50 amperes, 7-mm. positive and 6-mm. negative. For 56 to 65 amperes, 8-mm. positive and 6.5-mm. negative.

If a lower arc current than the lowest rating recommended for any given size of carbon is used, the crater will be very shallow and the light will not be uniform in color. If higher arc current than the highest rating recommended for that size is used, the carbon consumption will be excessive, and the light unsteady.

CONSUMPTION RATES

The negative Suprex carbon burns at a much slower rate than the positive. At the respective lower limits of current range the positive is consumed a little more than twice as fast as the negative. The rate of carbon consumption is substantially the same for all the trims at corresponding limits of their current range. For instance, the positive carbon consumption for the three sizes given at their lower current rating is 6.5 to 6.75 inches per hour, and at the higher rating is 13½ inches per hour. The negative carbon consumption remains practically constant within the limits of the rating of the carbons and is 3¾ to 4 inches per hour, except in the case of the 6½-mm. carbon, where at 65-ampere rate the consumption increases to 4½ inches per hour, from the 3¾ inches consumption at 58 amperes.

The burning ratio of the carbons, one to the other, therefore is different for every amperage, due to the fact that the positive carbon is consumed faster as the amperage is raised, while the negative consumption remains practically unchanged. This characteristic makes it almost imperative that there be separate feed screws for both positive and negative carbons in order to set the lead screw ratio one to the other to suit the average current at the arc.

PROPER LENGTHS

The length of the arc is quite important in the Suprex arc and should be kept as near as possible to a length of 9/32 to 5/16 of an inch. However, if the positive crater is kept at a constant distance from the reflector (the proper focal distance), then the arc length can be varied considerably without appreciably affecting the light on the screen, or the light distribution.

An arc length too great in the order of ⅜-inch, will cause a wavering of the arc, making a noticeable fluctuation on the screen. Too short an arc in the order of 3/16 of an inch causes a reddish carbide tip to form on the negative carbon, which will sometimes make it difficult to restrike the arc. Also, too short an arc will cause the arc to sputter and give off soot.

VOLTAGE AND CURRENT

The voltage of the arc will depend upon the current used, but will be found to be from 30 to 40 volts at the two extremes. Under good average conditions the voltage will be 30 to 31 volts at 40 amperes and will increase about one volt for every five amperes. The voltage range on the 5- and 6-mm. trim is usually 30 to 33 volts; on the 6- and 7-mm. trim, 30 to 35 volts; and on the 6.5- and 8-mm. trim, 31 to 39 volts.

The depth of the crater increases with increases of arc current, with a resultant material gain in useful light. For instance, an increase in arc current of 10 amperes, representing an increase of 25% in current, gives an increase in useful light of almost 50%. Every increase in amperage from the minimum rating to the maximum gives a marked increase in light. This increase in light, of course, is accompanied by an increase in wattage consumed at the arc, and an increase in carbon consumption. From the standpoint of the light produced in proportion to the wattage consumed, this Suprex projection is the most efficient light source yet produced.

In the next article, which will deal with the Suprex lamps, the effect of a magnetic field upon the arc, effect of draft, importance of perfect focus, pitting effect, will be given.

[The so-called Suprex arc and its attendant technique represents the greatest advance that projection has known in many years. It permits the small and medium-sized theatre to place upon the screen the motion picture in full pictorial quality. This series will include a discussion of new developments in rectification. The author, Harry Rubin, is well known in projection circles. He is in charge of projection for Paramount Theatres.—THE EDITOR.]

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES

METER LOCATION AT OBSERVATION PORT

ONE OF THE highly important phases of projection work that has been sadly neglected is the matter of keeping one man at the side of the projector every moment it is working while an audience is in the theatre. Failure by projectionists to pay attention has had very large influence in displacing the second man and establishing the present one-man room. Projectionists themselves fought attempts of local authorities and of theatre managers to compel them to remain beside the projector, where by every rule of common sense and good practice they belonged—and well knew they belonged. So far as I know, there has been but one director of projection that has compelled his men to observe that rule strictly, and he only did so in one of the theatres under his charge.

A portion of this rather idiotic procedure is, I believe, chargeable directly to failure to establish a definite working position there by assembling, so far as is possible, all the various meters, etc., which should be under the observation of the projectionist on a panel board beside the observation port, the meters having black faces with white needles of a size to be readily observed in the semi-darkness necessary at that point.

While it may not be practical either to remove meters from the various equipments or to install duplicates as above suggested, I do believe projection light source voltmeters and ammeters should be beside each observation port, and such other meters as it is practical to locate there—not below, but beside, where their presence will serve to locate an obvious, definite working position for the projectionist.

As it now is, there is a meter here, one there and one somewhere else, all of them too small to be readily seen. This has the psychological effect of distributing the working position all over the room, and in general that is exactly what happens. The projectionist is just anywhere he may happen to be.

Now I don't pretend to say what I propose would cure this situation, but at least it would do two things—it would place at least some of the meters directly on view when the projectionist is in working position, and it would have a decided tendency to establish a working position.

Once more I take the liberty of suggesting to such unions as may still have two-man rooms under their jurisdiction, that unless they wake up, get busy and induce one of the men to be at all times beside the working projector, sooner or later they may lose even these two-men rooms. The manager enters the room, finds the projector motor running the whole show, with one man perhaps reading a paper and the other doing something else, and his very natural inclination is to say, "What's the use of two men?" And the situation, as he sees it, places right on his side. I warned projectionists of this many, many times in the past. They gave no heed. Today a large percentage of the rooms are one-man rooms, and that, in large measure is the reason.

CHEATING THE CUSTOMERS

FROM A gentleman who "knows his onions" in projection and who has no reason to misstate matters, comes this letter:

"I witnessed a *mis*performance in a small town about 40 miles out on Long Island recently. The theatre charges 50 cent admission and caters to well-to-do patrons. The theatre itself is beautiful. Certainly the public has every right to expect good presentation of its pictures.

"As a matter of fact, I have not in recent years seen anything quite so bad. The screen lighting was unsteady, the picture badly discolored, and the light was off, for considerable periods, four times during the showing of the feature. In any store in the land a customer would have the right to demand return of his money after receiving such defective merchandise. It is much the same as being served with shoddy clothing after paying a price presumed to command the best.

"I do not know who was to blame, but certainly the condition was disgraceful and inexcusable. Possibly some day the public will learn to go to the box office and demand the return of its money when pictures are thus man-handled."

After such a performance as is here described, any management having the elements of fair play and decency would not wait to have the money demanded, but apologize to the audience and invite the patrons to go to the box office and get it! This correspondent is quite correct. A theatre that foists upon its patrons pictures so poorly presented as is here described, or poorly presented at all for that matter, is selling shoddy goods.

If it so happened that on this particular occasion something was radically wrong, and the show all right at other times, then it certainly was up to the management to return the money. Possibly the management was not to blame. I don't know about that. However, I certainly do know the people who paid half-a-dollar each to see that show were not to blame.

If, however, it be common practice, it certainly will kill the business of that theatre. It is a costly error to pesent motion pictures in any but the best possible way. Wide-awake exhibitors have learned that costly lesson so well that in later days it is very seldom I see anything very radically wrong with projection, though in many cases it might be somewhat improved. Sound, however, still is in many cases pretty punk. Managers and projectionists

RICHARDSON'S New BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A PRACTICAL GUIDE TO GOOD OPERATING AND QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTING

A new Blue Book by Richardson is always an event of signal importance to the motion picture industry. It is being issued at this time to meet the truly urgent demand of thousands of users of the old Blue Books for an accurate, modern evaluation of the changes and refinements in the art and science of sound reproduction and projection including all the apparatus. Richardson's expert knowledge of the craft he has taught and followed for more than three decades makes this latest treatise, in the opinion of leading authorities, the most comprehensive, most useful projection manual ever published.

700 Pages of Text, Charts and Data

The new Blue Book contains nearly 700 pages and 153 illustrations—photographs and schematics of every description. It is 6x9 in size with large readable type for easy visibility in the projection room under all conditions. It is entirely original from cover to cover, not a line of type from any of the many previous editions being used. Its low price of $5 and its handiness in one volume are among the many innovations.

Author Will Autograph First 200 Copies

Because of the wide demand from projectionists and theatre managers for autographed copies of the new BLUE BOOK, Mr. Richardson has consented to autograph 200 books to go to the first 200 buyers. The prompt return of the coupon will reward you with one of these highly prized autographed copies.

1 IN ONE HANDY VOLUME
The new Bluebook is complete in one handy volume. It is a great improvement over the former expensive and cumbersome three-volume sets.

2 COMPLETE and UP-TO-DATE
The new Bluebook does a three-fold job: (1) it gives a detailed description of the construction, wiring and functioning of every piece of sound and projection apparatus used in a modern projection room. (2) It gives all the instructions for the operation and maintenance of this equipment and (3) it contains a complete trouble-shooting department as a first-aid in breakdowns.

3 QUICK-FINDING INDEX
An extremely simple but comprehensive indexing system makes the new Blue Book a truly great aid to working projectionists. Whatever problem comes up in the day's routine is covered on the instant with hardly more than the twirl of your thumb. Projectionists of long experience in the projection room will be first to appreciate this remarkable time-saver.

4 QUICK TROUBLE-SHOOTER
And it is, within its 700 pages, a practical trouble-shooter, which alone entitles it to a place in every projectionists tool kit.

Use Graf Lenses
for Perfect Projection

YOU are sure of perfect screen and sound reproduction when you use General Scientific Graf lenses. They have quality built into them by a combination of persistent laboratory research, the finest optical glass obtainable and workmanship reflecting old world technique enhanced by modern manufacturing methods. Operators are continually changing to Graf to eliminate projection difficulties.

The highest grade projection lens is the Graf Super Lumo which is made in half size (series 2) and quarter size (series 1). These lenses represent an improvement on the Petzvall system and they have been developed and patented entirely by Graf opticians. Their advantage is due to a short back focus which results in collecting all of the light emitted through the gate and transmitting it to the screen with practically no losses.

High quality Graf lenses are also available for projectors designed for the Petzvall type lens. They are manufactured to the highest degree of efficiency permitted by this optical system and are furnished in quarter size (series 1) and eighth size (series 0).

To complete the service in this field of optics, General Scientific repairs, reconditions and changes the focal length of lenses of every type. Hundreds of lenses considered useless by their owners have been reconditioned in the Graf Service Department and returned in condition to give new lens service.

General Scientific also makes the famous Lumotron Photo Electric Cells which are giving superlative service in theatres all over the country.

General Scientific products are distributed by all theatre supply dealers. Ask them for information about Graf lenses. Write direct to us for a complete price list, or advice on any problem of motion picture projection. Address Department 513, 4829 S. Kedzie Ave., Chicago.

APPROVED TEST FOR PROJECTOR GEARS

WILLIAM L. HENSON of Fort Worth, Tex., wants to know if there is any test he may apply to convince his manager that the gears of his projector mechanism are in need of attention.

This is so highly important that in preparing matter for the new Bluebook I went into it exhaustively, with the result that a test approved by the International Projector Corporation (Simplex) and the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company (Motiograph) has been evolved.

After careful investigation, it was determined that if it be possible to place the intermittent movement "on the lock," hold the rotating shutter stationary and rotate the intermittent movement flywheel in the direction it normally runs in excess of 7/32-inch, the gear train would be definitely in need of an overhauling.

However, don't overlook the word overhauling, since it is probable that considerable of the lost motion will be in the various bearings, therefore something more than a mere replacement of one or more gears may be required. When the mechanism is returned, it should not be accepted if it be possible, under the above-named conditions, to rotate the flywheel in excess of 3/16-inch, all measurements to be made at the outer diameter of the flywheel. As a matter of fact, the possible movement should be less than 3/16-inch, but that may be accepted. A ⅛-inch movement is the minimum that may be expected. One-eighth to three-sixteenths of movement may be accepted in a new mechanism, but no more.

It should be evident that lost motion in the flywheel of the intermittent movement represents lost motion in the gear train and its bearings, though many do not realize that worn bearings add to such lost motion very appreciably.

Brother Henson may advise his manager that excessive lost motion in the gear train means that to avoid travel ghost the master blade of the rotating shutter must be wider than would be necessary were the lost motion not present. This is because such lost motion permits the rotating shutter to backlash, under which condition, if either edge be set at the correct point, it will be late when the backlash occurs, hence excessive width must be provided. Tell him for me that excessive master blade width not only wastes light and therefore electric current, but by throwing the blades out of optical balance it tends to set up a tendency toward flicker.

IATSE MOVES TO WASHINGTON

HEADQUARTERS of the IATSE & MPMO, which, ever since the inception of the organization away back in the last part of the last century, have been located in New York City, have been removed to Washington, D. C., where it is established in the Earle Theatre Building, Thirteenth & E Streets, to which address all mail should now be sent. A small office will be maintained at the old address in New York, but all executive officers formerly there will in future be at the new headquarters.

For more reasons than one this seems a wise and sensible move. The national headquarters of the American Federation of Labor are in Washington, and it would seem that if for no other reason, the headquarters of all national organized bodies affiliated therewith should be there, too.

Labor organizations have long since passed the experimental stage. They now are conceded to be necessary, even by the dwindling number of employers who insist upon placing nuisance after the necessary. On the whole it is now pretty well realized that the IA has in the main been reasonable in its dealing with employers, even if in some isolated cases individual unions may not have acted wisely. Exhibitors and managers have often felt themselves to be more or less abused, but in that connection it must be remembered that they have their troubles, the outstanding one of which usually is the problem of keeping expenses down to a point where they may still carry on. And so great has been the struggle that many of them have been drowned in a sea of bills.

Exhibitors are slowly awakening to the fact that too low a level in wages inevitably means a low level of work and therefore added expense in overhead, and probably box offices losses, too—the whole very possibly far in excess of any money saved through the low wages. Not only that, but there is realization of the fact that low wages generally mean low buying power and in the end poor business.

PICTURE DIMENSIONS

PAUL E. CRAIG of the Lamar theatre in Elk City, Okla., requests me to recommend the best picture dimensions for a theatre in which the front seats are 15 feet from the screen, and the rear ones 95 feet therefrom. Mr. Craig does not say what the width of the seating space is, which is highly important, especially at the front, since it involves viewing angles.

Disregarding the viewing angle, with rear seats 95 feet from the screen, I would regard 16 feet as a maximum picture width with front seats that close. As a matter of fact were that theatre mine I would reduce the picture width to 14 feet, especially if the front seating space be wide. It would not only reduce the viewing angle down front where it is most objectionable, but would also present to holders of front seats a more pleasing picture.

As to the patrons occupying the rear seats, it would be very easy to illuminate a 14-foot picture with sufficient brilliancy to cause all its details to be clearly and comfortably visible to those with normal eyesight. In answering thus I have disregarded the modern tendency toward large pictures —a tendency with which I most emphatically disagree, unless depth of auditorium demands it. I might easily fill this page with every valid objection to pictures larger than is necessary to serve the purposes of individual auditoriums. I have set them forth so many times, however, that it seems rather unnecessary to do so now.

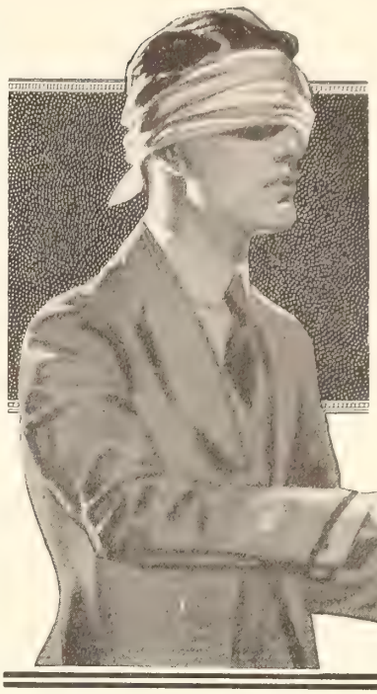
FREQUENCY DISTORTION

G. L. LITTLETON of Jacksonville, Fla., writes to ask, "Will you please tell me just what is meant by 'distortion of sound frequencies'? Please describe the exact effect of such distortions. I appeal to you for the reason that you are the only one writing on projection that I find no difficulty in understanding."

Distortion of sound frequency really means the elimination of a portion of them. Sound as "heard" by a microphone is composed of a number of waves set up in the air by the sound itself. Such waves have "frequency" in that there may be from about 15 to more than 18,000 of them per second—from approximately 25 to perhaps 17,000 can be recorded and reproduced.

A bass drum, for example, has a range of from about 35 to as high as almost 1,400 waves per second, whereas a violin includes from 192 to more than 15,000. The lowest limit of audible sound is about 16 per second; the highest, something more than 18,000, though the extreme ranges are only available to those having excellent hearing.



When a sound is reproduced, it is essential to naturalness that all the frequencies characterizing that sound be contained therein. Now if the reproducing equipment be either out of proper adjustment at any of several possible points, or if it be basically unable to reproduce certain frequencies, then certain frequencies will be absent, and the portion of the sound they represent will be lacking.

"Distortion of frequencies" really means distortion in sound that eliminates some of them.

There is another form of sound wave distortion usually due either to overloaded tubes or to the exciter lamp optical train being out of adjustment. This form of distortion has a bad effect on music, which it tends to weaken. Also it eliminates certain overtones from speech.

THE BLUEBOOK IS ENDORSED BY IA

IN PREPARING the sixth edition of the "Bluebook of Projection" I deemed it an act of permissible courtesy to dedicate it to that great organization that has accomplished so much for its members and indirectly for the motion picture industry (including the exhibitors themselves, even though some of the latter may dispute that)—namely, the IATSE & MPMO. The dedication was submitted to the International President, George E. Browne, who, I am advised, laid the matter before the General Executive Board, which gave the dedication unanimous approval.

Later, in conversation with an I.A. officer, I was told what amounted to an endorsement of the Bluebook itself. Not caring to make such a claim without full authority, however, I wrote Mr. Browne, asking whether or not I had the right to say the IATSE and MPMO had officially endorsed the Bluebook. I have the following answer, signed by Louis Krouse, assistant president:

"In reference to your communication of April 2nd, President Browne has read same and advises me that the permission granted you to dedicate the sixth edition of the 'Bluebook of Projection' to the Alliance was parallel to an endorsement of the book by the International."

UNABLE TO GET BRIGHT LIGHT

FROM THE CITY of Winston-Salem, N. Car., comes a letter saying, "I ask your help. Am using very old Peerless reflector lamps with elliptical reflectors, carbons 12-mm. positive and 8-mm. negative. Have a very old Westinghouse generator, pulling 32 amperes at 90 volts. Use 4-inch E. F. Bausch & Lomb projection lenses, projecting a 15-foot screen image at 81 feet, 6 inches.

"Reflectors are 26 inches from the aperture. Use Simplex projectors. Am unable to secure bright light. Instead, it is an amber color. Screen is regular type white sound screen. Have your Bluebook, which has been a great help. What would you suggest to improve conditions?"

I forwarded the letter to the manufacturer of Peerless lamps, and I append their reply, sent, at my request, to the Winston-Salem projectionist, believing it may be of some interest to the many projectionists using similar type Peerless equipment:

"Carbon trim is correct and you apparently are securing the maximum amount of light. Condition of reflectors not stated. Obviously to secure maximum amount of light generated they must be in good condition, especially as to the reflection surface—silvering. The distance from reflector to aperture (26 inches) is the maximum we recommend, but we recommend 24 inches when possible.

"Diameter of projection lens not stated. To obtain maximum amount of illumination you must have lenses having a speed of at least F-2.3.

"As to the amber tint, it is an inherent characteristic of the neutral cored carbon arc and therefore of all low-intensity lamps. In order to obtain a more brightly illuminated screen at least expense, you may, if your auditorium be of correct proportions for same, use a specular surface screen. Information concerning this is fully set forth in the 'Bluebook of Projection' the size, type and shape of auditorium they are suited to. The other alternative looking to higher screen illumination would be to install high-intensity lamps of the new low voltage type, which same employs 6- and 7-mm. non-rotating carbons."

To this I would add that in order to determine whether or not the projection lenses have sufficient diameter, draw on white paper (stiff writing paper is best) a black circle of same diameter as free opening of rear element of projection lens. Measure exact distance from aperture to first surface of lens. Remove the lens and, holding paper in light beam exactly the same distance from aperture, have assistant turn on the light and see whether or not it all falls within the circle. If it does, O.K. If not, you need a lens of greater diameter.

HAVING TROUBLE WITH RECTIFIERS

THE STAR THEATRE in Heppner, Ore., asks my advice concerning rectifiers to handle current for projector light sources. The Star has been using old type rectifiers not designed for motion picture work and complains of the objectionable hum. The light, however, is good. The engineers of the company supplying the Star's sound equipment have recommended a certain type of rather expensive rectifier, one for each projector. The letter continues:

"We must not lose sight of quality. If you have any information about these rectifiers, or those of other makes, we would appreciate anything you would be willing to tell us.

"There is a basement in the building in which we might be able to secure permission to install the new rectifier or rectifiers, but it would entail considerable expense for wiring, etc., or we could excavate under the projection room and save that expense. With both arcs burning, the d.c. voltmeter reads 65, and the ammeter 35."

In such case it would seem a good thing to have the various rectifier manufacturers send full, illustrated descriptions of their equipments, together with statement as to just what they are prepared to guarantee, in writing. I would not advise the installation of a mercury arc rectifier near the projection room, as its action may affect the sound; also, the always present hum is objectionable. If it is to be a mercury arc rectifier, certainly the basement location is best, or so it seems to me.

When rectification units are being considered, take my advice and look over BETTER THEATRES advertising columns and write each rectifier manufacturer named therein, asking for full, detailed information concerning their equipments. That is the sane, sensible course, it seems to me.

LOCATING SOURCE OF FLUTTER

JOHN L. SWARENGEN of Dallas, Tex., asks, "Will you kindly define for me the term flutter as it is used in motion picture projection work, and tell me what various things it may be attributed to. I also would like to know how one may be certain it is in the film track or the projector. That is to say, in which one the fault may be."

Flutter is a term used to express the effect when, for example, the voice of a singer or the notes of musical instruments have a quivering effect. Usually when this is present the sound is rather harsh. Spoken words do not produce a pleasant effect.

There are many possible causes of flutter, some of which are: (A) Anything that may cause the sound track to pass the sound aperture at uneven speed. (B) Anything that may cause or permit the sound track to move slightly toward and away from the sound aperture, as insufficient tension applied, buckled film or worn tension shoes and track. (C) Take-up worn or having insufficient or excessive lubrication. (D) Loose take-up drive. (E) Undercut sprocket teeth. (F) Uneven sound sprocket speed. (G) Vibration of projector mechanism transmitted to sound head. (H) Strained sprocket holes. (I) Worn sound sprocket shaft. (J) Excessive motor vibration, which may be due to a variety of causes. (K) Poor or defective mechanical filter. (L) Uneven motor speed, probably due to poor brush contact or to improperly lubricated motor bearings.

That is all I am able to think of at the moment. Doubtless there are some possible causes that I have overlooked.

As to ascertaining whether or not the fault is in the projector or in the film, it would seem that this might be determined by observing whether or not it is present in all the films. If some films do not show it and some do, it might be assumed the fault is in the films. If all films show it we may assume it is in the projector itself.

However, project a film in which flutter is plainly heard with one or both projectors, on the projectors of some other theatre that is known to have no such fault. If it shows up, then it is in the film. If it does not—well, that's the answer. Different theatres should be only too glad to co-operate by loaning the use of their projectors for such tests.

MOTOR PERFORMANCE: A motor will operate satisfactorily (though not according to nameplate voltage and frequency) provided the combined voltage and frequency variation does not exceed 10 per cent of those for which the motor was designed. The power which can be supplied by a motor operating on an a. c. power line varies directly as the square of the impressed voltage—the speed directly with the frequency. Example: Voltage to 110-volt motor is low, only 95 volts available at motor terminals when running. Motor is loaded at rated horsepower. The motor will deliver only 75 per cent as much power as it would if 110 volts were available at motor terminals.

COOLING TOWER

● A cooling tower, which may be used with air-conditioning facilities to cut the consumption of city water, has been developed by the Research Corporation of New York in a design applicable to theatre purposes. The tower is constructed of rust-resisting sheet metal, which may be an aluminum allowance with either wood or aluminum distributing trays. The water is pumped to a trough around the top of the tower, from which it overflows upon a circular stack of trays, dropping finally into the cold well at the bottom. The air is drawn inward through the bottom of the tray stack by a centrifugal fan, then forced outward and in again through the upper part of the stack, finally being discharged at low velocity through a spray eliminator covering the whole top of the tower.

The saving in the operation of an air conditioning system through the use of a cooling tower are illustrated by figures based upon an actual theatre having 1,150 seats. The consumption of city water without a recovering system, based on a 15° range and approximately 75% load for 1500 hours, would be 1,260,000 cubic feet per year, which at $1.60 per 1,000 cubic feet would cost $2,002. The make-up water required by a cooling tower, including both water lost by evaporation and water lost as spray, would be less than 1.2% of the amount circulated, or altogether about 30,000 cubic feet per year, which would cost $48. The fan would take 3½ kilowatts of electrical energy, while the circulating pump would require 4½ kilowatts, and at 2¼ cents per kilowatt-hour the cost for 1,500 hours would be $360. Adding to this $48 for makeup water gives $408 as the total annual cost of operation as compared with the $2002 cost of city water. The total cost of this installation was approximately $4,000. This tower measured 8 feet, 2½ inches on the short diameter of the hexagon, and 13 feet, 2 inches high, and was supported 4 feet above the roof.

AUTOMATIC FOUNTAIN

● A drinking fountain mechanism responding to the interruption of the beam of a photoelectric cell, and thus turning on the water wren a patron bends over the bowl, has been brought out by the Mellaphone Corporation of Rochester, N. Y. A diagram of the set-up is reproduced on this page. No levers are involved. On the lip of the fountain bowl is a small mirror. Installed above the fountain is a box containing the light source, photocell, and relay. The beam of light is directed to the mirror, and when the reflection of the light beam is broken by the patron bending over the bowl, the water flows. The flow of water is directly controlled by a special magnetic valve installed in the basement. This reacts instantaneously to the impulses from the control box.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The fifth annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association will be held from June 15 to 18 at the Edgewater Beach Hotel in Chicago. Mr. J. E. Robin, president of the association, reports that over thirty-five manufacturers are expected to be represented in the equipment exhibit.

The general offices of the Heywood-Wakefield Company, manufacturer of theatre chairs, have been transferred from Boston to Gardner, Mass., where the factory is located. A showroom will be maintained in Boston.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

THE ENCLOSED sketch is the plan of that section of a large garage which a party likes to remodel for me into a small theatre. The seating capacity is to be about 250. Since the place is located in a very small town with a very limited business, the remodeling cost is to be held at the lowest possible minimum. I have sent the plan already to an architect for consideration, but should also like to consult you because of your greater experience in this particular field. The questions I would like to have answered are:

Is the space provided large enough? If possible submit an architect's sketch, specifying all materials and changes necessary. What system of ventilation is recommended?—E. W. G. W.

The Answer:

THE SIZES of the space to be used for a 250 capacity being 28 feet, 4 inches by 132 feet 6 inches, is large enough. In fact, you can reduce the length to 100 feet. Arrange the seats as follows:

Thirteen seats in a row with a wall aisle on each side. This will require 20 rows, or 50 feet. Figure lobby 15 feet deep; foyer or cross aisle, 6 feet; apron, 10 feet. Then there will be enough space left between screen and first row of seats.

It will be necessary to raise the roof, as 12 feet, 5 inches in the back is entirely too low. Better figure on 17 feet or 18 feet. For lobby, 9 feet, 10 inches are all right.

Be sure that the theatre building code of your State allows the floor in the lobby to slope downwards, as some States do not allow this.

If no balcony is planned, the roof may be constructed of non-fireproof materials.

The cheapest wall and ceiling covering, which has very good acoustical qualities, is to use a sound absorbing tile or board.

The cheapest method of ventilating is to use a blower system with gravity exhaust. If cool water is obtainable, the use of an air washer will give you a cooling system of sorts in the hot weather, especially if operated properly.

The Question:

I HAVE a flat floor in my theatre and am contemplating having it raised. My theatre is 35 feet long and 31 feet wide, and seats 355. There are sixteen seats in a row and an aisle on each side. The first 35 feet of the floor from the screen is flat, and from here to the back of the theatre it slopes down, so you can imagine how bad it is. I was planning on raising the floor on the back 35 feet and leaving the front flat as you can well see here. I would like to know how much I should slope it from this point to the back. I have had a carpenter look at it and he estimated the cost at $250. What do you think of this price?

I have recently taken over this theatre and am slowly building it up. It was in a very bad condition and was hardly patronized for the past six years. I would appreciate any suggestions you have to offer on the floor or any other improvements. —C. M.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to answer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theatre or in the remodeling of an existing one. Only requests for ideas will be answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, 1790 Broadway, New York.

The Answer:

I NEVER HEARD of any State building code, covering theatres which allows 16 seats in a row between aisles. For 35 feet a slope of 2 feet will be all that is required.

The estimate of $250 which your carpenter gave you seems reasonable; however, I do not know the conditions of the present construction and how much work there is connected with it.

I would further suggest that you rearrange your seating layout so as not to have more than 12 or 13 seats between aisles.

The Question:

I HAVE BEEN wanting to rebuild if I ever can get enough jack raked up. What would you say to a room about 100 feet long and about 35 feet wide? Seating part would be about 75 feet long by 35 feet wide. I am sending a little drawing showing the way we would like to have it if things go right.

We would like to take out part of a wall between our present room about 30 feet back and take out the back wall and build on with cement blocks a room 35 x 70 feet to present room. How high would you say we should go? Our present room is about 18 x 70 x 14 feet. And what would you say it could be done for? Any ideas will be appreciated.—W. N. D.

The Answer:

A ROOM 35 feet wide and 100 feet long adapts itself pretty well to the needs of a small theatre, but I doubt that your allowance of 25 feet for lobby, foyer and stage apron, and distance between screen and first row of seats, is sufficient.

I do not recommend that you use less than 17 feet for ceiling height above the high point of the auditorium floor. Such a theatre, including plumbing, heating and wiring, will cost about 20c per cubic foot.

Selecting Materials

A GOOD PRINCIPLE to follow in selecting materials for the theatre front and ticket lobby is that the surroundings greatly influence the effectiveness of the design. A location on an important business street where there are many other buildings of a type that attract attention and where there may also be another theatre nearby, the portion immediately visible from the sidewalk should generally be very striking. Such a design need not necessarily be garish, of course. A good designer will achieve prominence without resorting to carnival methods.

If the buildings around the theatre are large, the theatre front should be large in scale—not large in actual size, necessarily, but with relatively large masses, broad lines, heavy trim.

In architecture today, with the great variety of structural and decorative materials available, scale can do what columns, cornices and the general overloading with detail was intended to do in the past. It can make a theatre look important without recourse to mere size.

In neighborhoods characteristically residential rather than commercial, the front area should be more quiet, providing for all the display required in successful showbusiness but at the same time avoiding any blatant suggestions of the market place.

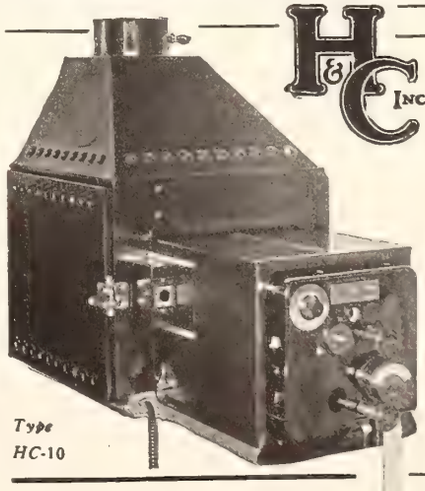
from the consideration of organization, but it emphasizes a vulnerable spot in the careers of many managers who have not organized themselves and their group of employes to present the exact condition of the business to the owner or the parent company executives. Owners and parent company executives for the last few years have been harrassed with financial worries, the Code and legislation to such an extent that future costs for reconditioning their properties are not fully realized. This piling up of repairs and renewals is reaching a point where there are many theatres being operated today which are actually unsafe and unfit for the public. Expenditures to recondition some theatre properties will be so large as to necessitate refinancing.

Such conditions demand a higher order of organization to meet all possible emergencies. There are even some situations which require a special set of instructions for the use of the staff. Continued, regular and detailed inspections by the manager and other responsible members of the organization—the results of which should be covered in written reports to the owner or parent company—is the only safe recourse left open.

MANAGERIAL QUALITIES

In closing this discussion on organization it is important to consider the management of a theatre by organization as against management by an individual. The management by individual, as described under the fifth type of manager, is very definitely not in line with 1935 practice. A jack-of-all-trades may be very useful in certain jobs, but the management of a theatre requires an intelligent, administrative business man, forward-looking and creative. He must know theatres, pictures and advertising and be a salesman; in addition he must know something about the mechanics of the theatre and the care of buildings—even in some cases property management.



This means management by organization. As the result of visiting many theatres and observing many managers in action, I am inclined to tell the manager who claims to be overworked to check up on his organization. Maybe the trouble is in his inability to delegate work to subordinates. On the other hand, the management of a theatre is a full-time, man-sized job, and when a manager says that he can't keep busy managing a theatre I am inclined to think that the assistant manager is for all practical purposes running the theatre, because an organization will not continue to function without a head. Being the head of an organization worthy of the name organization requires time, energy, thought.

Organizations have made men successful and the lack of organization has broken many men.

The statement in an advertisement on page 43 of the April 6th issue of Better Theatres referring to "all the merchandise advertised in these pages or listed in the Equipment Index" has been challenged. Better Theatres takes this opportunity of explaining that it accepted this advertisement under the interpretation that the above quoted description referred to "all classes" of theatre equipment and not to all specific brands or makes.

not turn on ordinary lights in the house without interfering with a satisfactory view of the picture, but you can safely get considerably more illumination than is ordinarily used by employing such methods of lighting as have been described above, or other methods that give a soft flood of light free from glare on walls or other suitable reflecting surfaces. It is glare, rather than a fairly high level of illumination, that interferes with seeing the picture on the screen.

Glare is caused by light shining directly into the eye from some exposed source of concentrated light. You do not need to have bare electric bulbs in front of the eyes of the audience in order to experience the bad effects of glare. Even light sources that are shaded with some diffusing medium and that would not produce glare in an interior such as a room in a home or a store, where the general level of illumination is moderately high all around, may produce a very serious effect of glare in the dimness of a motion picture theatre auditorium, through excessive contrast with the dark surroundings. That is why wall bracket fixtures that are well shaded, flush wall panel lights, and other built-in light sources that have what would be regarded as low surface-brightness for other interiors, must be turned out or allowed to emit almost no light. The answer is to use indirect lighting properly directed on surfaces that are so placed that even during the performance an appreciable amount of illumination may be attained.

Cove lighting, lighting projected upon walls or ceiling panels from coves or trough reflectors, recessed lighting coves in the under side of the balcony directed forward and distributing their light upon the surfaces of the plaster soffit in front of them, are among the available means. Then there are "down lights," as the compact units are called that are concealed above the ceiling and project their light down towards the floor through small round light ports that dot the surface of the ceiling. Also it is possible to project light across the room upon the opposite wall from concealed flood lighting units placed high. There are several other ways besides.

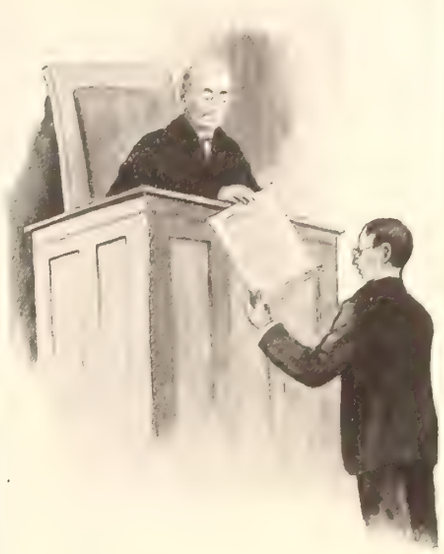
rect lighting is applicable if spread-out sources of low brightness are used. [REFERENCE: MARCH 9, 1935 ISSUE, PAGES 6 TO 11, INCLUSIVE.]

Luminous elements, such as panels and projecting elements, utilize a cavity which has been painted a good mat white so as to provide a good light-reflecting surface with diffusing cover-plates to provide the effect desired. For complete smoothness, flashed-opal glass is suitable and it is also efficient in transmitting light. Sand-blasted glass appears very "spotty" unless many lamps are used. Configurated glass is useful where sparkle is desired, such as for highlighting in an auditorium. Flashed-opal glass is generally most satisfactory, and here lamps should be spaced one and one-half times their distance from the glass.



Other materials for facing cavities which offer variety in color and texture, are the group of moulded plastics, such as Textolite, Catalin, Vinylite, etc. Considerable experimental work is being conducted on these materials for use with lighting equipment, and Catalin has already been used.

New materials, including moulded glass panels, grilles, plaques, and glass tiles and bricks, are now available in a wide variety, and have stimulated widespread interest in new lighting forms. Many have been designed by prominent architects and artists. Simplified methods of installing glass tiles and bricks have added to their usefulness.

Down-lighting is another form of direct lighting which has been featured to advantage in a number of theatres (Figure 1). Parabolic reflectors with spillshields, or specially designed spotlights using elliptical reflectors and lenses, are placed above the ceiling and located in such a manner that the openings form part of the decorative treatment. With the elliptical down-light, the openings required are relatively small. The light is in this manner projected straight down so that it is free from glare unless one looks straight up, and with care in the arrangement no light need spill on the screen. By this method more light on the audience may be provided.

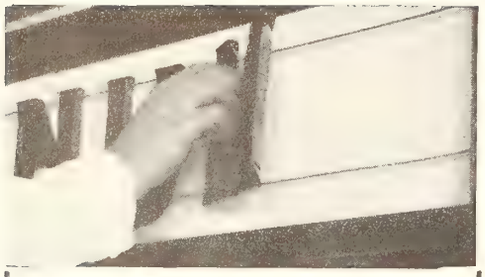
Projected light patterns may often be used to advantage. A box, a continuous element, or a hanging fixture is used to conceal one or more lamps with clear bulbs and fairly concentrated filaments. The enclosure is painted black inside. Over the enclosure is placed a cut-out design in such a manner that the pattern is projected on the ceiling or side-wall surface. This may take the form of a floral shape, conventionalized design, or even letters or words. Colored glass or gelatin placed over various parts of the cut-out stencil produces patterns in color.

Realizing the need for light sources that might be utilized directly for luminous elements, or in combination with the above-mentioned diffusing forms, the General Electric Company has recently made available a lamp known as the Lumiline Lamp, which is a radical departure from conventional lamp design (Figure 3). Two metal caps are sealed to a glass tube, the filament extending from one cap to the other. When a number of these lamps are

When Judges Hand Down Decisions

Surely the judgment of the buyers who selected Ideal Chairs for 37 Warner Brothers' theatres, four United Artists' leading West Coast houses and over 100 independent theatres throughout the country can be accepted as having been rendered only after the most careful deliberation.

The new era in seating pioneered by Ideal has been heralded by the nation's leading exhibitors.



There is something so remarkably different about the lulling comfort of the deep spring cushions in Ideal Chairs . . . the stunning upholstery . . . distinctive design . . . the silent ball-bearing self aligning hinge . . the staunch construction which will withstand years of severest usage, without constant servicing.

Reliable independent supply dealers in all principal cities are finding exhibitors daily who declare Ideal Chairs are the ideal chairs for them.

mounted end-to-end, the result is an almost continuous line of light. The sockets are equipped with removable clips which are snapped on the ends of the lamps, and the clips are then simply pushed into place in the sockets. These lamps are available in three sizes, one 12 inches, 40 watts; and two 18-inch lamps, one 30 and the other 60 watts. Actually, the overall lengths are slightly shorter, so that in an installation the lamps may be placed on 12-inch or 18-inch centers. It should be noted that the 40-watt, 12-inch lamp, and the 60-watt, 18-inch lamp have the same watts per foot, so that they can be used, one following the other, with no apparent change in brightness.

The colors in which the new Lumiline lamps are available represent a distinct departure from past practice on colored lamps. Instead of the heavy reds, greens and blues, which absorb a very large percentage of the light in the process of producing the color, the new lamps have lighter, pastel tints, which provide light in really useful quantities. The new colors have also been selected for harmony, one with the other; they are designated as clear, white, straw, orange, surprise pink, emerald, and moonlight blue.

Standard wiring materials are now available for these lamps, so that the wiring is completely concealed. For decorative effect the lamps may be mounted on mat-finished extruded aluminum shapes. Trough reflectors are also available for them.

No discussion of auditorium lighting would be complete without a consideration of color, since color can transform it from the ordinary, and it is color that establishes the mood. Too often, however, operating difficulties and misunderstandings are responsible for placing color on the shelf, so to speak, or for its being misused. It is not always a simple matter to use colored light to good advantage, but colors can be so effective that every house with color-lighting facilities should have a member of its personnel especially trained in the operation of the colored lighting equipment.

Most houses are equipped with three color circuits, which is generally quite satisfactory. A few have four or five, which does give the advantage of an extra circuit using a white or light tint. Where three circuits have been available, the course of least resistance has usually been to use the most readily available colors, and the house has been equipped with an all-blue circuit for use during the showing of pictures, an all-red circuit for an intermediate intensity, and another "bright" circuit of white or a tint of yellow or amber. In many cases these were not the most efficient or desirable colors, and the house has often suffered from a monotony of color effect.

Most houses with three color circuits have been arranged for subdivision of the individual color circuits. Advantage can be taken of this fact to enhance the effect greatly and to provide new interest by relamping parts of the house to bring out color contrast. In the blue circuit, for example, some parts can be lamped in green with occasionally a small area of orange or yellow, or perhaps dashes of red for high lights. For the intermediate intensity, instead of using all red, some of the areas might contain green, with again some highlighting in a light tint. For the bright circuit some areas in red, blue or green, will add interest.

The use of the lighter, more efficient tints are very desirable in many cases, for they provide more light. Lamps are available in yellow, orange and rose, and the new Lumiline lamps include a lighter emerald green, moonlight blue and surprise pink.

A CORRECTION

The Los Feliz theatre in Los Angeles, the facade of which was pictured on page 10 of the March 9th issue of Better Theatres as a notable example of modern lighting methods, was designed by C. A. Balch, architect with offices in the Film Exchange Building, Los Angeles. This picture was part of the material on lighting contributed by the Nela Park Engineering Department of General Electric, and S. Charles Lee was erroneously named as the architect of the Los Feliz.

Planning for Safety

or inclines where possible. All exit doors should be indicated by a red light or sign lighted in red. All exit directional signs and door signs should be on the emergency circuit.

LIGHTING

The emergency lighting of the auditorium should be studied very carefully. Try this: Go into the theatre some night and have the electrician switch off all except the exit or emergency lights, then see how hard or easy it is to make your way to the nearest exit door. Remember, you know the theatre—it won't be so easy for a stranger. Not only should exit lights, exit directional signs and aisle lights be on the emergency circuit, but at least one socket on certain other of the general lighting fixtures should remain lighted when all other house lights go out. Real panic precautions for rapid exodus demands sufficient lighting so that people can move without groping or bumping into furniture or falling on steppings.

CARPETING

Floor covering is also a very important consideration from the standpoint of safety. Many accidents occur each year because of worn carpet, or carpet that has become ripped in a seam, or poorly laid carpet which has stretched so as to form wrinkles.

BETTER THEATRES

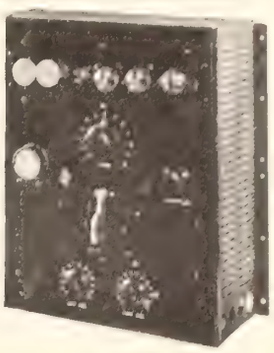
The carpeting on steppings particularly needs careful and constant attention. So frequently the padding on the tread of the step and over the nose is too thick. This practice has of course resulted from the desire to lay the carpet so that it will wear the longest. However, the heavy padding over the nose of the step tends to give a false idea of the width, and this may cause a misstep or insecure footing, especially for women wearing very high and narrow heels. Carpet on steps should be securely fastened in the angle of the step between the riser and the tread. Many schemes have been tried for this purpose, but the one that is truly the best is to sink a beveled piece of wood into the concrete at the angle of the step. This method is only practical, however, on new construction. The use of individual wood plugs is absolutely not satisfactory. It is much better to fasten a wood strip on to the concrete in the angle, with bolts in expansion shells, and then to tack the carpet to it.



SEATING

The width of aisles, the distance, back to back, between rows of seats, the kind of seats, and the number and location of aisle lights will also have much bearing on the safety of the auditorium. These same conditions also have a bearing on the amount of damage done to patrons' clothing. In many theatres damage to wearing apparel is a great nuisance and sometimes a costly item. Many theatre owners, when reseating a theatre, will crowd in that extra row or two regardless of patron safety or comfort. This is a shortsighted point of view. Those few extra seats are bringing in a return only during the comparatively brief periods of peak business, and against this hundreds of patrons are made very uncomfortable, dissatisfied and harrassed when getting in or out of seats, or when others are getting in or out of seats. Seats installed without proper distance between rows are definitely a panic hazard. With regard to this, city ordinances do not establish good practice—they establish mere minimum requirements.

HANGINGS

Finally, check all hanging electric light fixtures to be sure that they are secure and that there is no chance of them falling. This especially applies to the large ones hanging from the main ceiling. These large fixtures are frequently lowered by cable for cleaning and relamping; at such times check carefully all the hanging glass ornaments to see if they are securely wired. When such fixtures are raised in place, the strain should not be on the cable, but on a chain or bolt securely fastened to some steel member supporting ceiling and roof.

At the same time that lighting fixtures are checked, also inspect the conditions of any hanging plaster troughs or ornamental plaques or grilles. Frequently ornamental plaster drys out or has become cracked because some workman has rested a ladder against it. If a sizeable piece of plaster should fall when the house is full it would indeed be a calamity.

THE CINEMA A FACTORY

By H. G. Tasker

PRESIDENT, SOCIETY OF MOTION PICTURE ENGINEERS

THE view that the picture theatre is primarily a matter of engineering "with a thin veneer of artistic embellishment" was the basis of a paper prepared by Mr. H. G. Tasker, President of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, for presentation by another to a recent convention of exhibitors in New Orleans.

Of such general application are the writer's remarks that we cannot do better than quote some of his observations:

"Let me make the somewhat startling statement that a theatre is a sort of factory, run by engineering equipment, and turning out a definite engineering product.

"We see posters and photographs, all made by technical methods and using modern equipment. We pass into the theatre and are either attracted or repelled by the appearance of the house depending upon its architectural design and the engineering skill used in properly lighting the theatre. Once seated, we immediately encounter a series of technical triumphs or failures.

"Consider first the picture on the screen. I have been told that there is many a manager who has not the least objection to spending considerable sums of money for paper in the lobby but who protests violently to replacing a sprocket in the projector or to making simple changes or additions in the projection room to enable consistent and improved projection. The exhibitor who is satisfied with dim, uneven, or out-of-focus pictures is injurying himself to a tremendous extent.

"It may be true that no member of the audience gets up and walks out because the projection is unsatisfactory—but you may be sure that in the long run the bright clear picture brings back the audience—and that is what counts on the balance sheet.

"I cannot too strongly emphasize the necessity of keeping the screen and projection equipment in first-class condition and of encouraging the projectionists to do the best sort of job.

"Again, while no one may walk out of the theatre or smash the fittings in his anger, it is certain that an audience straining its ears to understand at least a portion of the dialogue will be badly dissatisfied and will show its displeasure in the most deadly fashion—namely, by not coming back to the theatre . . .

"It is to the advantage of the exhibitors and engineer alike to keep the theatre factory turning out a product for which the public is ready to pay."

In recognition of the splendid accomplishments of the

LOST COLOR

WITH "Becky Sharp" in, and probably in behalf of, Technicolor, almost upon us, and Mr. Robert Edmond Jones among us being interviewed by the press on the stories of the art, one would suppose that the motion picture world was becoming indeed color conscious.

Whatever the future of color may be on the dramatic screen, it will have to come as an awakening. The motion picture as a medium has been for years steadily losing color, coming at last to standard black and white.

In the gala days of the silent picture and before the advent of wide use of machine development of positive prints, the screen's best productions, both long and short, were laden with tints and tones. The tints originally were applied by dye baths and so generally were they in demand that the raw stock makers began the issue of based tinted positive stock. The tones, as often as not superimposed upon tints, were produced by chemical treatment of the film image itself, either changing the character of the silver deposit or supplanting it with other materials. The better picture makers, using tint and tone, endowed their products with color moods and effects of lure and charm. When the developing machines came, eating film in thousand-foot rolls and speeding up the process, along with considerable price shaving on processing costs, the pressure of convenience and speed was against color. Finally it was purchasing agents, chiseling hundredths of a cent per foot, who drove tints and tones off the screen. In this the screen lost an important asset.

For some years the vast preponderance of feature release printing was on base tinted stock. Inquiry today finds that the output of base tinted positive stock is about seven per cent of the total, and the consumption is still tending downward.

With the coming of sound, tints and tones met with new obstacles. In the frenzy of the pursuit of sound the film processers, without research, insisted that tints and tones would seriously impair the sound records and reproduction. Tests revealed that on properly printed and developed prints the effect on sound was slight, save for deep red, and for most colors entirely negligible. Also in the early period of sound, the handling of the unbroken sound track through long scenes made breaks for color seem just too much trouble. With today's facility in sound editing no such problem exists.

To be sure both tints and tones are still available, and both can be produced even on developing machines, but they require slight attention from trained laboratory personnel. The print makers are against them. They want to grind, grind, grind, black and white, with routine workers feeding dumb machines.

So the industry which has let tints and tones fade away, to save tiny fractions of a cent, is now being invited to spend in hundreds of thousands for natural color.

WHICH REPORTER?

UP rises the Journal of Flint, Michigan, to get indignant over the screen's portrayal of reporters as figures in drama. The Journal finds the motion picture version of the reporter "imbecilic." That might depend in part on the reporter. Most of the pictures in their making pass through the hands of men who were once reporters. Meanwhile we have yet to hear a complaint of the screen's portrayal of the press agent. But possibly the motion picture makers know press agents better than they do reporters. Also maybe press agents do not complain.

MUD PACK TITLES

ANY time is a proper time to raise objection to the typographical illiteracy of the motion picture screen. We have mentioned the subject before.

Currently there is special provocation in the fact that some of the best product that the screen has ever delivered is being presented under what may be called the "mud pack" school of titling. It appears that when a supreme effort is being made in the assembly of a master production the first thought is to retain a specialist in the German wedding cake school of sculpture and assign him to squirting lettering on a title board.

The dignity and grace of sound type, soundly printed on a surface intended for type, it seems is totally inadequate for the expression of the Hollywood concept of a main title.

The ingenious and intricate degradation of the printed word on the screen had gone as far as possible years ago, but it has gone much farther than that now, inspired not a little by the startling bad examples afforded by the typographical acrobatics of the screen trailers, which, having nothing to say, say it on a trapeze.

MR. ARTHUR HORNBLOW, JR., is quoted as foreseeing an early exhaustion of the classics by the motion picture makers. It is not in the nature of the classics to be exhausted. When they get exhausted they are thereby proved not to be classics. Sex and the classics will be with us forever.

THIS WEEK---

UPTURN

An increased number of openings, reopenings, tranfers and renovations of theatre properties in widely scattered sections of the country is seen as indicative of a distinct return of confidence on the part of exhibitors generally. Openings are especially widespread in New England, while the Midwest reports gains and the Richmond, Va., district reports improvement in general business conditions. . . .

ROWLAND TO MGM

Rejoining the company (Metro) he founded in 1914 and headed until 1919, when he sold out to Loew's, Richard A. Rowland has signed a long MGM contract as a special story and talent scout on roving assignment. He has been general representative for Radio in New York. . . .

KOPLAR CIRCUIT

Incorporated by Harry Koplar, George Wendling and J. Fred Brinkmeyer is Mr. Koplar's St. Louis Suburban Theatres Company, new company to operate neighborhood houses. Listed is capital of $1,000 with 25,000 shares of no par common stock. Erection of four theatres is planned. . . .

TITLE RIGHTS

At a meeting in New York of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Columbia has been awarded rights to the title "The Unknown Woman," in a conflict with MGM. Metro had asked for use of the title of a recently acquired play, "The Unknown Girl," but Columbia's prior registration of the similar title gave it the decision. . . .

DU-ART SUIT DROPPED

Du-Art Film Laboratories, Inc., has dropped its suit against Universal following settlement out of court. The suit was based on Du-Art's complaint that Universal, despite existing contracts, had withdrawn its printing from Du-Art when the Universal-Consolidated Film Industries deal was made several months ago. . . .

FILM LECTURE

NEW THEATRES

The Hoblitzelle circuit, with headquarters in Dallas, Texas, plans eight new theatres within the next 12 months. All will be located in Texas towns. . . .

SCHENCK PURCHASE

Reacquiring an enterprise of his early career, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., last week bought, for $150,000, the Palisades Amusement Park, located atop the Palisades of New Jersey on the Hudson shore. The sheriff's sale was to satisfy mortgages of $500,000, more than half of which were held by Mr. Schenck. In 1910, with his brother, Joseph M., now president of United Artists and 20th Century, Mr. Schenck took over the park, there building the first scenic railway. . . .

MASCOT CITY

FILM APPRECIATION

The Times-Picayune of New Orleans lauded the plan of the recently reorganized statewide New Orleans Council for Better Films to sponsor motion picture appreciation in the public schools. The editorial said in part: "Helping young people form their own standards of good taste is certainly much better than giving them a list of productions you think they shouldn't see—and then trying to prevent them from finding out what you are hiding." . . .

YOUNG REVIEWERS

At a recent New York meeting of the Young Reviewers, group of children between 8 and 15 who review films under the auspices of the National Board of Review, numerous members aired their opinions concerning varied types of films. With opinions diversified, the meeting gave evidence chiefly of intelligent consideration and keen discrimination. . . .

SUING UNIVERSAL

Frank Mastroly has brought suit in superior court, Los Angeles, seeking to have his employer, Universal, pay his living expenses in addition to salary while filling an executive post in New York. He contends his three-year contract specifies executive duties on the Coast. Universal claims the contract does not limit its right to transfer. . . .

RECEIPTS UP

Appreciable increase in box office receipts for the first quarter of 1935, over the same period in 1934, were reported last week by President N. L. Nathanson at the annual meeting of Famous Players Canadian Corporation in Toronto. Substantial savings in operating costs have been effected, he said, making possible an even better showing during the rest of 1935. . . .

APPEALS DECISION

The United States circuit court of appeals, St. Louis, has ruled that its permission must be obtained before an apeal can be carried to it in reorganization cases under the amended bankruptcy act. It held that under the amended act an appeal from a lower court ruling is not granted as a matter of course. . . .

PICTURE SUIT

Settling out of court the suit of the Rialto in New York contesting the right of the Roxy to exhibit Universal's "The Bride of Frankenstein," an agreement was reached whereby the Rialto drops its claim to the film, but in return will receive exhibition rights to Universal's "The Werewolf of London." . . .

42 PER CENT OF ALL SEATS IN 93 LARGEST CITIES; NINE PERSONS FOR EVERY SEAT

36,435,000 Persons in Cities of More Than 100,000 Served by 3,873 Theatres; Average Seating Capacity Is 1,054; 9,459 Potential Box Office Customers for Each Theatre

Forty-two per cent of the 9,720,000 motion picture theatre seats used regularly in this country are located in the 93 cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants, where 4,083,000 seats in 3,873 theatres serve 36,435,000 residents, an average of one seat for every nine persons.

An investigation to determine the ratio of population to theatre capacities for the purpose of establishing the extent of patronage possibilities in large cities, where competition is keenest, shows that the range is from 5.6 persons for each seat in Utica, New York, to as high as 17 persons per seat in Houston, Texas.

Indicating the extent of the centralization of motion picture exhibition in cities of 100,000 or more inhabitants, the survey disclosed that in the smaller places there are only 5,637,000 seats in theatres actually operating to serve the rest of America's 85,565,000 persons, and that these seats and inhabitants are scattered over thousands of cities, towns and villages. The last federal census recorded some 2,000 places with populations of more than 2,500 inhabitants, but less than 100,000.

From other sources, principally the records of distributors, it was learned this week that approximately 1,500 motion picture theatres operate one or two nights a week.

While the survey was concentrated on cities of more than 100,000 inhabitants, a previous analysis of population ratios to capacities established that there are 13 persons for every theatre seat for the country as a whole, and that each theatre operating has a possible drawing power of 8,590 persons. Obviously the market is greater per theatre in the 93 large theatres embraced in this latest survey, 9,459 possibilities per theatre having been calculated.

The average seating capacity of theatres located in cities of over 100,000 population is 1,054, whereas the average for the entire country is only 610 seats.

The compilation in the adjoining column, listing, alphabetically, the 93 cities surveyed, together with their populations, theatre totals, capacities and ratio of populations to capacities, reveals some rather startling

New York City and Tacoma, Washington, are the only two cities in which the ratio of population to theatre seats is identical to the average for the 93 cities. New York's 6,930,446 inhabitants are served by 777,082 seats in 607 theatres, while Tacoma has 11,963 seats in 18 theatres serving 106,817 persons.

Interesting is the similarity of ratios in nearby cities or in cities within the same area.

In many cities the actual drawing population from suburban districts outside of the city limits increases considerably the actual official population inside the city limits upon which the survey was based.

On the other hand the populations of some other cities do not represent a true tabulation of the possibilities of the market because of local economic or sociological conditions. Many southern cities, for example, contain large negro populations which, in the first place, have no money to attend motion pictures, or else cannot attend "white" theatres.

FILM PRODUCERS TURN TO STAGE FINANCING ON AMBITIOUS SCALE

MGM and Warner Lead Way with Agreements with Several Producers for Complete or Part Backing Next Season

Hollywood is going into the legitimate show business on an ambitious scale. Looking to the Broadway theatre for much of its acting and directorial talent and for 20 per cent of its story material several large producers are seriously contemplating an extensive program of stage-play financing during the 1935-36 season. Already, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Warner Brothers have made agreements with Broadway producers for complete or part backing of their legitimate productions next season.

The groundwork for such a financing program has been laid during the current and past two seasons, with Warners, MGM, Paramount and 20th Century contributing financial aid in at least a dozen plays and musical shows. In the current season seven stage productions have been financed in whole or part by film companies.

Up to April 30 of this year there were produced in eight months 148 dramatic plays and 24 musical shows. Only one musical production, "Calling All Stars," was backed by a film company, Warner Brothers, but Warner also contributed to "Fly Away Home," produced by Theron Bamberger in association with Lew Brown; "Three Men on a Horse," Alex Yokel and George Abbott, and "Ceiling Zero," Brock Pemberton. With the exception of "Fly Away Home," the Warner stage ventures this season have been eminently successful.

Financing Shumlin Production

Warner announced it will finance Herman Shumlin's production of "Sweet Mystery of Life" for next season and is considering the plans of several other Broadway managers. It is expected that, as in the case of MGM, film companies will make exclusive financing arrangements with only a few Broadway showmen and will finnace all their proposed productions either in full or for a fractional interest.

MGM has financed no productions this season, but in the past has put up money for Shumlin's production of "Grand Hotel," which it subsequently made into a picture; Joseph Bickerton's "Men Must Fight," also produced as a film by MGM, and "Rendezvous," produced by Arthur Hopkins. MGM holds the film rights to "Rendezvous."

MGM has announced the names of three producers who next season will receive monetary support—Max Gordon, Sam Harris and Billy Rose. Gordon and Harris will be backed in all their productions, Rose on his production of "Jumbo," a play of circus life written by Ben Hecht, Charles MacArthur and Lawrence Hart and Richard Rodgers.

Metro probably will form a subsidiary company within a few weeks. Mr. Gordon, who returned from Hollywood over the weekend, is to confer on the new arrangement with J. Robert Rubin. Sam Marx, MGM's studio editorial head, also arrived in New York to look over current Broadway attractions and to confer with Mr. Gordon and Mr. Rubin.

20th Century in at Least Four

20th Century's interest became apparent almost from its beginning two seasons ago. This season Darryl Zanuck personally contributed a share of the financing to "Lady Jane," produced by Harold B. Franklin and Arch Selwyn. 20th Century also financed "Red Cat," an A. H. Woods production which ultimately reached the screen as "Folies Bergere," starring Maurice Chevalier, and "De Luxe," produced by Chester Erskin.

Fox, Universal and RKO Radio have made no announcements, but RKO is reputedly interested financially, through the Rockefeller connections, in Max Gordon's "The Great Waltz," which has been playing at the Center theatre since last summer.

It is known that Harry Cohn of Columbia recently discussed financing with Herman Shumlin and Chester Erskin on stage productions for next season.

Paramount's participation goes back several years. This film company was among the first to consider the stage a worthwhile financial investment as a talent and story source.

Paramount Active

As far back as 1919, Famous Players-Lasky negotiated a deal for the Charles Frohman properties and through Frohman, Inc., the company also became interested in several Gilbert Miller productions. This arrangement continued until 1932, when Paramount engaged Chester Erskin to produce stage plays in New York for it. One production, "Stepchildren of War," resulted from the Paramount-Erskin combination, which was dissolved after one year. Following this, Paramount set up the Ray-Minor Corp., resulting in one production, "Wild Waves," which subsequently reached the screen as "The Big Broadcast." Paramount since has financed three Broadway productions, "Shooting Star," produced by Crosby Gaige; "Murder at the Vanities," Earl Carroll, and "She Loves Me Not," Dwight Deere Wiman. The two last named were filmed by Paramount.

As for 1935-36, Paramount has been discussing plans with the new producing group formed by Laurence Stallings, Robert E. Sherwood, Maxwell Anderson, Sidney Howard, Philip Barry and Arthur Hopkins.

Reinhardt Producing Next Season

An event of importance in the theatre will be the appearance as a producer on Broadway next season of Max Reinhardt, German impresario currently directing for Warner Bros. It is understood Warner and Herr Reinhardt are negotiating arrangements whereby Reinhardt will become a producer in the Warner Hollywood theatre on Broadway with the film company financing all his productions.

RCA TO TELEVISE
but still "around the corner"

Speaking to stockholders in annual meeting, David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, this week announced that "high definition television" was to be taken from the laboratory to the field by the establishment of a station atop the Empire State Building in New York. It was estimated that twelve to fifteen months would be required to get under way, at an estimated cost of one million dollars. Mr. Sarnoff set forth the project as being a developmental step and urged that "the demonstration does not mean that a regular service of television is here, or 'just around the corner'," according to the official news release.

In the present status of the art, the Empire State building station is expected to have an effective radius of about 25 miles. The waves used for television are bound approximately by the light horizon.

For some years there has been an experimental RCA television plant in the Empire State Building—the new one is more of it.

The announcement from RCA comes on the heels of a kindred project in Great Britain, editorially discussed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of April 27.

The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences Wednesday appointed a fact-finding committee to investigate television and its probable effect on the industry, and to report to the producers.

BRITISH RULING DELAYS FIGHT ON SOVIET FILMS

Court Implies Red Pictures on Non-Inflammable Stock Are Outside Legal Control

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

In its effort to obtain an effective control of the exhibition of uncensored Soviet films in unlicensed buildings, the Home Office is finding itself up against serious, and possibly insurmountable, difficulties created by an Act of Parliament sponsored by itself.

The Cinematograph Act, 1909, was specifically limited to the control of inflammable films. Taking advantage of this fact, various individuals and organizations have made "non-flam" prints of Russian and other films which, owing to their controversial character, would not pass the censor, and have shown them with impunity in buildings for which no cinematograph license has been obtained.

Taking the attitude that "non-flam" is not non-inflammable within the meaning of the Act, the Home Office recently announced that new Safety Regulations for control of such films would be introduced. To establish its legal point, it initiated police court proceedings in Jarrow against the trustees of a Miners' Institute in which a "non-flam" program had been presented.

The magistrates dismissed the case, with costs against the police, on the ground that they had not established that the films used were inflammable.

It is now announced that an appeal against the decision will not be proceeded with. The law therefore is still, apparently, that if one prints film on "non-flam" one can show it where one pleases and in a form to which the censor, however he may object, can offer no effective opposition.

The next stage, probably, is legislation specifically for the control of "non-flam" films, but Parliamentary time is limited, and a considerable amount of opposition may be expected, so that the privately shown propaganda film may still have a long life before it.

Emery Adds Five Theatres

J. F. Emery, operator of a 13-theatre circuit in England's Midlands, has added five more important theatres to the circuit through a deal involving properties valued at $1,500,000, according to cable reports from London.

The theatres involved are the Capitol, Didsbury; the Pyramid, Sale; Lido, Burnage; Broadway, Eccles, and Riviera, Cheetham Hill. The Lido seats 1,536; the Pyramid, 2,000, and the Broadway over 2,000. All five theatres are near Manchester.

London Film Productions has started work on "The Man Who Could Work Miracles," with Roland Young playing the lead, and now has two H. G. Wells stories in production at Worton Hall, with H. G. himself taking a very close interest in the progress of "Whither Mankind" and the new subject.

"G Men" Breaks Records As Cycle Reaches Broadway

The much discussed film cycle dealing with the activities of Department of Justice agents in their war on crime, reached Broadway last week when Warner's "G Men" had its world premiere at the Strand theatre. Shortly after opening, the Strand began a 21-hour daily schedule to accommodate patrons. The receipts of $11,100 during the first day shattered all Strand records and the film appears certain to stay for some time. On the second day the gross was $10,923.

In San Francisco, 70,000 persons attended the Warfield theatre during the week's run of "G Men," breaking a four and one-half year attendance record for the house. "This picture should be a real deterrent to crime," said New York state Attorney General John J. Bennett, Jr., after a special showing of the picture in Albany this week. "As the movies are a great educational medium, this shows the gangster in his true color. It is the best picture I have seen designed to show that 'crime does not pay'."

Nationwide Letter Contest Set on MGM's "Musa Dagh"

A contest, sponsored by MGM, the Viking Press and Modern Screen Magazine, has been initiated in connection with MGM's adaptation of "The Forty Days of Musa Dagh," best selling novel by Franz Werfel. Three awards of $1,000, $500 and $200, respectively, seven awards of $50 each and 90 $5 prizes will go to the writers of the best letters, not more than 150 words, answering the question, "What do you consider the greatest moment of the story, 'The Forty Days of Musa Dagh' and why?" Letters are to be sent to Modern Screen, 149 Madison avenue, New York, before September 30. The film, now in preparation, will be one of MGM's 1935-36 specials. The contest will be boosted by nationwide exploitation. Special trailers, one-sheets for the lobby and throwaway heralds will be prepared for theatres, and cards prepared by Viking Press and Dell Publications, publishers of Modern Screen, will be distributed to 2200 five-and-ten-cent stores.

Hamilton Theatres 1934 Profit Increases

Hamilton United Theatres, Ltd., Canadian circuit with headquarters in Toronto, has reported a net profit, for 1934, after expenses, depreciation, federal taxes and other charges, of $40,782. This is equivalent to $5.18 per share on the 7,879 shares of preferred stock outstanding. The 1934 net compares with a profit of $37,726, equal to $4.79 per preferred share, for 1933.

Quigley, Milliken Meet with British

Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief and publisher of Quigley Publications, and Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, were guests of honor at a press reception in London last week following their arrival in the British capital to confer with British industry leaders on the workings of the Production Code Administration in this country.

Mr. Quigley, accompanied by Mrs. Quigley, arrived in London on Thursday. They were officially welcomed at Victoria Station by Neville Kearney, representing the Federation of British Industries, and James M. Beck, Jr., of the London office of the MPPDA. Mr. Milliken arrived in London Friday.

Conferences with British industry leaders got under way on Tuesday and both Mr. Quigley and Mr. Milliken participated. An official statement issued after the meeting said:

"Mr. Milliken and Mr. Quigley explained fully the origin and purposes of the code and members of the film group present pointed out certain difficulties under which the British industry suffers, owing chiefly to the distance separating Great Britain from California, where the American code is centered, and to the slight differences between the lines on which British censorship and the American form of control are carried out."

There will be another meeting in a few days to go into further details.

Mexican Money Difficulty Cleared

Paper money and bronze coins are gradually being substituted for the silver pesos in Mexico, with the result that the money difficulties prevalent for a period in the country are being eliminated. The silver buying policy of the United States Government has forced up the price of silver to the point where the pesos are worth more as silver than as coins. The shortage of paper money which existed for a time seriously affected business generally.

Mexico has had its first film plagiarism suit. David Carpintero de la Ellave, owner of the rights to the novel "El Barco" ("The Wall-Eyed"), has filed suit against Film Exchange, S. A., claiming that "El Tigre de Yautepec" ("Tiger of Yautepec") was taken from the book.

Mexico City film circles are talking about a new picture with a story about boxing, "Todo Un Hombre" ("What a Man"), produced by Producion Regio-Mex. The sport has become popular in the country.

Ufa has acquired Teatro Principal as its outlet in Mexico City.

RKO Directors Meet

The regular monthly meeting of the RKO Radio Pictures board of directors was scheduled to be held Thursday at the home office in New York.

'Four stars. Smash hit. Warner Bros. have been starting cycles in films ever since they made the first all talking picture, 'The Jazz Singer,' starring Al Jolson, a cycle which will probably go on until television comes along. They started the young gangsters off in the films with their 'Doorway to Hell,' featuring Lew Ayres and James Cagney, and brought musical films back into favor with '42nd Street. Now they have inaugurated a new cycle by giving Cagney a vehicle that puts him on the other side of the fence, as it were, making him the hero of an exciting, swiftly moving drama about the 'G-Men.' The picture is so absorbing, so thrilling, and has been done with such excellence, that we are bound to be deluged with a flood of films showing us other phases of the work of these able, incorruptable Government agents who always get their men. Cagney comes through with a fine performance. He makes a believable Department of Justice agent. He is courageous, and honest, a man of education and high calibre, even though he had come up from the gutter. All in all, his Brick Davis is a credit to the Government's crack detective agency. Cagney's screen portrait of Davis is sharp, clear and impressive. And his performance goes far toward making the picture the excellent entertainment it is. The picture has been skillfully directed by William Keighley who keeps the audience in a state of breathlessness from the beginning to the end. A mob, literally a mob, turned out for the first showing of the film at the Strand Theatre yesterday morning and greeted it enthusiastically."—Kate Cameron in N. Y. Daily News

"Wildly exciting melodrama. Magnificent! Don't miss it. A wildly exciting, vigorous and handsome thriller. It is smashing melodrama, with a kick and with a purpose. And it restores to the screen the substantial James Cagney who first endeared himself to the public as the hero of riotous melodrama. Cagney gives a stirring performance, far the best he has given in seasons. He is supported by a great cast which includes Margaret Lindsay, Ann Dvorak, Robert Armstrong, Barton MacLane, William Harrigan. The film seethes with action. It is filled with gun play, fights, chases, thrills. The romantic interest is strong and appealing. Comedy and pathos neatly balance the sheer melodrama. Extraordinarily timely, 'The G-Men' uses many powerful situations right out of news. It is a thrilling, exciting and inspiring film. Don't miss it."—Bland Johaneson in the N. Y. Daily Mirror

"If the crowds that stormed the Strand Theatre yesterday are any indication, then 'G-Men' is the most terrific box-office smash that Warners have yet produced. With the house jammed half an hour after it opened and police trying to hold back mobs battling to get in despite S. R. O. signs, the waiting cash customers broke through the ropes and police protection, scattered house managers and their assistants left and right, and smashed down two doors, tearing them right off their hinges, in a riotous rush into the lobby. There's your answer to theatre owners who alibi empty houses by saying that people aren't going to the theatre for this reason or that. Give the public a good picture and look what happens! And 'G-Men' is more than a good picture—it's about the most exciting entertainment that has yet come out of Hollywood. Packed with fast and furious action, taking up a theme that's vigorous and alive, and unfolded in staccato tempo, it will hold you breathless from the moment it opens until its thrilling end. For Warners have once again gone to newspaper headlines for their screen material and graphically depict the warfare between the U. S. Government's Department of Justice agents and organized crime. James Cagney gives a performance that tops even his previous brilliant characterizations. The Cagney strut, the knowing eyebrow, the down-to-earth understanding and the hard-boiled intelligence—they're all there in a performance that's swift and sure and electrical. Incidentally, the criticism levelled at the 'Public Enemy' type of film was that it caused youngsters to leave the theatre with the desire to be a swaggering gangster. Warners have started a new cycle and, after seeing Cagney in this one every youngster will leave the theatre with a consuming ambition to become a government agent. One intensely vivid sequence after another. The pictured exploits of the 'G-Men' make for spectacular and dynamic action, and Director William Keighley tells his story with mounting suspense. Cagney is perfect in his role and excellent work is done by Robert Armstrong, Barton MacLane, Edward Pawley, William Harrigan, Russell Hopton, Noel Madison, Raymond Hatton, Harold Huber, Addison Richards and a number of others. It's a tremendous picture—and worth fighting your way in to see."—Rose Pelswick in N. Y. Journal

"'G-Men' is an electrifying movie picturing nation's war on crime with Cagney in fast-moving role. Again the staccato rat-tat-tat of the 'typewriters' and automatics echo from the thrill-filled screen of the Strand Theatre in a Warner picture which ushers in the most pulse-quickening cinematic cycle since the exciting days of the prohibition exposes. It is not only thrilling theatre but adorns its throbbing tale with a moral which should keep aroused a people shocked from complacency by the earlier film preachments against the surrender of the nation to the underworld. One climactic incident is heaped upon another in the attainment of the whirlwind finish. James Cagney contributes another of his electrifying characterizations and is admirably aided by Robert Armstrong, who contributes as thoroughgoing and virile a portrayal as any to distinguish his long career. The picture is loaded with fine actors who add a wealth of color and excellent histrionicism to the roles. William Keighley's direction keeps the action zipping along with the speed of a bullet, and maintains suspense right to the end."—Regina Crewe in N. Y. American

'Blazing melodrama. The photoplay contains several episodes which have scarcely been equalled for excitement and dramatic vigor since 'The Public Enemy' and 'Little Caesar.' Mr. Cagney's performance is the most effective he has given in a long time."—Andre Sennwald in N. Y. Times

'Jimmy Cagney scores hit in 'G-Men.' Jimmy Cagney went over to the law's side with a bang, in Warner Bros.' latest thriller, 'G-Men.' There may have been crowds watching the parade on Eighth Avenue, but we'll bet bigger ones were at the Strand, for this reporter fought to get in and out of the theatre. And did that mob of fans approve of Jimmy's new characterization? They howled and roared their approval. Thrills abound from beginning to end and we defy you not to lose your breath in the exciting sequences. A grand picture."—Julius Cohen in Journal of Commerce

"It is one long, lusty paean in homage to our Federal Agents. It is also a highly exciting film, one so packed with swiftly paced action and so capably played throughout that it easily surmounts any difficulties presented by the routine plot. A thoroughly engrossing melodrama, with a timeliness and significance seldom surpassed. Superior acting. This robust film is worth an evening of any moviegoer's time."—Liberty Magazine

"With its rapid, explosive action continually punching you in the eyes 'G-Men' emerges a swell show. A new twist in the cinema's annals of crime. It makes you feel as if you had consumed a two-volume chronicle novel of all the outrages ever perpetrated by America's various number one public enemies. A skillful, thrilling and exciting blend of fact and fiction, this 'G-Men' is as exciting as any of the old underworld films. Indeed, in many ways it is acted with a finer degree of suspense and credibility than some of those old shockers. Mr. Cagney has acted any number of superb characterizations in his screen career, but I think that here as Brick Davis he gives his most satisfactory performance. He is surrounded by a cast chosen with judgment. The construction of the film by Seton I. Miller, who wrote it, and William Keighley, who directed it, is swift and staccato. Recommended as good, solid, arresting entertainment of its kind." — William Boehnel in N. Y. World-Telegram

"A vivid, racing melodrama. One of the fastest melodramas ever made, giving the Strand Theatre audiences enough excitement to last them for weeks, or until the next of the new cycle comes along. 'G-Men' has started something. The first of its kind for several years, 'G-Men' is surefire entertainment." — Eileen Creelman in N. Y. Sun

"A thrilling drama. Undoubtedly the most thrilling melodrama that has come out of Hollywood since the movies abandoned blood and gunfire for sweetness and light. The Warners, with their customary instinct for sure-fire, topical movie subjects, have plucked the material for their new picture right out of the nation's headlines. Told with breathless realism and with meticulous regard for the record of recent events. It is, we assure you, all very thrilling, and not to be missed by any one who likes his screen entertainment. The acting is excellent." — Martin Dickstein in Brooklyn Eagle

"Cagney leads 'G-Men' to Broadway to clean up at the box office. The Freres Warner, taking advantage of the headlines in their usual excellent fashion, have turned the spotlight upon the activities of the Government special agents, those seekers after criminals who are known, in the parlance of the underworld and the headline writer as 'G-Men.' An actionful, exciting and thrilling film. It's more exciting passages keep you thrilled." — Al Sherman in N. Y. Morning Telegraph

"Great, gripping, glamorous. Socko! Another red-blooded cinema triumph for the Strand! You haven't seen a movie thriller until you've gaped and gulped and gasped in frenzied excitement at 'G-Men.' Let's forget immediately that the Warner Brothers have rendered a patriotic service by filming this dynamic drama, which glorified the Department of Justice agents of the United States Government, and give a rousing cheer for 'G-Men' on its merits as smash hit screen entertainment. Here is, indeed, the roughest, toughest, shootingest, fightingest film since 'The Public Enemy.' And Jimmy Cagney portrays a straight, brave, kindly role in the picture, giving a smooth, ingratiating and intelligent performance. He proves once again his versatility. It's a fine role in a super-fine production. William Keighley turned out a swift-paced, always intensely gripping picture. Replete with breath-taking dramatic action. Heartily recommended as a punch-packed film treat—guaranteed to chill and thrill all movie fans who can take cinematerial which mixes lead with laughter. They'll not only take it—but like it! And how!"—Irene Thirer in the N. Y. Post

"Not since 'The Public Enemy' startled film-goers with its stark and brutal reconstruction of gangster activities has there come so compelling a photoplay of the underworld as 'G-Men.' With the resourcefulness of James Cagney in giving a most magnificent performance and an impeccably chosen supporting cast, the production is a vivid and exciting entertainment. In 'The G-Men' the screen has singled out Federal men as the heroes and the exploits of the Department of Justice agents over the last three years have given it splendid material for celebration. Those most vociferous of Hollywood's critics who deplored the glorification of the plug-ugly in the extended series of gangster works, should be effectively silenced by the resultant chronicle. A gripping and fast-moving melodrama of today. William Keighley's staging of the shooting episodes, together with his frequent manipulation of the action by shots of many careening automobiles and the mounting crescendo of his climax have been accomplished with rare skill and ingenuity. The playing of the lesser roles is uniformly excellent. The most tremendously gripping screen offering ever presented by Warner Bros., as well as a signal commemoration of some of the most valiant deeds of our day."—Howard Barnes in N.Y. Herald-Tribune

The financial reports on "G-Men" are every bit as breathtaking as the critical comments. Every hour brings new records! "Phenomenal" is the only word for the business this show has done in every single situation! In San Francisco, 70,000 admissions poured into the Warfield Theater in seven days, topping all marks for the past four and one-half years! The run is to be continued indefinitely at the St. Francis! Then in Chicago, despite snow and sleet, extra cashiers were forced into service thirty minutes after the biggest opening in weeks at the Chicago Theater. Next stop—Houston, with business zooming 25% over normal figures! Texas crowds forced the management to schedule a special midnight showing. In Indianapolis, the SRO sign went up at two in the afternoon. Only complaint by manager is that patrons are staying through two shows! On to Memphis, and the biggest gross in the history of the city! Opening to a tremendous preview Friday night, it went still higher on Saturday, and on Sunday turned in the greatest gross since the theaters have been opened. All records, including the almost impossible '42nd Street' mark, fell before long lines of moviegoers. Omaha's Brandeis Theater opened to the biggest business in a year! In Minneapolis, another holdover is assured, as tremendous weekend business smashes all Orpheum Theater records for the year! At St. Louis' Shubert Theater the biggest turnout in the house's history makes a new record a certainty! Even a rainstorm couldn't keep away the thousands who tried to squeeze into the packed theater. They had to be turned away! In Newark, every box-office record in the history of the 15-year-old Branford Theater was topped! Picture may be held for three weeks, an unheard of run at this house. The Albany Strand Theater opened to capacity standing room with a heavy hail storm as competition! Even with a bad break in weather, overflow crowds made Pearl Street look like Times Square. Second day matinee was even bigger than first day. And in New York, the first five days at the Strand have trebled average business and broken every record in the theater's history. Opening-day mobs tore two doors from their hinges! Block-long lines and constant SRO crowds have forced a twenty-one-hour continuous performance policy with the doors opening at 8 A. M. and remaining open until 5 A. M. The Strand run will be continued indefinitely.

PRESS FAILING TO CONTROL RADIO REPORTING, SAYS AIR BUREAU HEAD

Bureau Has Been Unable to Curtail Radio News Broadcasts, with More Now Than a Year Ago, Declares Editor

Radio is supplanting the press in reporting the news and the Press Radio Bureau, set up a year ago by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, has failed in its specific purpose of curtailing news broadcasting, according to James W. Barrett, editor of the Press Radio Bureau and city editor of the old New York World. There is more news broadcast over the networks and individual stations than there was a year ago, when the Bureau was established, Mr. Barrett said.

Speaking before the Town Hall Club of New York, Mr. Barrett said it is entirely possible that radio, in addition to its increasing activity in news dissemination, may also assume that other function of the newspaper, the providing of background facts, expression of editorial opinion and "ruthless investigation of all situations and questions of public welfare."

"The idea of a public news service to radio listeners seems to have been achieved, and the public seems to appreciate it," said Mr. Barrett. "On the occasion of our anniversary on March 1, 1935, we invited listeners to send in their opinions. We have received nearly 5,000 answers in postcards and letters, and less than 20 of these are hostile; all the others express enthusiastic approval of the Bureau as a public service, and a service that operates without any kind of commercialism. So much for public service.

"But how about the restricting of news on the air? Here the result has been exactly the opposite of what was planned. There is more news on the air today than there was a year ago—so much more that I venture to say that the function of giving the first report of big news to a large part of the public is rapidly passing from the newspaper to the radio. Furthermore, the Press Radio Bureau plan has resulted in formation of indendent agencies who claim to gather their own news and sell it exclusively to radio stations and make it available for commercial sponsorship. Consequently, there are today brand new problems for the radio, the newspapers, the press associations and the public to consider."

How It All Came About

The past three years have brought important developments between radio and press and in 1933 there was a strong effort by the broadcasters to develop and broadcast their own news. This was followed by a threat on the part of the publishers to throw radio programs out of the newspapers altogether. In November, 1933, the crisis came, resulting in the Biltmore Conferences the following month in which a press-radio plan was accepted by the principal networks (National Broadcasting Company and the Columbia Broadcasting Company), by the three established press associations (Associated Press, United Press and International News Service) and the newspapers.

The purpose of the plan was, first, to avoid an open break between radio and the publishers; second, to give authentic news to the radio listeners as a public service, and, third, to limit the broadcasting of news so as to protect the newspapers. The plan went into effect March 1, 1934, the program presenting two daily five-minute reports of news already published in the newspapers. No bulletin was to exceed 30 words, but under rules set up by the Publishers' National Radio Committee it was permitted to present occasional special bulletins.

The first obstruction to the plan, according to Mr. Barrett, lay in the fact that only one-third of all radio stations in the United States accepted it. Many independent stations, including several affiliated on a part-time basis with the major networks, refused to take Press Radio service because they regarded it as restrictive, the news as "stale," and the cost of transmission—at the subscriber's expense—too high.

Program and Time Changed

The second obstruction, said Mr. Barrett, was the feeling of the radio public that the news was neither fresh nor the presentation effective. Consequently the program and time of broadcasts were changed, and the Bureau began to send out bulletins on all important news as soon as it was received from the press associations. The 30-word bulletin was quickly abandoned.

An example was the air reporting of the Hauptmann trial. In the Bureau's first year, 2,000 of its 4,000 bulletins were on the Hauptmann trial alone, and these 2,000 totaled as high as 10,000 words a day, or two hours of broadcasting time.

Foremost among problems for all concerned today, said Mr. Barrett, is sponsorship of news on the air. Under the Press Radio plan neither its two daily bulletins nor its special bulletins can be used for commercial purposes and they cannot be sponsored. The service operates without a dollar of profit to anyone, each subscribing radio station bearing a proportionate share of the cost of the Bureau and transmission of the reports from Bureau to station.

"The so-called outlaw or commercial news agency, on the other hand, offers to radio stations a service which can be sponsored, apparently without limitation," he said. "Some sponsors are content with a mere mention at the opening and close of the program. Others require a two-minute advertising plug at the opening, one or more plugs in the middle of the broadcast and a good, big plug at the finish.

"There is also the incidental problem of the sponsoring of news commentators. "There are two schools of opinion. One holds that commentators should be sponsored; others believe they should be strangled."

Doubts Press Being Supplanted

The Associated Press was asked for an expression in answer to Mr. Barrett's charges that the Press Radio Bureau is a failure. In the absence from New York of General Manager Kent Cooper, Jackson S. Elliott, assistant general manager, replied:

"There are, of course, divergent views held by publishers on the subject of broadcasting of news, but I cannot credit the report that the radio is supplanting the newspaper as a disseminator of news. It is true that many newspapers have long been opposed to broadcasting stations distributing news or engaging competitively in the news collecting business, but I am sure that no publisher would subscribe to the view that this form of dissemination of intelligence will ever take the place of the newspaper.

"There is confusion now and even the press associations are not in agreement as to the best means of solving this problem. The Associated Press welcomed the creation of the Press Radio Bureau and from the outset hoped it would be successful."

Associated Press Executive Challenges Claim of Radio Ascendancy; Radio Art Editor Answers Newspaper Group Charges

ANPA Committee Cites Issue

At the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in New York last month, the association's radio committee reported that continued control of news dissemination by air is vital and that the main issue is the reluctance of the newspapers and press associations to sell the news to radio advertisers for sponsorship.

This refusal, the commitee's report asserted, rests upon these two fundamentals:

1. The practice would permit the advertiser to censor and edit the news to suit not only his own advertising program but also his prejudices on social, economic, religious and political questions, and thus news would degenerate into propaganda for the advertiser.

2. Since the sale of news is the basis of the newspaper publishing business, this asset should not be sold to the broadcasters to be used in competition with the newspapers.

"The general public is demanding news by means of radio broadcasting because of its speed and convenience," the report continued. "Many radio stations are not inclined to give away the time for broadcasting news when this 'radio time' can be sold to an advertiser for a substantial amount of money. News also can be sold easily to almost any radio advertiser. . . .

"This policy . . . if it is generally adopted, eventually will destroy Press Radio Bureau and do untold damage to the public welfare. . .

" . . . . The listening public is being fooled by advertising propaganda broadcast under the guise of news."

"Radio Art" Editor Replies

To this and other charges made at the ANPA convention, C. R. Tighe, editor and publisher of Radio Art, made the following answer in the current issue of his publication:

"There is no one so blind as a man who will not see, and so it may be well to emphasize a few facts.

"First: News service for radio has established policies that insure full control and no sponsor can make changes in the reports as sent out.

"Second: News ceases to be a very valuable newspaper asset if someone is able to bring facts to public attention quicker and more accurately via another medium. Radio news services are doing this.

"Third: Newspapers often are biased in their handling of news; often inaccurate. Sometimes they are subsidized by 'interests.' Often they play the game of a favorite political party. Radio news is peculiarly free from these serious faults.

"Fourth: Arguments of publishers that advertisers may censor radio news is sheer bunk. It is a well known fact that advertisers often are able to suppress newspaper stories because the publisher is afraid he will lose a lucrative account if he doesn't take orders."

4,696,000 RADIOS MADE AND SOLD AT $45.40 AVERAGE IN LAST YEAR

$235,628,000 Is Amount Spent by Public on New Sets and Parts; Subsidy Called Necessary to Launch Television

American manufacturers established an all-time high record of 4,696,000 radio receivers made and sold to the public in 1934, "thereby spiking the fallacy that radio is losing its grip on the public."

This demonstration of radio's "vitality" was conducted by Radio Retailing, trade publication edited in New York by O. H. Caldwell, in conjunction with Columbia Broadcasting System, National Broadcasting Company and manufacturers, and included an estimate of $235,628,000 spent by the public last year on new sets and new parts for receivers already installed. This is $23,000,000 more than 1933 sales.

Of the total 4,696,000 sets sold, some 600,000 were disposed of abroad, 4,084,000 sales in this country representing a value of $185,390,000, or an average consumer selling price of $45.40.

The average retail value of table models was $34.65, this type having 2,204,000 sales. Average retail unit selling price of 1,100,000 consoles was 67.04, and of 780,000 motor sets $43.05. Battery operated radios approximated 280,000 units sold in 1934.

1,603 Different Models

According to Ralph H. Langley, radio consulting engineer in New York, 1934 witnessed an amazing total of 1,603 different models of receivers marketed by 100 set manufacturers. Of these, 93 per cent were of the superheterodyne type.

Total tube sales, both for replacements and new sets sold, reached 64,882,000 in 1934 for the world, and 55,192,000 sold domestically. Domestic sales compared as follows: 1933, 55,605,000 tubes; 1932, 44,300,000; 1931, $53,500,000; 1930, 52,000,000.

Average unit price of tubes has fluctuated as follows:

	PRICE PER TUBE
Jan. 1, 1930	$2.63
July 17, 1930	2.09
April 15, 1931	1.74
April 1, 1932	1.24
Feb. 1, 1933	1.33
Jan. 22, 1934	1.25
Mar. 1, 1935	.87

The auto set is fast becoming popular, according to the survey. In 1934 there were 780,000 such installations, comparing with 724,000 in 1933, 143,000 in 1932, 108,000 in 1931 and only 34,000 in 1930. Sale values were as follows: 1934, $28,000,000; 1933, $28,598,000; 1932, $7,150,000; 1931, $5,940,000; 1930, $3,000,000.

As of Jan. 1, 1935, passenger car registrations totaled 21,505,000, and there are now approximately 1,800,000 auto-radio sets in use, representing only 9.3 per cent of the market.

A new all-time record for exports of radio receiving equipment from the United States was recorded in 1934, when sales abroad were valued at $23,766,629, compared with $15,382,306 in 1933, an increase of $8,384,323, or 54 per cent, according to the United States Department of Commerce. Overseas sales of radio equipment last year exceeded by $1,723,083 the former record sales of 1930. The dollar value story of foreign sales follows:

ITEM	1934	1933	GAIN
Sets	$15,338,143	$9,323,535	65%
Tubes*	3,210,729	2,623,261	22%
Components	4,358,350	2,783,730	56%
Accessories	859,407	651,780	32%

* At declared value. Tubes in sets not included in Item 2.

Following several years of decline of the average unit value of radio receiving sets sold abroad from the United States in 1933 the value was recorded at only $18. This decrease was occasioned by the increasing popularity of small receiving sets in foreign markets. All-wave sets are credited with the increase in 1934 to $25.

Radio ownership in the United States, according to the survey, stood at January 1st, 1935, as follows:

No. Families in U. S.	30,919,000
No. of Radio-Homes in U. S.	21,456,000
Per Cent Ownership Saturation	69.4
Total Sets Sold in U. S. Last Year	4,084,000
No. Homes Owning Two or More Sets	2,296,000
Replacement Sales, 1934 (68.1%)	2,250,000
"Non-Radio Home" Sales, 1934 (31.9%)	1,054,000
No. of Autos with Radios in U. S.	1,800,000
Per Cent of Set Sales Other Than to Families, 1934	21

As for television, problems of technic, program and finance make impractical the immediate erection of a system on a nation-wide basis, according to an analysis by Radio Retailing.

After Germany's new public television system had been in operation a few days, the Reich's Postal Department was flooded with protests, mostly from elderly persons, who complained that television might prove a menace, invading the privacy of their homes. Explaining that it doesn't work that way is proving a chore for the government.

While in San Francisco on his way to China, Japan and the Philippines, F. A. Merrick, president of Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, expressed his belief that the coming of television will not hurt film entertainment.

Philco Radio and Television Corporation, understood to be a subsidiary of Philco radio manufacturing and battery interests, was incorporated at Wilmington, Del., to operate and maintain radio-television equipment.

Gaumont-British in London was reported to be secretly experimenting with John Baird's television system for use in theatres.

New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Washington, Chicago, Los Angeles and either Portland, Ore., or Seattle, are to have $250,000 television stations shortly, the first to be in Philadelphia. One studio will be used for televising motion pictures and the other for acts, each station having a normal radius of 75 miles, with a non-interfering radius of 60 miles.

$15,000,000 LOEW ISSUE; FOX, KAO LIST PROFITS, UNIVERSAL A DEFICIT

Cash Holdings of Loew's Reach Record High of 15 Millions; Fox Consolidated Earned Surplus Reaches $3,621,011

Financial and stock announcements of six motion picture corporations this week reflected the following:

Loew's, Inc., was considering issuing $15,000,000 in new debentures to retire present obligations, saving $350,000 annually by lowering interest.

Universal Pictures reported a $272,725 deficit for the last quarter of 1934.

Loew's cash holdings reached $15,000,000, highest in the company's history.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., operated on a $78,705 deficit in 1934, after heavy write-offs.

Fox Film's consolidated earned surplus reached $3,621,011 with the addition of $616,806 net profit for the first quarter of 1935.

Pathe's gold debentures were suspended from trading.

KAO and B. F. Keith Corporation reported profits of $41,789 and $35,820, respectively, for the first 1935 quarter, after all charges but before federal taxes.

72.30 per cent of Fox Film Class A stock was reported held by Chase National Bank and 86.18 per cent of Class B, represented by voting trust certificates, by General Theatres Equipment, Inc.

RCA reported a gross increase of $2,131,870 and net income gain of $382,300 for the first quarter, and re-elected four directors.

Issuance of $15,000,000 of long-term debentures to bear interest of 4 to 4½ per cent, under discussion by the Loew management, would be applied to retirement of the $8,715,000 sinking fund 6 per cent gold debentures now outstanding and the $4,948,032 Metro-Goldwyn 7 per cent preferred, besides retiring certain real estate mortgage bonds guaranteed by Loew's. The saving in annual interest and dividend charges effected by the new debentures would approximate $350,000 annually. Some $8,108,700 of Loew's Theatre and Realty 6 per cent bonds would not be disturbed at this time.

Loew's present cash holdings of more than $15,000,000 are said to be the largest in the history of the company, as reported in the corporation's financial statement, which for the 28 weeks ended March 14, disclosed net profits of $4,345,337, after all charges and taxes, equivalent, after dividends on $6.50 preferred stock, to $2.64 a share on approximately $1,464,700 average number of no-par shares of common stock outstanding during the period. These earnings compared with $3,973,452 for the same 1933 period.

Universal Loses in Quarter

Universal Pictures Company, Inc., and subsidiaries reported for the quarter ending January 26 a net loss of $272,725 after all charges and taxes, as compared with a net profit of $24,507, equivalent to $1.37 a share on the 17,864 shares of the 8 per cent cumulative first preferred stock, in the quarter ended Jan. 27, 1934.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., operated on a deficit of $78,705 in 1934, a sharp decline from the $380,629 net profit earned in 1933, although Frank F. Kolbe, new president, said that in 1934 there was a gross profit, before interest, taxes and provision for possible losses on loans and advances, of some $262,620. The Pathe board set aside $195,000 as provision for possible losses on loans and advances made last year.

Pathe's gross income of $262,620 in 1934 embraced returns from the Bound Brook laboratory, and also non-operating income, which included DuPont Film stock dividends.

Total assets are listed at $5,576,303. Interest on funded debt and premiums on bonds redeemed reduced gross income from $252,620 to $144,625.

The New York Stock Exchange late last week suspended from trading Pathe Exchange, Inc., 10-year 7 per cent sinking fund gold debentures due May 1, 1937, with non-detachable stock purchase warrants attached.

RCA Profits Increase 31 Per Cent

Consolidated gross income from operations of Radio Corporation of America for the first quarter of 1935 amounted to $21,265,789, compared with $19,133,919 for the same period in 1934, an advance of $2,131,870, or 11 per cent. Subsidiaries of RCA include NBC, RCA Victor and RKO Radio.

Net profit for the quarter, after all deductions, amounted to $1,618,025, compared with $1,235,725 the same quarter last year, or a 31 per cent increase.

For six consecutive quarters RCA has earned a profit.

At the RCA stockholders' meeting, held Tuesday, the following directors were reelected for three-year terms expiring May, 1938: Arthur E. Braun, John Hays Hammond, Jr., Edward W. Harden, David Sarnoff.

The other directors are: James G. Harbord, chairman; Newton D. Baker, Cornelius N. Bliss, Bertram Cutler, De Witt Millhauser, Edward J. Nally, James R. Sheffield, Frederick Strauss.

Fox Film Improves Condition

The financial condition of Fox Film, under Sidney R. Kent's management, was further approved during the 13 weeks ended March 30, on which date, after adding net profit of $616,806, the consolidated earned surplus stood at $3,621,000, all of which has accumulated since the effective date of reorganization on April 1, 1933, under the new regime.

On the basis of the 2,436,409 shares of Class A and Class B stock outstanding, the consolidated net profit for the first three months of 1935, after all charges, amounted to 25 cents a share. This compares with a loss of $233,143 for the 13 weeks ended December 29, 1934, and a profit of $805,376 for the first quarter of 1934.

There were no theatre earnings included in the new report, although Fox Film has a 42 per cent interest in National Theatres Corporation, which had been going through the process of reorganization.

The corporation reported to the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington that the Chase National Bank was the holder of 1,549,507 shares of Class A common stock as of March 9, amounting to 72.30 per cent of this stock class, while White, Weld and Company held 462,659 shares of record, but disclaimed beneficial ownership.

The company filed registration statements for listing on the New York Stock Exchange of 2,479,273 shares of no par common Class A stock, 25,000 warrants for Class A common, and 34,514 debenture rights for the same class.

72.30 Per Cent of Fox Film Class A Reported Held by Chase Bank; 86.18 Per Cent Class B by General Theatres

Information also was filed concerning salaries and remuneration of officers and directors, and bonus and profit-sharing arrangements, supervisory contracts, construction and service contracts and contracts with underwriters and otherrs, but these were filed as confidential documents with the stipulation that they not be made public.

The tieup between Fox and Gaumont British, London, was shown by the statements filed to be through Fox ownership of the United American Investment Company which owns 49 per cent of the voting stock and approximately 75 per cent of the outstanding stock of the Metropolis and Bradford Trust Company, Ltd., which, in turn, holds 58 per cent of Gaumont British ordinary stock.

Outstanding indebtedness listed includes $1,696,000 by Fox Film Corporation; $722,500 by Fox Film Realty Corporation; $1,566,000 by Fox Realty Company of California, and $12,500 by Fox Film, Ltd.

MAJORS WILL PRESS DOUBLE FEATURE BAN

New Contracts Will Prohibit Duals if Pennsylvania Court Holds Such Action Is Legal

Major distributors this week were training their guns on exhibitors who persist in the double feature practice with the declaration unofficially by several sales executives in New York that, in the event the Philadelphia federal district court's decision holding contractual banning of twin bills illegal is reversed when the pending appeal is heard by the higher court, their contracts for the 1935-36 season will incorporate air-tight anti-double featuring caluses.

On the other hand, it was said, if the lower court's ruling is upheld by the appeals court, double featuring may go unrestricted insofar as new season sales are concerned.

The basis for this most recent move in the dual bill fight is the widely publicized suit in Philadelphia of Harry Perelman, an exhibitor, against major distributors to force them to eliminate from their contracts the clauses prohibiting double featuring of their product. Such restrictions, it was pointed out at the time, had been embodied in sales contracts in the Philadelphia and a few other territories, but were not standardized or nationally in effect.

The Philadelphia district court held that the clauses resulted in collusion and restraint of trade and declared them illegal. An appeal immediately was taken to the higher court by the defendant distributors and is expected to be heard before the new selling season is far advanced.

If the defendants' appeal is successful in all probability it will result in a national prohibition of double featuring through specific clauses in contracts, inasmuch as a reversal of the lower court's ruling would have the effect of legalizing contractual dual bans. The opinion of sales executives in New York this week was that at least six major distributors would make use of the contract bans next season should they become legal. These are United Artists-20th Century; MGM, Paramount, Fox, RKO and Warner. Columbia and Universal, it is believed, would not reverse their position of opposing double feature restrictions, nor would Republic Pictures.

It is reported United Artists and RKO are allowing their product to be double featured in the Philadelphia sector, but the other companies are still insisting that their films shall not be exhibited in this manner.

In Kansas City there will be no general ban on double featuring. This was indicated when the large distributors rejected an exhibitor plan to limit double billing to inferior product, hinting at the possibilities of collusion inherent in such an arrangement.

In Chicago, where there has been a ban on double bills for the past year by mutual agreement of exhibitors in that territory, theatre men and exchanges this week were reported to have come to the conclusion that the practice is inevitable. Several theatres have returned to the twin bill within the past few weeks and last week, for the first time in about two years, a double feature bill was shown in the Loop district at the Balaban & Katz Garrick.

In Milwaukee, on the other hand, double features may be a thing of the past after June 1. At an open meeting there exhibitors resolved to abandon the practice on that date provided 90 per cent of the exhibitors in the city would sign an agreement to that effect.

7 Chicago Houses Begin Bank Night

The bank night situation throughout the country was comparatively quiet this week since the Post Office Department's order of ten days ago that any advertisement of the practice shall henceforth be barred from the mails, because the government has adjudged it a lottery.

In Los Angeles, the local grievance board meeting on the bank night case involving the San Fernando and Ventura was called off last week when J. J. Milstein disqualified himself by saying he refused to sit on bank night hearings until the pending federal court case on the subject is decided. Mr. Milstein retired too late to call an alternate and the board put the hearing over until this week.

Bank nights are reported to have been inaugurated in seven Essaness theatres in Chicago this week, with the Sheridan, Byrd, Embassy and Crawford starting the new policy May 7, the Michigan on May 11, and the Vogue and West End on May 25.

Attack on the motion picture code and the legality of the entire NRA setup, was promised last week by Sam Halpern, attorney for C. L. Hiller, if the Minneapolis grievance board carries out its order to shut off film service to Mr. Hiller of the Grand and Lyric, Crookston, Minn., for non-compliance with a cease and desist order on bank nights. Mr. Halpern said the legal question involved is bigger than that raised by the competitive situation, asserting that there is doubt in his mind whether the Congress or the President has jurisdiction over theatres engaged in intra-state business.

Brady Amusement Company of Brady, Texas, this week obtained a temporary injunction against distributors attempting to stop service on a bank night award. A permanent injunction will be sought at the hearing in Dallas district court May 29.

Universal Returns to "Post" With New Ad Campaign

Universal Pictures this week replaced its institutional single-column advertising in the Saturday Evening Post, for "The Bride of Frankenstein," after having abandoned the practice a few weeks ago following continuous use of the medium for two decades.

COMPOSERS OFFER EXTENSION OF MUSIC TAX CONTRACTS TO 1936

Burkan Announces Plan to End Exhibitors' Quandary Due to Delay of Trial of U. S. Suit Pending Against the Society

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers on Tuesday in New York expressed willingness to extend all contracts with exhibitors currently in force until the end of 1935. Through its attorney, Nathan Burkan, the Society revealed at a hearing before Federal Judge John C. Knox that because exhibitors, radio and hotel men holding licenses have been faced with uncertainty over renewals because of the delay in trial of the Government's suit, this concession would be made.

The Society became further involved in exhibitor conflicts this week when it was charged in Canada, at a hearing in the investigation into the activities of the Canadian Performing Rights Society, that theatres are being assessed three times over by the Canadian society.

The New York hearing before Judge Knox was on a motion brought by the attorney general's office to obtain a preference on the calendar for the Government's suit against ASCAP. Judge Knox reserved decision.

Representatives of the attorney general's office had argued that the licenses existing between the Society and its music licensees contain no provisions for entering negotiations for new contracts and that, as a result, licensees were in a quandary as to what steps to take, as future rates and agreements might be vitally affected by the outcome of the Government suit.

Opposes Early Trial Plea

At this point Mr. Burkan announced the Society's willingness to extend contracts now in force until the end of the current year. Mr. Burkan opposed the Government's motion for an early trial and argued that the case would have to be heard before three judges if the Government insisted upon such haste. Arthur Schwartz, of the Burkan office, and Henry Ward Beer, representing composers and publishers, argued against the Government's petition for leave to take the depositions of the Society's licensees in various sections of the country. Judge Knox reserved decision on this petition also.

Meantime, in Canada, charges that exhibitors are being assessed three times over by the Canadian Performing Rights Society, ASCAP affiliate in the Dominion, were made this week before Judge James Parker at Toronto in the investigation into license fees imposed by the Society. These charges were made by H. A. Thompson, K. C., chief counsel for Famous Players Canadian Corp., Ltd.

Theatres, it was asserted, are required to pay charges for copyrighted music in the film rental, in the score charge for filmed music, and in a straight fee for public performance privileges to the CPRS.

Thomas J. Bragg, comptroller and secretary of Famous Players Canadian, said that "it is very difficult for me to understand why, after we rent a picture for which we pay large rentals, we cannot show it until we have paid the score charges and the performing rights."

Judge Asks Score Charge Data

Judge Parker asked for information on the socalled score charge, but no one in the courtroom was able to offer an explanation beyond that it might be for the recording right of music.

H. T. Jamieson, president of the Canadian Society, interposed the argument that the license fee of 10 cents a seat should be doubled.

Mr. Bragg replied that patrons were attending neighborhood theatres to the disadvantage of large downtown houses, as indicated by the fact that the average price of a theatre ticket had dropped from 36.7 cents in 1930 to 29 cents in 1934. Paid admissions to the Famous Players Canadian theatres to the number of 160 had fallen from 48,400,000 in 1930 to 44,588,000 in 1934, Mr. Bragg testified.

The circuit had reduced its theatre rents by $340,000 since 1932, Mr. Bragg said, while salaries had been lowered more than $150,000 by a 35 per cent reduction in the payroll. Profit of $1,906,000 in 1930, he said, had fallen to $21,984 in 1932, although it rose again in 1934 to $302,625 because of economies. On the other hand, there had been no reduction in taxation, Mr. Bragg pointed out, and out of every dollar taken in, 24 or 25 cents had to be put aside to cover taxes.

Mr. Bragg continued further that the annual per capita expenditure for film shows in the United States during 1934 was $6.50 as against $2.40 in Canada. This he said he believed was due to different habits of people, "Canadians being of the more home-loving type with fewer diversions."

In the United States, he testified, theatres operate seven days weekly, while most Canadian houses are on a six-day basis. Comparing theatres in Toronto and Buffalo, N. Y., Famous Players' large downtown house in Toronto averaged $13,000 a week in gross income, while a Buffalo house having a 10 per cent greater seating capacity averaged $35,000.

R. C. Cassells, counsel for the Society, asked Mr. Bragg if Famous Players was an American corporation. Mr. Bragg replied that the stock is controlled by Paramount Publix Corp., a United States corporation.

$2,253,000 Paid Producers

The Canadian circuit in 1934 paid $2,253,000 to American film producers, the witness continued. Advertising was the fourth largest expenditure for the 160 theatres in the circuit and amounted to $1,250,000 last year, Mr. Bragg said.

He added that the rental of a film program represented about 10 per cent of the gross receipts, although this sometimes ran as high as 35 per cent in the case of special productions. This rental, he pointed out, was exported to producers in other countries. Mr. Bragg said there had been no reduction in film rentals during the depression years.

Judge Parker, who still is to hear other theatre witnesses, announced the trial would move to Montreal May 10.

Exhibitors Are Being Assessed Three Times Over by Canadian Performing Rights Society, Judge Is Told at Toronto

All-Inclusive Rate Suggested

Judge Parker, who was appointed by the Canadian Government as a Royal Commission of one to investigate the activities of the CPRS, said at the beginning of the investigation last week that the Commission had received innumerable letters from owners of small theatres. He suggested that it would be reasonable to give them an all-inclusive rate, relieving them from responsibility on the performance of individual numbers and eliminating the possibility of the Society suddenly coming down on them for illegal performance.

The Society had proposed to double its tariffs on theatres. When Mr. Jamieson was cross-examined on this proposed increase by Arthur G. Slaught, K. C., appearing for the Toronto Musical Protective Association, he was asked whether the present condition of the theatre business or comparative ability to pay had been taken into consideration.

"I don't think conditions had anything to do with the adjustment," he replied. "Our fee is very small, very modest. We don't base our fee on conditions."

"Don't you consider the licensee's ability to pay?"

"The ability to pay determines whether we get paid, not at what rate we set our tariffs," Mr. Jamieson responded.

"Is this a really fair time to double the tariff against the theatres?"

"We are really not concerned with times nor the conditions," replied Mr. Jamieson. "We are concerned only with the tariff. It was decided it was not sufficient."

"You mean that you, Mr. Jamieson, decided it was not sufficient," Mr. Slaught countered.

"A somewhat weak institution whose purpose I have not yet discovered," was Judge Parker's comment at the conclusion of this testimony. "You seem to fix your tariff purely mechanically, based on certain information of conditions in Europe, not here, using not the reasonable measure but the greatest possible measure and making no reduction from that."

The Canadian Society, incorporated in 1925, has had an increase in revenues from $17,000 in 1931 to $113,000 in 1934.

Congressman Percy L. Gassaway of Oklahoma was guest of honor at the weekly forum of the New York Motion Picture Club on Tuesday, where he delivered an address on "The United States of Today."

New Monopoly Suit To Name Electrics

While the taking of testimony continued this week at Wilmington in General Talking Pictures' anti-trust suit against Electrical Research Products, Inc., Western Electric and American Telephone and Telegraph, S. Theodore Hodgman, assignee of Royal Amplitone Company, filed notice over the week-end of intention to institute in federal court an anti-trust action against these electrics and virtually all of the large producing companies. Damages of $15,000,000 are to be sought under the Clayton Act for allegedly forcing Amplitone out of business by an alleged "unlawful combine."

In addition to naming as defendants the major producing and distributing companies, Mr. Hodgman's suit also names Eugene Howard Buck personally and as president of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and Louis Bernstein, individually and as president of the Music Publishers' Protective Association. The Fox-Hearst Corporation also is named as a defendant.

Schlesinger Charges Delay

The complaint, prepared by Ralph Vatner, states that the producing companies "aided and abetted wilfully and knowingly" in the "conspiracy to prevent the sale of Royal Amplitone equipment through the tying-in agreements with Erpi, under which the producers agreed to use only Western Electric equipment for recording and reproduction of talking pictures."

In the General Talking suit, Max A. Schlesinger, president of the company, testified that obstacles were placed in his path in dealing with producers. He related how, in an effort to license Paramount and Universal through meetings with Adolph Zukor and Carl Laemmle, he was held up long enough by John E. Otterson, president of Erpi, with whom he also had conferred, to fail to make the deals.

Mr. Schlesinger said Mr. Zukor and Mr. Laemmle both had told him they had some sort of understanding with Erpi whereby they were to negotiate with Erpi only.

Testimony was presented during the week by Horace Truitt, projectionist at Madison, Ga., and Jacob Levin, General Talking Pictures salesman, to show that exhibitors had been forced to use Erpi and Western Electric equipment in order to secure certain films. In support of this assertion a deposition was read from Abel Cary Thomas, Warner general counsel.

Cite Demand for W.E. Equipment

Mr. Truitt testified that the Madison theatre used DeForest sound equipment and that when he and the owner went to Atlanta to book "Naughty Marietta" they were told by an MGM booker that a print would be supplied if they had RCA or Western Electric sound. Mr. Levin produced a letter from E. M. Fay of Providence which said that when Mr. Fay signed a contract for "Grand Hotel" he noticed that a demand for Western Electric projectors had been made. In his letter Mr. Fay said he had been asked to take non-Erpi machines from his Carleton theatre for the showing of the film and to ship the equipment to some other Fay house.

The deposition of Mr. Thomas included a letter from Erpi to Vitaphone in regard to an agreement between the two companies which was approved by C. E. Quigley, Vitaphone vice-president. The letter said that Vitaphone was to make pictures on Erpi equipment but could not distribute them to exhibitors with other than Erpi machines because "it might impair the prestige and business reputation" of the two companies, unless non-Erpi equipment was equal to that of the defendants. In event the non-Erpi machines did not come up to standard required, Vitaphone was to stop distribution until arbitration decided as to whether the equipment was suitable. Vitaphone was also to notify Erpi of locations of equipment other than Erpi on which Vitaphone proposed to permit reproduction.

General Talking Pictures and Duovac Radio this week recalled David R. Hochreich, vice-president and general manager of Byers Studios and former president of Vocafilm, to the stand before closing its side of the testimony in its anti-trust action against Electrical Research Products, Western Electric, and American Telephone and Telegraph in the United States district court at Wilmington. The plaintiffs finished on the stand Tuesday and adjourned until Wednesday, when the defendant electrics opened their defense.

Mr. Hochreich, who testified for the plaintiffs last week that the unfair practices of the defendants brought about the ruin of his Vocafilm, told of an agreement between Erpi and the Music Publishers Protective Association in which Erpi paid E. C. Mills, trustee for the Music Publishers, $100,000 for recording license rights. He also told of several other agrements between the defendants and producers and exhibitors.

Paramount Not Asking More Time For Fox 'Met' Bid

Paramount Publix Corporation, mentioned last week as a possible bidder for Fox Metropolitan Playhouses to the extent of a $4,000,000 or $4,500,000 cash offer for the circuit, will not make a formal application for an extension of the time during which cash bids or new plans will be received by the court and the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee. The deadline for submission of new plans of reorganization or cash offers originally was last Friday, but on Thursday Federal Judge Julian W. Mack granted an extension to May 9.

Paramount interests pointed out that even if the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres or the Si Fabian reorganization plan is approved by the committee and court at the hearing this Thursday, creditors of Fox Metropolitan still must be given 30 days in which to assent to or reject the plan.

According to spokesmen for Paramount, this 30-day period will be sufficient for the company to make a thorough study of the situation.

Reorganization of Fox West Coast theatre holdings will be completed in Kansas City late this month when Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain units are formally discharged from bankruptcy in U. S. district court.

The two units automatically were dissolved when National Theatres took title to the assets last Saturday. Through the transfer, National Theatres acquired the stock of Fox Midwest Theatres Corp., which supersedes Rocky Mountain, and the purchase of Midland gave National Theatres ownership of stock in Fox Central States Theatres Corp.

The new Fox Midwest corporation will have its headquarters in Denver and Associated Theatres will be one of its subsidiaries.

Dickinson to Atlanta

Arthur Dickinson, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America home office, left for Atlanta to attend a convention of the National Fire Protection Association.

Allied Alters Its Convention Plans

Allied States Association this week issued details of a revised program for the four-day 1935 convention which starts May 20 at the Piedmont Hotel in Atlanta, Ga. The revision calls for business meetings to be held in the afternoons throughout the convention, with golf in the morning and social activities at night.

The directors' meeting, originally scheduled for Tuesday, will be held at 4 P.M. Monday and the first general business session will be at 2 P.M. Tuesday, with a welcome to the convention by Governor Talmadge.

Aside from these changes the convention will be conducted as originally planned.

No elections of officers will be held at the convention, Sidney E. Samuelson having been reelected president last February. New elections will be held next January. Mr. Samuelson said in New York this week that the organization is giving serious thought to an arrangement with a distributor for product for its 5,000 member theatres. This is expected to be discussed at the convention.

Negotiations are underway to add three states to the 38 already in the organization. Two units are involved and Allied leaders have set terms under which the units may join.

Proposal of the Independent Theatre Owners of New York to boycott distributors owing to differences over percentage demands was discussed at a meeting of the organization last week, but action was deferred pending settlement of the double feature situation in Philadelphia. Complaints have been made that the major distributors are asking the same percentages for all classifications of theatres regardless of run.

John Devlin is acting president of Allied Theatres of Massachusetts, MPTOA affiliate, following the recent death of George Giles. No date for an election has been set.

Roy R. Blair of Indianapolis was elected president of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana at the annual meeting Tuesday. Mr. Blair succeeds Earle Cunningham. Other officers are: Morris Rubin, Michigan City, vice-president; Harry Markun, Indianapolis, treasurer; Helen R. Keeler, Indianapolis, secretary; Charles R. Metzger, Indianapolis, counsel and general manager.

Officials of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia met in Richmond Wednesday to plan the association convention in Roanoke June 10.

Montgomery Elected

Robert Montgomery was elected president of the Screen Actors' Guild this week, succeeding Eddie Cantor. James Cagney, Ann Harding and Chester Morris were elected first, second and third vice-presidents, respectively.

Griffith to England

D. W. Griffith plans to leave for England this week to remake one of his early successes, "Broken Blossoms," for Julius Hagen at the Twickenham Studio.

HOLLYWOOD FORMS OWN ARMY FOR PROTECTION IN "EMERGENCIES"

Regiment of 740 Troopers Can Be Assembled at Strategic Places Within an Hour to Cope With Any Catastrophe

Hollywood has its own private army in the making—"The Hollywood Hussars," armed to the teeth and ready to gallop on horseback within an hour to cope with any emergency menacing the safety of the community—fights or strikes, floods or earthquakes, wars, Japanese "invasions," Communistic "revolutions," or whatnot. And they swear it is not a publicity stunt, citing the enlistment of a score of United States Army officers in the cause of community protection.

There will be a regiment of 40 officers and 700 men, who, on a call from the constituted authorities for assistance, will be assembled at strategic points to ride to the danger zone, with colors flying and sabres glistening in the sun.

A military-social organization and regiment founded some few weeks ago in Hollywood by Gary Cooper, in association with Hollywood citizens representing various civic, military, industrial and motion picture interests, the Hollywood Hussars have been centralized temporarily in the Hollywood Athletic Club.

Arthur Guy Empey, noted as author of "Over the Top," a patriotic book and film of World War days, is in command as colonel. Second in charge is Harry D. Howell, former president of the Shrine Club and a well known Hollywood civic leader, who will serve as lieutenant-colonel.

Gary Cooper, six-foot Paramount star, in founding the regiment, decreed, as a cornerstone for the constitution, the belief that "Americanism is an unfailing love of country; loyalty to its institutions and ideals; eagerness to defend it against all enemies; undivided allegiance to the flag; and a desire to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and posterity." Therefore, "Americanism is the foundation upon which we are building the Hollywood Hussars," and "We are solemnly pledged to uphold and to protect the sacred principles and ideals of our country."

"Strictly non-sectarian and non-political," the Hussars are being organized, drilled and groomed as a smart, well-disciplined group prepared for any civic catastrophe, with medical and first-aid detachments under Dr. Rex Duncan, noted Los Angeles surgeon, as captain; a signal communications troop with broadcasting units prepared to establish communications; an engineers' detachment to do field work, and a military police division—the "strong arm" of the army. There is an intelligence section, too, a motorcycle detachment, motorized transports and, of course, the troops.

It is declared to be the only cavalry unit of its kind in the country, organized to provide the motion picture colony and thereabouts with a mounted regiment as armed protection, to render first aid, and to act officially at public functions and for parades and fiestas.

The publicity and photographic sections, both important adjuncts, under Jack Smalley, western manager for Fawcett Publications, and Edward Laemmle, Universal director, comprise detachments of newspaper men, writers, press agents, and newsreel and still cameramen.

The sponsors are working to establish branch divisions of the Hussars in other cities. This could mean a second national army.

A clubhouse and regimental headquarters are being erected near Hollywood. Drill grounds, already secured, are lighted for weekly evening drills and maneuvers, mounted. Drills are based on United States Cavalry regulations, and are under direction of Major M. Kiefer, old cavalryman. The military board consists of a group of high-ranking officers from the regular United States Army.

The Hollywood Hussars are armed with sabre and lance for the time being, and are colorfully uniformed in blue breeches with yellow stripes, yellow shirts, blue tunics and Anzac style hats, sharply tilted.

The regiment is self-supporting. Many already have their own horses. "Hollywood's Own" is the official trademark.

"We, the Hollywood Hussars, by loyalty, efficiency and service, have determined to make our regiment the model which will inspire other communities to organize similar bodies of trained Americans throughout the country," declares the regimental notice of formation in explaining the national aim.

Explaining the local objective, the founders said: "The regiment is at the service of Los Angeles County to serve with efficiency and dispatch in catastrophes such as earthquakes, uncontrollable conflagrations, or any other emergencies menacing the safety of our community."

Gary Cooper, Founder, and the Regimental Staff Will Work to Encourage Establishment of Similar Units Elsewhere

If the danger zone should be too distant for mounted men to reach with dispatch, the Service Troop, by means of its motorized transport, will be capable of rapidly transporting men, field equipment and horses to the point, or points, threatened.

The personnel, with the exception of ten per cent of the maximum strength, will consist of men who have served in the United States Army, Navy, National Guard, Officers Reserve Corps, Reserve Officers Training Corps, or who are graduates of accredited military academies and schools.

There are to be no honorary ranks or offices in the Hussars.

The regiment is chartered under the laws of California and is not connected with the federal or state military forces. "Only the highest type of American manhood can gain admittance to our ranks," it was explained.

Men between the ages of 20 and 45 years with previous military training "who sincerely believe in upholding our American institutions" may apply for active membership.

Applicants must be American citizens, physically fit and not under five feet and seven inches in height.

The regiment is designed to create a picturesque and colorful troop, such as the famous Black Horse Troop of Chicago, and the equally famous Squadron A of New York. Of more importance, however, from a military standpoint, is the ambition of the regimental sponsors to "serve as a bulwark against the subversive influences to which young men are subjected in these troubled times."

Adjoining the outdoor arena now being used for night drills will be a field of 25 acres for field maneuvers and military sports activities. Adequate stables for regimental and privately owned horses will be built. Horses are available at a rental of $1.00 per nightly drill for those not owning their mounts. The regiment will eventually purchase a full complement of horses without cost to members.

The squadron commanders, troop commanders, training and discipline officers are being selected from applicants with previous commissioned service in the United States Army. All must be honorably discharged or retired from active service.

Hussars will be instructed in equitation as it is taught at the Cavalry School at Fort

SENATE GROUP TO PUSH COPYRIGHT LEGISLATION

Patents Committee Responds to State Department Plea; Begin Hearings on Dickstein Bill

Members of the Senate patents committee met in Washington last week to consider the course to be followed with respect to copyright legislation and agreed to push the bill in response to pressure from the state department.

Public hearings on the bill now appear unlikely, although complaints and requests for a hearing, which may be taken up in informal conferences, have been received from the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, the Authors' League and the Music Publishers' Protective Association. Representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, the Society and others protested this week against the bill, hitting the provision to drop the minimum penalty for infringement and the rigidity of protection for an author against charges in his work.

Hearings on the Dickstein bill, which applies the contract labor provisions of the immigration laws to actors, were scheduled to begin this week before the House immigration committee, of which Representative Dickstein is chairman.

Among the activities of various state legislatures still in session was the defeat of anti-designated playdate measures in the North Carolina and Minnesota legislatures. A similar bill, passed by the Ohio legislature, recently was declared unconstitutional by the state attorney general. A measure drawn along almost identical lines still is pending in Michigan.

Revenue Bill in Alabama

In Alabama, a general revenue bill for the next four years containing a 10 per cent tax on all theatre tickets with the provision that it must be passed along to the public was sent to the printer by the recess committee on finance and taxation of the legislature. Under the proposed law every ticket would be taxed.

The full force of the Illinois administration has been swung behind the 3 per cent state sales tax bill that is now before the House. It passed the Senate by a vote of 39 to 14. Another bill to impose a 10 per cent tax on theatre admissions also made its appearance this week, the proposal taxing theatres on a graduated scale according to seating capacity.

The Florida legislature, completing its fifth week of a scheduled eight-week session, has before it no bills inimical to the film industry, the only proposal affecting motion pictures being the proposed 10 per cent admission tax, which was dropped. A billboard tax is pending and another bill has been introduced to impose heavy fees on bank nights, the latter being reported unfavorably. A resolution, inviting the motion picture industry to move from California to Florida, was introduced last week, passed by both the House and the Senate and signed by the governor. The resolution stresses the fact that the state has no income tax.

Governor Herring of Iowa this week signed the chain store tax bill providing for a double levy on chain stores. One impost is based on the number of stores, the other on gross receipts.

The Massachusetts legislature last week passed a bill legalizing use of 4,000-foot reels in projection machines, thus removing an old regulation limiting reels to 2,000 feet. Operators' Local 182 immediately passed a resolution forbidding its members to operate with reels longer than 1,000 feet.

The Missouri Senate broke the sales tax deadlock when it voted to reconsider its amendment for one-half of one per cent as against the House proposal for two per cent.

Fall Session in Ohio

Ohio's tax program this week appeared destined for a special session of the legislature to be called by Governor Davey next autumn. The present session has established a record for the number of bills introduced affecting the film industry, but Senate recesses have prevented action. The session will recess May 16 and adjourn May 23 sine die, according to the present plan.

A measure seeking to license circuit theatre operators was introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature last week. Applying to exhibition, the bill imposes a fee of $50 each for groups of two theatres and establishes assessments as high as $1,000 per house for larger circuits.

Fox Begins New Method Of Contracting Talent

Fox this week inaugurated a new plan to insure more harmonious working relations with agents. In the future, agents will contact Jack Gain for long term contracts for actors, writers and one-picture directors. John Zinn will handle long term contracts for directors, and Colonel Jason S. Joy will engage writers.

James O'Keefe will be the contact for music and composers, while Julian Johnson will buy stories and plays. Phil Friedman and James Ryan will look after one-picture deals for players and Winfield Sheehan and Sol Wurtzel will handle stars, directors, writers and others in which negotiations are more complicated.

Yale Professors Form New Haven Cinema Guild

A New Haven Cinema Guild has been organized in that city, sponsored by a group of Yale professors and others, to bring "artistic pictures" to New Haven. Among the sponsors are Professors Allardyce Nicoll, School of Drama; Jerome Davis, Jack R. Crawford, Ellsworth Huntington.

Hollywood Hussars Getting into Form

Riley, Kansas, said to be one of the three finest military training schools of the world for mounted troops.

The initiation fee is $20.00. Dues are $5.00 monthly, payable in advance. After his acceptance a member, when ordered, must purchase his field service uniform and minor equipment at a cost of $45.00. The Hussar full dress uniform will cost $65.00. If, and when a Hussar is commissioned an officer up to and including the rank of captain, he is required to pay an additional fee of $25.00, with monthly dues raised to $10.00. Above the rank of captain the fee is $50.00 with dues of $10.00 per month.

A donation of $250.00 will entitle any person to be a contributing sponsor.

Men interested in the advancement of military-social organizations may be enrolled as regimental organizers by contributing $100.00.

Women prominent and active in the social life of the community and who desire to assist the regiment in its social affairs and functions may, upon payment into the regimental fund of not less than $100.00, be enrolled as members of the social governing board.

Schools of the Regiment Are:

School of the Hussar: Department of Horsemanship (equitation and horse training, hippology and grooming, fundamentals of horseshoeing); Department of Tactics (minor tactics, liaison, cavalry drill, marching and camping); Department of Cavalry Weapons (musketry, lance, sabre, pistol); Department of General Instruction (map reading, riot duty, lectures on cavalry, history of cavalry, military courtesy).

Non-Commissioned Officers School: Department of Horsemanship (equitation and horse training, hippology and stable management, horseshoeing, transportation); Department of Tactics (minor tactics, cavalry drill, field fortifications, marching and camping); Department of Cavalry Weapons (musketry, lance, sabre, pistol); Department of General Instruction (troop administration, mess management, interior guard duty, military law, riot duty, hygiene and first aid, military courtesy, customs of the service, leadership and discipline, training methods, rules of land warfare, map reading and sketching, pioneer duties).

Troop Officers' School: Advanced instruction and continuation of subjects taught in the Non-Commissioned Officers' Schools will be given only to first and second lieutenants desirous of fitting themselves for commissions as troop commanders.

Field Officers' School: Instruction to be given only to captains.

Troop B will be a special exhibition and rough-riding troop for show purposes, composed of about 30 Hussars.

Besides Founder Cooper and Colonel Arthur Guy Empey, it was learned that Major Julius Klein, who resigned last week as studio assistant to Carl Laemmle; Captain Jack Smalley, of Fawcett fan magazines; and First Lieutenant Edward Laemmle, a director of Universal, are on the officers' staff.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

Grim humor continues to surround the recent theatre bombings and fires in Boston. In the first place, Herbert E. Logan, now serving a jail sentence, arrived in the town to burn a theatre, it was alleged, for which he was reputed to have been promised $250. Logan is said to have had five sticks of phosphorus and other necessities, but had forgotten to find out which theatre he was to burn. He inquired at various theatres throughout the city for a "George Anderson," who, he alleged, he had been told would inform him which theatre to fire.

George Baker, of Somerville, Mass., to whom Logan is said to have told his story in a barroom, went to Manager Russell Burke, of the Frederick E. Liebman Tremont theatre in Boston and allegedly attempted to sell his information. Baker's story not only resulted in Logan's arrest and conviction, but the publicity Baker received brought him to the attention of the Somerville police who had been looking for him on a non-support charge.

The Mae West-Frank Wallace marriage situation at a glance, as reported by the New York Evening Post:

NEW YORK—Frank Wallace, song-and-dance man, admitted today that he married Mae West in Milwaukee in 1911 and was divorced by her in 1916 or 1917. He still loves her.

HORSECOLLAR, IOWA—Frank Wallace, sempi-pro hog caller and whittling champion of Gooch County, admitted today that he married Mae West in Milwaukee in 1911. "I wish she'd c-mup and see me some time," he said wistfully.

SEPTICEMIA, CAL.—A junior in Snap College today asserted that he is the original Frank Wallace who married Mae West in Milwaukee in 1911.

FLUFFING MANOR, LESSER TWICKLESFORD HANTS, ENGLAND—The Hon. Francis Wallace, F.R.G.S., said today, "I married Mae West in Milwaukee in 1911 while traveling incognito in the States as Frank Wallace. I can still recall how we took the ferry to Milwaukee from New York across the Harlem River.

"The cowboys and Indians had quite a celebration for us afterward."

ALSO RUN, VT.—Private Frank Wallace (retired), dean of the G.A.R. Veterans' Home here, admitted today that while touring with Mae West in a "Little Women" company in 1911, he married her.

"We were too young to know our minds," he said, "and we drifted apart. I hear she's made quite a name for herself in the movin' pitchers since then."

As proof of his claim, Mr. Wallace exhibited a photograph of Miss West, signed, "Sincerely, Mae West."

BILGEWATER, TEX.—"I am the Frank Wallace who did NOT marry Mae West," Frank Wallace, tumbleweed grower of near here, said today.

"I was never in Milwaukee, I don't like women, and who is this Mae West, anyway?"

YUHU, CHINA—Liang Ch'ien, birds' nest hunter, announced today that he is starting by ox cart, rail and boat for California to claim Mae West as his wife.

Mr. Liang, through an interpreter, said that he married Miss West in Milwaukee in 1911.

"But the records say she married Frank Wallace," the reporter protested.

"Liang Ch'ien in English means Frank Wallace," Mr. Liang explained, imperturbably.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Municipal authorities are reported to be investigating the presence here last week of a visitor from Hollywood.

This person, rumored to be a press agent, was seen fooling around the marriage license bureau, according to several reliable witnesses, just before Mae West's 1911 marriage license was discovered.

ADDENDUM—Mae West's new picture opens here next week.

The celebration, of course, started last Monday, and marks the SILVER Jubilee of England's George and Mary.

And from Richard Willis, in London, we hear that the prices of seats to view the royal procession soared to unprecedented heights, $125 to $250 having been asked freely for the best positions.

In the time of King Edward II it cost a farthing to see the Coronation procession, and Queen Elizabeth could be viewed for sixpence. Charles II brought two shillings and sixpence, George II commanded a pound, and George III brought a pound to five guineas, "and he wasn't worth it," added Willis.

Marlene Dietrich, sensuous Paramount blonde star, departed from New York a couple of weeks ago after seeing all the Broadway shows, night clubs and other such places of interest. "I was shocked," Marlene said when, upon her arrival at Hollywood, she was asked for an opinion about the "moral tone" of the Broadway theatre. Fraulein Dietrich had, it seems, been covered with "embarrassment and confusion" while witnessing a performance of "The Children's Hour," a play about Lesbianism, and was generally disgusted with exhibitions of nudity and salacious humor in other stage productions.

It is, however, reported by an intimate of Miss Dietrich that the German lady's favorite amusement in Hollywood when time permits, is to attend—disguised in smoked glasses and male attire—a small burlesque house on Los Angeles' Main Street.

TIME—FIRST DIVISION CONTRACT CANCELLED

Magazine Newsreel To Be Marketed Temporarily Through State Rights Exchanges

First Division Exchanges, Inc., ceases from this date to be the national medium for distributing and selling the "March of Time."

Henry R. Luce's Time publishing interests have negotiated a release from the contract whereby First Division was to handle the two-reel magazine newsreel nationally for a minimum of ten months, effective with the third subject, now being shown in theatres.

March of Time, Inc., will market its product for the time being through independent exchanges in the socalled "state rights" field, and in this connection will make use of the 13 exchanges operated in as many territories by First Division as owner or in association with others.

All Arrangements Temporary

Similar arrangements with independent exchanges already have been made in another dozen territories. All, however, including First Division's modified territorial handling, are temporary, on an issue-to-issue basis, and the arrangement may be canceled at any time.

At this moment March of Time is undecided whether it will continue distributing through individual deals made with independent exchanges or make a national distribution arrangement with some other company. In any event a decision will be made as to future distribution channels in time for the 1935-36 season.

Some of the exchanges participating with March of Time in the new temporary arrangement include: Midwest Film Distributors, handling Kansas City, Des Moines and Omaha; Farwest Film Exchanges of Sam Berkowitz, in Los Angeles and San Francisco; Distinctive Screen Attractions, Denver and Salt Lake City; Monogram Independent Film Distributors, Claude Ezell, Dallas; Henri Ellman's Capital Film Corporation, Chicago and Milwaukee; Lee Goldberg, Indianapolis; Gilbert Nathanson's Monogram Pictures Exchange, Minneapolis; Principal Exchange, Seattle.

The 13 territories in which First Division will sell and distribute, temporarily, are Albany, Atlanta, Buffalo, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, New Orleans, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington, and through association with others in Louisville. First Division's plan, announced months ago, to establish its own exchanges everywhere, did not materialize further than the aforementioned 13 territories.

Percentage Sales Basis

These exchanges, following custom, will receive a percentage on sales, whether these are consummated by the exchanges or by March of Time's own sales executives. The percentage differs according to the territory.

The exchanges will be protected, however, on unplayed business under contract, if and when March of Time withdraws from the temporary arrangement and effects a permanent tieup elsewhere. For example, if an exchange has sold a contract for six issues and only three have been delivered, played and paid for under that contract, and March of Time withdraws from the arrangement, then the exchange will receive a percentage agreed upon for the remaining three releases. That exchange, however, will not service the account for the three unplayed issues, but these will be distributed by the new distribution medium.

There are to date 1,163 theatres in this country playing "March of Time," the reel that dramatizes the news.

The sponsors originally set out to distribute to only 3,000 "key" accounts, "and no more." This policy was quickly abandoned, in March, and the sales crew was instructed to obtain as wide a distribution as could be obtained. At the same time there was instituted a reasonable adjustment of rental prices when they felt the subject had been oversold. The adjustment included refunds on all contracts taken at prices higher than the new scale. Where an exhibitor pays less than $50 a release on a six-release basis and where his experience with four subjects tells him the price is too high, he may cancel and March of Time promises to return 50 per cent of his rental price. Any account signing for six releases automatically gets an option on the following group of 12. If, however, March of Time desires to cancel for a competitive sale elsewhere, the producer agrees to pay the exhibitor half of the rental on the initial six. There will also be a credit of 10 per cent of the total contract for accessories, this applying to new contracts on the new selling basis.

That Huey Long Episode

March of Time's first important publicity recognition in the news press of the country came a few days ago as the result of the deletion from the third release of a sequence which "puts Huey Long in his place." This part was taken out in the Kingfish's native Louisiana because the publishers feared "that New Orleans audiences 'might riot.'". Considerable comment followed in newspapers throughout the country.

First Division's management and the various interests which have participated financially in the contemplated expansion—including Pathe Exchange, Inc., March of Time, Inc., the Fiske-Ludington group, et al—are still trying to arrive at a plan for future operations in distribution and production. The management and various factors involved were all silent as to the widely divergent speculations. Broadway heard reports that: (1) William M. L. Fiske, III, was in England to try to arrange for financing; (2) Pathe is and is not going to continue financing First Division production and/or expansion; (3) Joe Brandt, former president of Columbia Pictures, may participate in the company, etc.

AUSTRALIAN DISTRIBUTOR QUOTA IN JULY; EXHIBITOR, JANUARY, '36

Bill Passes Through All Stages of New South Wales Assembly; Approval by Upper House Called Certain

by CLIFF HOLT
Sydney Correspondent

At long last it is certain that Australia is to have its first experience of a film quota law. With but three amendments of any importance, the Quota Bill has passed all stages of the New South Wales Assembly, and practically through the Upper House, where its passage is a foregone conclusion. Unless the unexpected happens, the Quota will be enforceable on distributors as from July this year, and on exhibitors from January, 1936.

British films receive preferential treatment under the provisions of the bill, as do the distributors of British films. British distributors in Australia are not obliged to release Australian-produced quota films, and exhibitors are not allowed to reject British pictures to make room for their Australian quota films, British product being exempted from the rejection clause.

Three on Advisory Committee

Elaborating on the amendment which reduces the number on the advisory committee from eleven members to three, the Premier, Mr. Stevens, declared that eleven not only would be unwieldy but would also express to a large extent a trade opinion, as the trade would have six representatives as against five Government appointees. Two likely members of the committee are the chief censor, Cresswell O'Reilly, and F. W. Marks, chairman of the film enquiry. Principal points in the amended bill are:

1. Exhibitors' quota is 4 per cent in the first year, 5 per cent in the second, 7½ per cent in the third, 10 per cent in the fourth, 12½ per cent in the fifth.
2. Distributors' quota is 5 per cent in the first year, 7½ per cent second year, 10 per cent third year, 12½ per cent fourth year and 15 per cent fifth year.
3. Distributors of British pictures do not come within the scope of the Act.
4. Distributors' quota starts three months after the Act is passed—which will mean approximately July, 1935.
5. Exhibitors' quota starts nine months after the Act is passed—about January, 1936.
6. To make room for quota films, an exhibitor may reject the necessary number of foreign films he has under contract, but he cannot reject British pictures under this clause.
7. Distributors cannot force exhibitors to buy British, American or any film in order to secure Australian films to fulfil the quota.
8. If the number of Australian pictures is insufficient, or their cost is excessive, an exemption may be obtained reducing the number of pictures an exhibitor must show, or a distributor must release, to the quantity obtainable.
9. All pictures submitted by producers for inclusion under the quota must attain the standard of quality established by the advisory committee, the members of which must have no financial interest in the film industry.
10. A picture failing to pass the merit test is refused quota benefits. Distributors are not obliged to release it, nor exhibitors to show it, but the producer may strive for whatever bookings he can obtain without the assistance of the law.
11. If an exhibitor intends to reject a foreign picture to make room for a quota picture, he is required to give notice in writing to the distributor 28 days in advance of the date on which he will play the quota film.
12. An Australian film is defined as one which has been wholly or mainly produced in Australia, or in which all studio scenes have been photographed in Australia; and (where the film is produced by a company) the production company must be incorporated in Australia.
13. The quota applies to Australian feature productions of a minimum of 5000 feet in length, which have begun production since January 1, 1934.
14. The quota excludes newsreels, scenics, topicals, educationals, etc.; but for some specific point of merit, the Advisory Committee can recommend that the Minister extend quota privileges to a picture that otherwise would not be advisable.
15. Penalties for non-compliance with the Act range up to £100.

In the debate on the Bill, the Opposition attempted to include a general rejection right of 25 per cent on all contracts, but the attempt was defeated on the score that the proposal was outside the scope of the bill before the House. On this point the Premier said:

"It would give exhibitors the right to reject Australian pictures—the very pictures we are compelling them to show. I am quite prepared to discuss the principle of general rejection, and the chief secretary has assured the House that the Government would consider that as a separate problem, and arrange separate legislation."

Theatres to Pay Tenth of Ontario Relief Tax

Of the $15,000,000 which Ontario needs for relief, theatres and amusements will be expected to contribute $1,500,000 more, and exhibitors are considerably troubled.

The new tax schedule is effective June 1 and the exemption on low-priced tickets is abolished.

The new tax schedule follows:

Admission Price	Tax
9-18 cents	1 cent
19-45 cents	5 cents
46-85 cents	10 cents
86-$1.50	15 cents
$1.51-$2.00	25 cents
$2.01-$2.50	30 cents
$2.51-$3.00	40 cents
Over $3.00	50 cents

The money is specifically earmarked to be used only for relief purposes and each tax ticket will be so marked. The Ontario Government has decided to pay relief costs out of current revenues, a practice not general among Canadian municipalities and governments. A provincial income tax is also proposed.

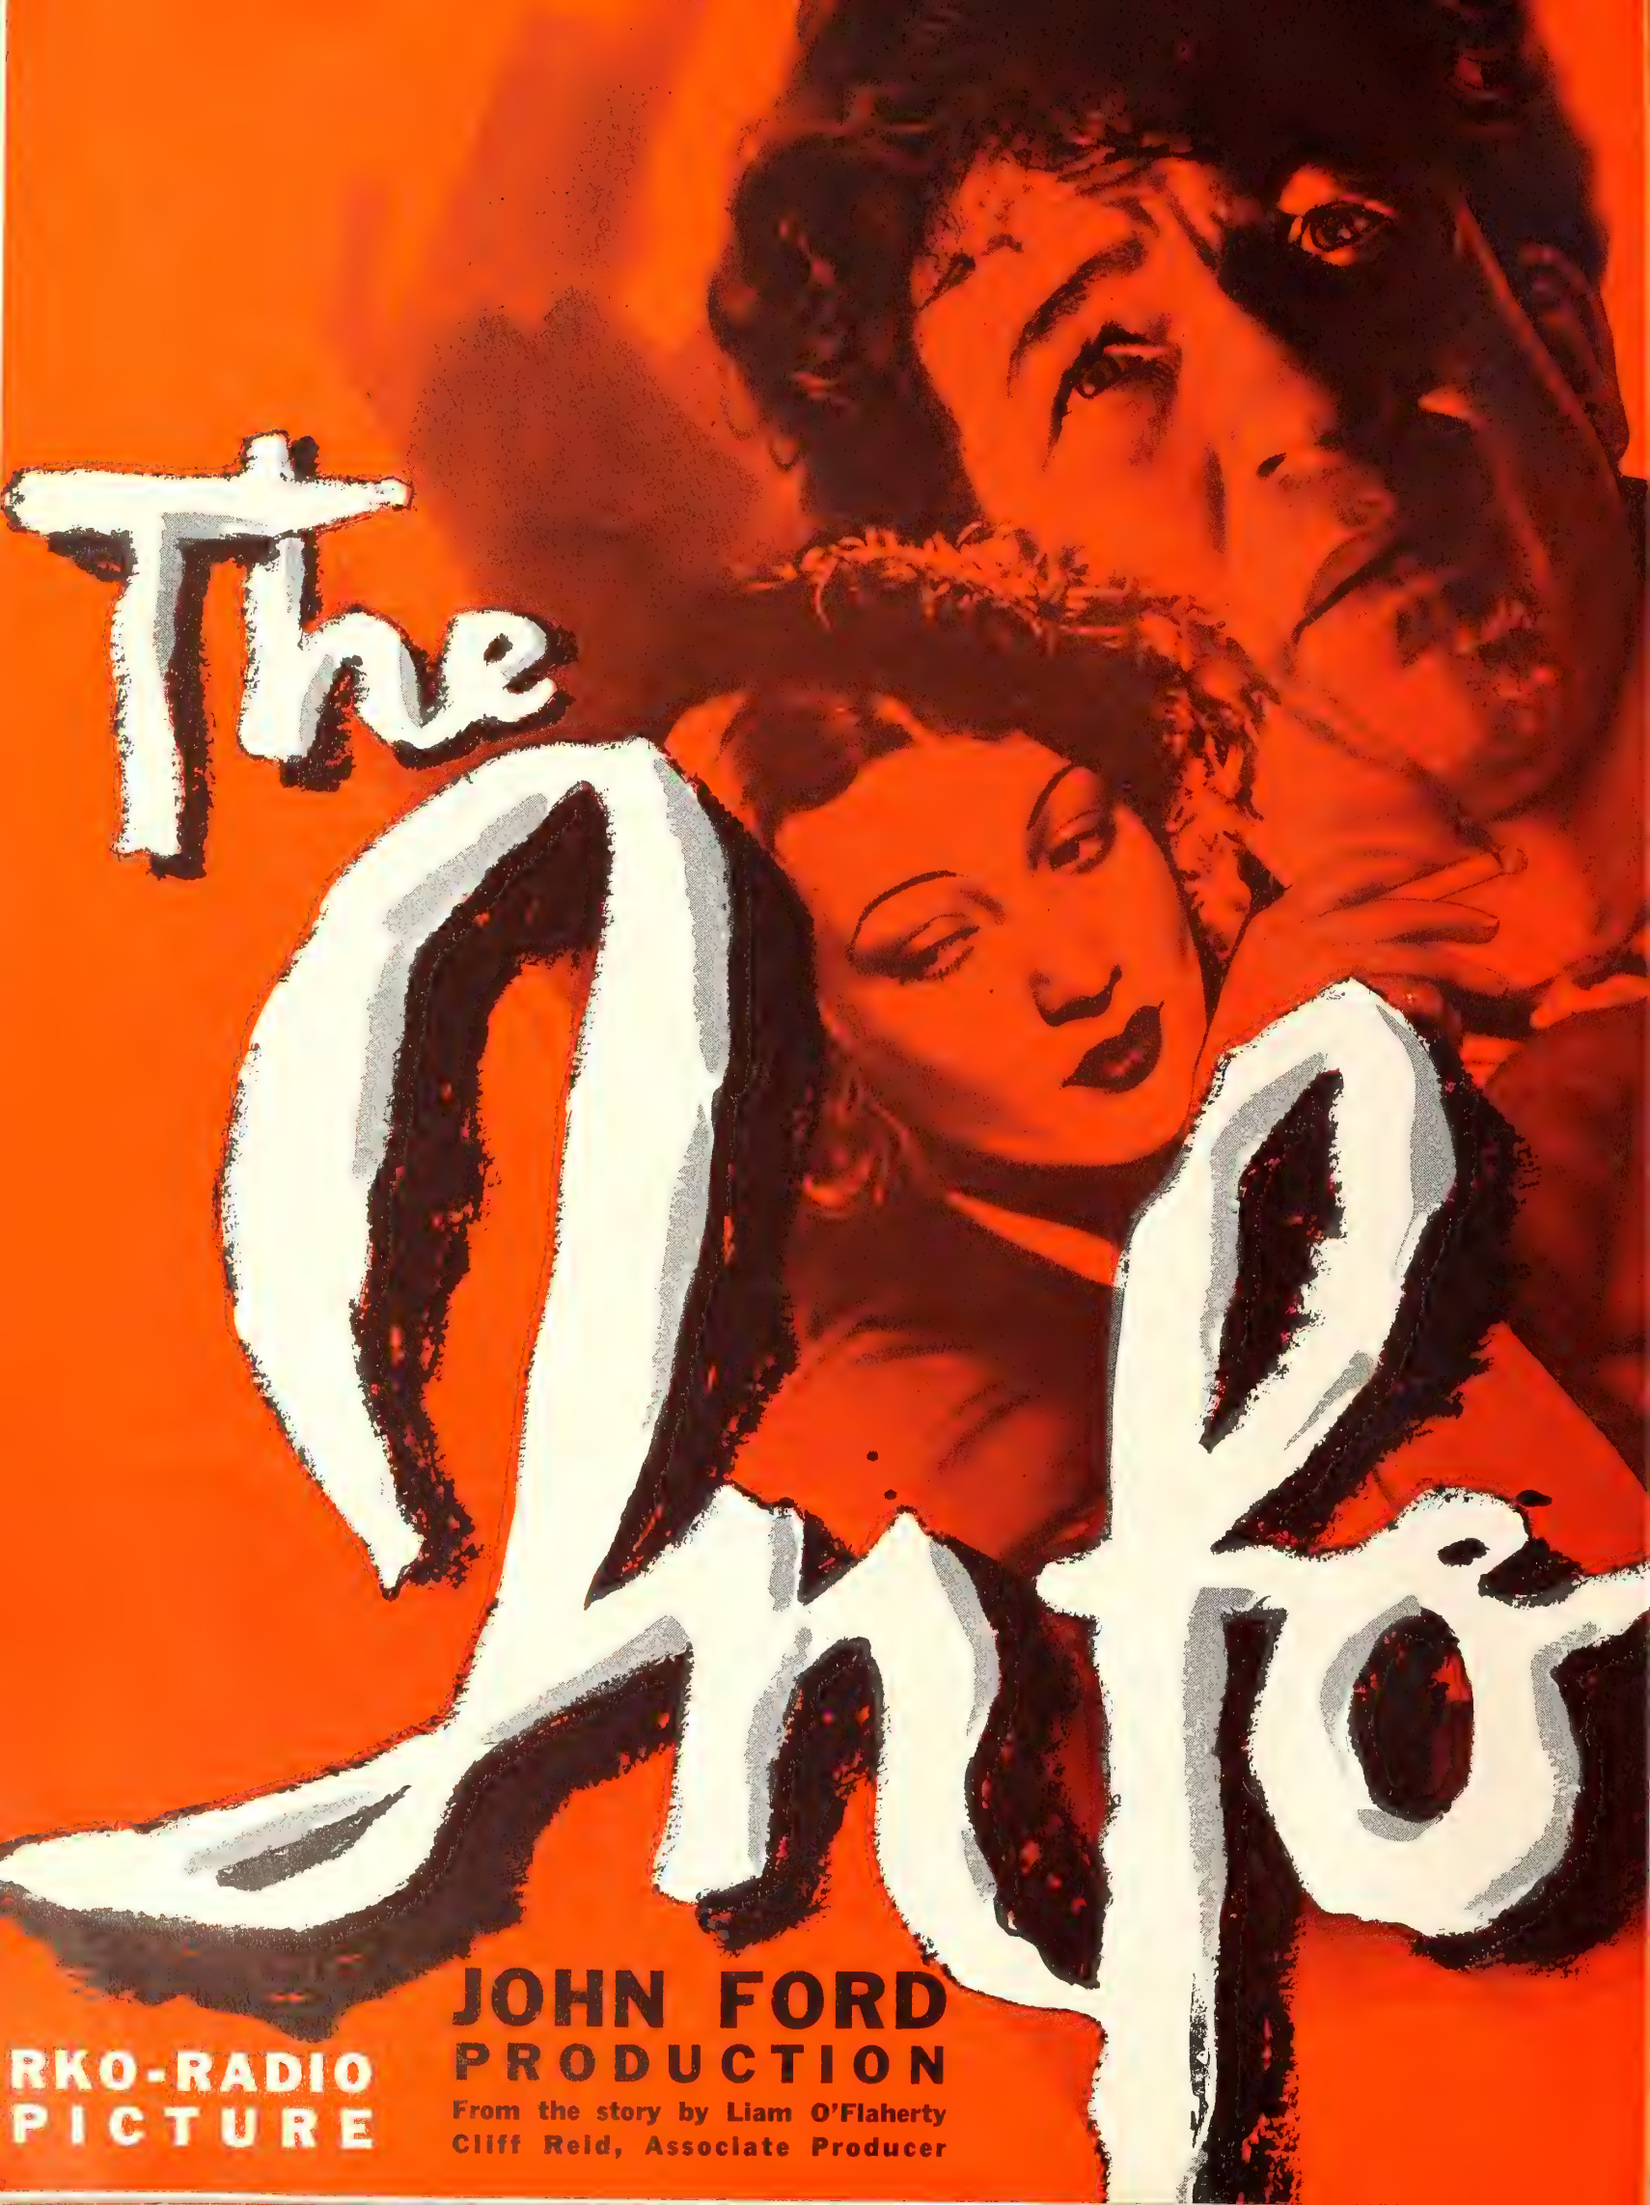
Premier Hepburn said the Government did not propose to interfere with chinaware nights and other giveaway policies.

Code Body to Fix New Zoning Plans

The Code Authority having approved the clearance and zoning schedule for Los Angeles, territorial zoning plans for Kansas City, Milwaukee and New Haven will come up for consideration within the next few weeks. The Philadelphia sector also is expected to receive consideration. The Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association this week petitioned the Code Authority to take immediate action in a clearance schedule for that territory.

The Los Angeles plan will go into effect on May 15, following which Warner is expected to file protests with the local board on the Forum-Uptown reversal by the Code Authority, which, at a rehearing of the schedule, had placed the two houses in one zone after the Los Angeles board had declared them non-competitive.

Moves to peg first runs in the Balboa, Florence avenue, Inglewood and Huntington Park zones at 40 cents and at the same time have theatres in Florence zoned off as Los Angeles instead of Huntington Park were discussed at a special Code Authority meeting last week.



Lines for a fight between President and the Senate over extension of the Recovery Act were defined when the House ways and means committee agreed to sponsor the Administration bill to extend the law two years. The Senate finance committee also reached a decision. Donald R. Richberg, chairman of the Industrial Recovery Board, is understood to have agreed to restrictions of applicability on intrastate business and price buying but asked that the President be given more than 30 days to revise codes to meet new requirements.

Golder, Considering Justice Post, Resigns IEPA Post

Ben Golder has resigned as president of the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Philadelphia. In resigning, he noted that he may assist the federal government in motion picture anti-trust litigation. A prominent attorney, Mr. Golder is a former member of the House of Representatives. He was elected president of the IEPA shortly after its organization about a year ago. Mr. Golder gave as reasons for his resignation the fact that the IEPA is now a member of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, his inability to give the post as much time as is required, and his desire to be without connection in his negotiations with the Department of Justice.

Crosby Gets Contract

Bing Crosby signed a new contract with Paramount this week calling for three pictures annually for the next two years. The studio also holds an option for a third year.

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER SALES FORCES AT DETROIT CONVENTION

MGM LISTS 50 FOR SEASON; LIBERTY JOINS REPUBLIC; WARNER PLANS SET

Six Metro Specials Announced at Surprise Conventions in Detroit and Kansas City; Only Four Fewer Shorts

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer moved abruptly and swiftly this week to start its sales force on the road to exhibitors with 1935-36 product plans and contracts. Without any previous notice, the management called the distribution executives from the field and home office to Detroit and Kansas City for the annual sales convention, and announced 50 feature properties and 73 short subjects for the new season.

Preparations were going forward along other fronts for construction of new product schedules and for organization of sales effort. The week's developments included the following:

Warner completed arrangements for the largest sales convention in its history and set June 9 and Los Angeles as the date and place.

Liberty Pictures was placed in the new Republic distributing setup as a producing unit to make eight features for 1935-36. A similar deal to embrace Mascot was pending. Salt Lake City, Cincinnati and New York were selected for regional Republic sales conventions, to start late this month.

Metro's sales convention got under way at the Book-Cadillac hotel in Detroit Saturday morning, with sessions running through Monday. Field executives from the South and West subsequently convened at the Muehlebach hotel, Kansas City, on Wednesday, with a three-day program scheduled.

Present at Detroit from the home office were: Felix F. Feist, general sales manager; William F. Rodgers, eastern sales manager; Fred C. Quimby, short subject sales manager; Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity; Joseph Vogel, in charge of Loew theatre operations outside New York City, representing the parent company; Jay A. Gove, sales development manager; Edward A. Aaron, contract manager; Si Seadler, advertising manager; Frank E. McRoy, manager of playdates; Alan F. Cummings, manager of exchange operations; J. S. McLeod, manager of exchange maintenance; Charles F. Deesen, contract executive; Charles J. Sonin, representing Loew's; William R. Ferguson, director of exploitation; Arthur Lacks, manager of newsreel bookings, and M. L. Simons, editor of the sales department's house organ, "The Distributor."

District managers attending were John E. Flynn and William A. Scully. In addition, there were branch managers, office managers, salesmen and bookers from Albany, Boston, Buffalo, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, New Haven, New Jersey, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Washington.

Also present were Parke D. Agnew, J. M. Cummings and John T. Donohue, field auditors, and William G. Bishop, Bert McKenzie, Norman W. Pyle, Charles C. Deardourff and Benjamin Darrow, field exploiteers.

The delegates were told that new emphasis on national billboard and magazine advertising campaigns will play an important part in new merchandising plans. Felix Feist reviewed the current season's sales performance and described 1935-36 productions. Mr. Rodgers delivered a sales message and Mr. Quimby outlined short subjects planned.

In New York the Independent Theatre Owners Association voted to telegraph Mr. Feist to "please change the Metro sales policy next season."

Only Four Fewer Shorts

Thirty-six two-reel and 37 one-reel subjects, together with the usual 104 issues of Hearst Metrotone Newsreel, comprise the short subject program for 1935-36. There are only four fewer shorts on this year's schedule.

On the program are Hal Roach's "Our Gang," featuring young Spanky McFarland; also the Charley Chase and Thelma Todd-Patsy-Kelly comedies. These will continue to be produced at the Roach studio in Culver City. There will be eight two-reelers in each group.

In the "junior feature" bracket are six "Crime Doesn't Pay" two-reelers, to follow the recent release "Buried Loot," which inaugurated this series, and six MGM star musical revues in Technicolor.

The one-reel releases include a new group of FitzPatrick Traveltalks in Technicolor, the first to be "Japan in Cherry Blossom Time," and the releases will comprise material gathered by James A. FitzPatrick on his latest expeditions abroad. These, too, will be in Technicolor.

Pete Smith, commentator on outdoor sports and novelties, will do two complete sets of one-reel releases, 12 in each, and to be known as "Oddities" and "Sports Champions."

The program will be supplemented by 13 one-reel "Happy Harmonies" cartoons, to be produced in Technicolor.

Kansas City Convention

Those on hand at the Kansas City convention later in the week included, besides the office executives in attendance at Detroit, Thomas J. Connors, Harold Postman, Joel Bexahler, and District Managers George A. Hickey, Charles E. Kessnich, Sam Shirley and Harris Wolfberg, and western sales manager Edward A. Saunders.

On Thursday night there was to be a testimonial dinner to Mr. Feist on his tenth year as general sales manager.

While the distribution executives were setting sales plans and policies at Detroit and Kansis City, word came from Culver City that Otto Kruger and Louise Fazenda had been dropped from the players' roster and contracts had been given to nine more players and writers, as follows: Byron Russell, Percy Waram, John Harrington, B. Kaper and W. Jurmann, Harvey Stephens, Morrie Ryskind, Victor Baravalle and Grace Ford. Gail Patrick was borrowed from Paramount for "No More Ladies."

Lucien Hubbard was assigned to produce "Calm Yourself," by Edward Hope.

The first feature picture to co-star Laurel and Hardy since the reunion of the team under a new Hal Roach contract is "Bonnie Scotland," placed in production this week by James Horne, director.

Joan Marsh rejoined Metro this week after two years. She will appear in "Anna Karenina," with Greta Garbo.

Warner's Convention Plans

An international sales convention of Warner Brothers, First National, Cosmopolitan and Vitaphone will be held in Los Angeles June 9 to 13 at the Hotel Ambassador, it was announced Monday by Major Albert Warner, vice-president, who said the meeting will be the company's largest. More than 300 executives and other representatives, domestic and foreign, will attend, led by all three Warner brothers—Harry M. Warner, president; Jack L. Warner, vice-president in charge of production; and Major Albert Warner. Sam E. Morris, vice-president in charge of foreign distribution, also will attend. Business sessions will be presided over by A. W. Smith, Jr., eastern and Canadian sales manager, and Gradwell L. Sears, western and southern sales manager.

Marion Davies, president of Cosmopolitan Corporation will take part in the convention.

A special convention train will leave St. Louis for Los Angeles on Thursday, June 6. The New York delegation will leave June 5, connecting with the special at St. Louis.

Among home office executives attending will be Joseph Bernhardt, Norman H. Moray, S. Charles Einfeld, R. Mochrie, Carl Leserman, A. W. Schwalberg, Arthur Sachson, H. M. Doherty, Stanley Shuford, Gerald Keyser, Harold Bareford, H. Rosenquest, C. Kemke and J. Kelly.

The foreign field will be represented by Robert Schless, general manager for France and Continental Europe; Max Milder, Warner managing director in Great Britain; D. E. Griffiths, managing director for First National in Great Britain; Peter Colli, manager for Cuba, Panama and Central America; A. S. Abeles, manager for Mexico.

Besides the sessions at the Ambassador, there will be meetings at the studios, where the delegates will be the first persons outside the studio personnel to see "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "Page Miss Glory," Marion Davies' first for Warner.

The train will first stop at Long View, Texas, for a visit to the oil fields. Boarding the train again at Gladewater, the conventioneers will next stop at Dallas, where they will be entertained by R. J. O'Donnell of Interstate Amusement Co. At Abilene, Texas, a rodeo has been arranged, and at El Paso there will be a stop for a visit to Juarez, Mexico.

The banquet June 13 will be attended by all Warner stars.

Jack Warner, visiting London, indicated this week that the company will distribute next season in America some of the British productions made by Irving Asher, Warner's British production head.

Liberty in Republic Setup

Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated Film Industries, and active financially in several independent companies, declared on his return from Hollywood that Liberty Pictures next season will abandon its own identity as an individual producer and will become part of W. Ray Johnston's new national Republic Pictures, contributing eight features.

Mr. Yates indicated that a similar deal with Nat Levine's Mascot Pictures, which had been under discussion in Hollywood, still was pending; that I. E. Chadwick, independent, will produce at least one feature for Republic, probably "In My Old Kentucky Home," and that Majestic Pictures will discontinue production after this season.

Invincible Pictures and Chesterfield, he added, probably will not become part of the Republic organization.

W. Ray Johnston also returned East.

Mascot Adds to Sets

Mascot was preparing for double production next season by building a permanent "western" set behind its standing "jungle" set, and by erecting a building for writers, to house 15. Twenty-eight features are on the schedule, compared to 14 this season.

Nat Levine, Mascot president, was quoted from Hollywood as saying his company will not become part of the Republic plan.

Republic's convention plans finally were set this week by Edward A. Golden, sales manager, who selected Salt Lake City, Cincinnati and New York for regional meetings, which will get under way late this month.

There was considerable activity elsewhere in connection with 1935-36 product and sales plans, the principal developments following:

ATP

Associated Talking Pictures, headed by Basil Dean, will make approximately 20 features for 1935-36, including three Gracie Fields pictures, three with Leslie Henson, two with Clive Brook, two with Victoria Hopper, three with Hughie Green, a Stanley Lupino musical. In addition, John Loder will be featured in "Ballerina," "The Silent Passenger," "Hassan" and "It Happened in Paris."

PARAMOUNT CREDITORS FAVOR ZUKOR REGIME

Four Leading Groups Express Faith in President; May 15 Set for Formal Elections

The four leading creditor committees of Paramount Publix Corporation this week expressed their faith in the management of Adolph Zukor when a spokesman for the four groups revealed that they are in agreement on continuation of the present Paramount management headed by Mr. Zukor.

This agreement means, in effect, that with the election of officers of the new Paramount company, scheduled to take place within the next two weeks, Mr. Zukor will be continued as president; George J. Schaefer, vice-president and general manager; Austin C. Keough, secretary in charge of production matters in the East, and Y. Frank Freeman in charge of theatre operations.

Agreement on a chairman of the board and a candidate for the long vacant position of treasurer of Paramount has not been reached as yet, but it has been indicated the treasurer's office in future will be closely related to the new finance committee and its chairman.

The viewpoints favoring continuance of the Zukor management were expressed last week by representatives of the bondholders' and stockholders' committees, the creditor bank group and the H. A. Fortington creditor group. Among these four, more than 90 per cent of the Paramount creditors are represented.

Formal Election May 15

Formal election of the company's new directors is scheduled for May 15 and is expected to be followed immediately by the election of officers.

Approval by the trustees of Allied Owners' Corporation of the Paramount reorganization plan was assured last Friday following a hearing before Federal Judge Robert A. Inch in Brooklyn. Allied has a $5,000,000 creditor claim against Paramount. Sale of the Brooklyn Paramount to Si Fabian by the trustees of Allied is under inquiry by a Congressional committee on real estate reorganization.

Other developments of the past ten days in the Paramount reorganization included the refusal of the United States circuit court of appeals of the petition of William Yoost, a Paramount bondholder, for leave to appeal from the district court order denying him leave to intervene in the Paramount reorganization proceedings in order to oppose the settlement of the $1,900,000 claim of Erpi against Paramount. The settlement was approved in a report by Special Master John E. Joyce to the federal court.

Would Settle Kane Suit

Settlement of a suit for $35,440 brought against Paramount International by Robert T. Kane, former general manager of Paramount foreign production, through the allowance of a $21,000 bankruptcy claim by Kane against Paramount is proposed in a petition also submitted to Special Master Joyce by the trustees of Paramount last week. Mr. Kane held a three-year contract terminating in July, 1933, at $1,500 per week plus an annual bonus of $25,000, the petition set forth. In 1932, his salary was reduced to $1,063 weekly and the bonuses were reduced to an aggregate of about $44,000. The contract was disaffirmed by the Paramount trustees in May, 1933.

The federal court in New Orleans last week fixed May 15 for the consideration of applications totaling $72,662 for services rendered in connection with Saenger Theatres and Saenger Realty Corporation reorganization proceedings.

Under the plan, general creditors, whose claims have been allowed, will receive three-year 6 per cent notes of the new corporations. Holders of warrants for the purchase of Class B common stock of Saenger Theatres may do so at $40 a share prior to October 1.

Federal Judge Coxe in New York this week approved the settlement for $10,000 of the claim of Cravath, deGersdorff, Swaine and Wood, attorneys, against Paramount.

Publix Enterprises' creditors will meet May 20 to discharge the Irving Trust Company as trustee, concluding the bankruptcy, and pass on the final trustee report, showing receipts of $1,943,163 and disbursements of $1,910,953. Claims allowed total $5.061,894 and dividends of $1,547,042 have been credited against these claims.

British Lion

British Lion will produce a maximum of 12 features in England. Among productions to be released through AmerAnglo on the American market are "The Green Pack," "The Case of Gabriel Perry," "Ten Minute Alibi," "Charing Cross Roads," a musical, and "Marry the Girl."

Columbia

Columbia this week acquired four stories by Peter B. Kyne which, with eight productions to be made by Ken Maynard, will constitute the major part of Columbia's western program.

Conn

"Born to Fight," first of the Peter B. Kyne series of eight pictures to be made by Conn Pictures Company, goes into production May 19. "Code of the Mounted," fifth of the James Oliver Curwood stories starring Ken Maynard, went into work May 9.

Danubia Pictures has obtained American distribution rights to the official Hungarian picture, "Hungaria."

GB Pictures

GB Pictures, it is understood, will sell but one group of 16 features in this country in 1935-36 instead of the two groups of eight each as sold in the current season. John Schaeffer, formerly with RKO and United Artists, has been added to the Philadelphia sales staff. Saul Krugman of the home office temporarily is doing special work in the field.

Paramount

Outstanding among the company's plans for the 1935-36 season is a production of "Carmen," with Gladys Swarthout, Metropolitan Opera star. Paramount's new season short subject program will not be definitely set until receipt of reaction reports from exchanges, Lou Diamond, head of short subject production, said. Contemplating fast production of a topical picture based on a phase of the current national pastime of chain-lettering for "prosperity," Paramount has announced plans to film a picture to be called "Chain Letter," with, possibly, Fred MacMurray, Gail Patrick and Baby LeRoy in the cast.

The executives are considering July 4 as the starting day of sales convention.

RKO Radio

J. R. McDonough, president of RKO Radio, and Ned E. Depinet, president, and Jules E. Levy, general sales manager of RKO Distributing Corp., returned to New York from a long visit to the studio looking at new product. Releases of the next few weeks include "The Informer"; Katharine Hepburn's "Break of Hearts"; "Becky Sharp," with Miriam Hopkins; "She"; "Hooray for Love," a musical; "The Last Days of Pompeii," and the new Richard Dix film, "The Arizonian." Edward Kaufman, screen writer, has been made an associate producer.

Superior Pictures

Wiley Post, aviator, and his plane, the Winnie Mae, will be featured in a 15-part serial to be made by Superior next autumn.

Supreme

A. W. Hackle of Supreme Pictures has closed territorial deals for a new series of eight Bob Steele and eight Johnny Mack Brown action pictures.

Toeplitz

Toeplitz Productions plans to make two pictures in Hollywood and two in England in cooperation with an American company, Paul Graetz, representing Toeplitz, said on his arrival in New York from England. It is reported Universal may be the affiliate. Toeplitz' next film will be "Don Chicago."

Treo Film Exchange

Distribution of 18 pictures for 1935-36 is planned by the newly formed Treo Film Exchange, headed by Ben Levine and Robert Greenblatt. Pictures already lined up for release from May 15 to October 1 include "Phantom Fiend," "Night Club Queen," "Four Masked Men," "Blind Justice," "Puppets of Fate," "Triumph of Sherlock Holmes," "Bedroom Diplomacy," and a special to be announced shortly.

Samuel Goldwyn tentatively has set "Hurdy Gurdy" as the title of the next Eddie Cantor picture, instead of "Dreamland."

Universal

"Diamond Jim," based on the life of Diamond Jim Brady, now in its third week of production at Universal City, will be first release on the 1935-36 program. Edward Arnold is in the title role and Edward Sutherland is directing. Bill Hoolihan enacts the prizefighter John L. Sullivan. Ben Verschleiser joined Universal as a producer, following two years in a like capacity with Monogram.

M-G-M Real Novelty

It looks like a smash novelty in the animated field that may revolutionize the whole technique. Done in Technicolor, with most of the characters presented dressed in calico material that actually shows as material on the screen. Not the lines of a cartoon character. How the intriguing effect is produced is the secret of the producers. But it's a pip. The young hero of the skit travels with his horse and dog into the castle of the fearsome dragon, with some amazing adventures resulting.

A Letter to M-G-M

Gentlemen:

To hold any subject over for a second week at the West Coast Theatre in Long Beach, it must be good. But to hold over a subject when the second week is Easter Week, it must be VERY good.

Yet that was our experience with the colored cartoon, "THE CALICO DRAGON".

So splendid was the audience reaction during the first week of its showing, and so great was the word-of-mouth "build-up" toward the end of the first week, we felt compelled to play it another seven days . . . despite a complete change of the surrounding program.

And you will be interested to know that audience reaction during the second week, when thousands saw it again, was just as favorable as during the first.

Our hats are off to Harman-Ising!

10,265 HOUSES NETTED $6,639,000 ON A GROSS OF $415,513,000 IN 1933

63,136 Employees on Full Time Received Wages of $80,519,000, Averaging Six Workers and $7,844 for Each House

The first door-to-door canvass ever made by the United States Census Bureau to establish the relation of theatre receipts to operating expenses and to payrolls, took its final form last weekend, thereby completing the preliminary reports published Nov. 24, 1934, in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, and disclosing the following financial status of exhibition operations for 1933:

Some 10,265 theatres of all kinds, with box office receipts of $415,513,000 and operating expenses of $408,874,000, had an indicated operating profit of $6,639,000.

A total of 9,499 motion picture theatres grossed $356,316,000—an average of $37,510 per theatre, while operating expenses were $352,152,000, averaging $37,072, leaving an average net profit from operations of $438 per theatre, or $4,164,000 for the group. Obviously, the investigation did not embrace all motion picture theatres operating.

644 combination motion picture-stage show theatres grossed $50,266,000 — an average of $78,053 per theatre. Expenses were about the same, so this group, as a whole, broke even.

122 legitimate and opera houses grossed $8,611,000—an average of $70,582, while operating expenses were $6,496,000, averaging $53,246, and leaving a net profit of $2,115,000, an average of $17,336 per theatre.

The 9,499 all-film theatres employed 54,030 full-time workers, averaging 5.7 employees per theatre, who received total wages of $67,009,000, or an average of $1,240 per employee, and an average payroll of $7,176 per theatre. In addition, there were 11,698 part-time workers, who received wages of $4,442,000, total payroll expense being $71,451,000.

The 10,265 theatres canvassed employed a total of 63,136 workers, an average of six workers at each theatre, who received total wages of $80,519,000, an average of $1,275 per worker, and an average of $7,844 per theatre. In addition, all theatres employed 12,857 part-time workers, who received $4,903,000, for a total payroll of $85,422,000, representing nearly 25 per cent of the total operating expense of $408,874,000.

The Census Bureau makes much of the fact that motion picture business, on the whole, was profitable during 1933, despite depressed conditions, although it was explained at Washington that the investigation did not embrace all theatres. Too, there is some doubt as to the complete accuracy of the returns, the canvass having been made by untrained personnel taken from the PWA relief rolls. Regardless, the figures were passed on to the industry as a basis gauge for estimating the general financial status of exhibition.

SIX EMPLOYEES AVERAGE PER HOUSE

Theatre business in 1933 was decidedly spotty, the Bureau's study revealed. In 29 states a profit was shown, 18 states disclosed deficits, and in one—Maryland—exhibitors evidently broke even as a whole.

The federal census, covering all socalled "service" industries, was undertaken to establish grosses and payrolls for the first full calendar year (1933) following the beginning of the Administration, as a basis for future comparison to show business improvement under President Roosevelt.

Seventy-eight per cent of the total gross was taken in by motion picture and split-policy theatres, two per cent was grossed by legitimate houses, and the balance—20 per cent—was grossed by all other amusement enterprises.

When the HERALD published the preliminary Census Bureau reports, on Nov. 24, it was concluded that 78 cents out of every dollar spent for amusement by the public is spent for motion picture entertainment; and that motion picture theatre averages for 1933 were: weekly gross per theatre, $769; weekly payroll, $158. The final figures change the original estimates only slightly.

Principally overlooked by the Bureau in recording motion picture theatre receipts, expenses and payrolls, were those houses in highly inaccessible places, and those running but two nights a week.

Census Bureau Reports On Production Finances

For the first time, the Census Bureau investigated the financial status of production, for 1933, announcing this week that the cost of California picture making in that year ran close to the $100,000,000 mark.

The figures represent a breakdown of the report on motion picture production issued last October by the bureau, based on its census of manufactures for 1933.

The report shows that 39 of the 92 film-making establishments canvassed in the industry were in California, and that of the $119,342,866 total cost of production, $97,748,377 was reported from the west coast.

The picture business was included in the California report because it is the second most important industry of the state. In such other states as have production, it is of small importance as, for example, in New York, since with the California production deducted from the total the aggregrate for the rest of the country is but $21,000,000.

Depression wreaked a heavy mortality among the California producers' studios; but 39 survived of the 67 which reported in 1931.

The number of wage earners, a group which does not include supervisory officials, stars and other "salaried" employes, was 9,022 in the 39 California producing companies out of a total of 10,777 for the country as a whole, but no comparable figures are available for 1931 since in that year wage earners and salaried employes were reported together. Payrolls for the wage earners in California in 1933 were $15,460,091 out of a total $18,395,489 for the United States.

California expenditures for studio supplies, containers for films, fuel and purchased electric energy totaled $17,092,643. The total for the country as a whole was $26,153,298.

Deducting such of the expenditures as were reported from the total cost of production, the Bureau derived a figure of $80,655,734 as the "value added by manufacture." This, however, means little, for no account is taken of taxes, rents, interest or other overhead charges.

Age of Indiscretion

(MGM - Phil Goldstone)

Drama with Comedy

From a practical showmanship viewpoint this picture is another version of the "Boy of Mine" and "Father's Son" entertainment idea. Essentially it is a divorce story which has for its primary entertainment premise a picturization of the tragic havoc that befalls a child when parents separate. While treating its motivating idea in a tasteful yet serious manner, it amplifies this with a companionate romantic twist and includes several comedy angles which are productive of laughter. As the yarn develops, with youthful David Jack Holt the central figure, it gives that promising youngster many opportunities, which he capitalizes to the limit, to create an atmosphere of sympathy engendering human interest.

In the yarn, which has been given the benefit of high-class production values in settings and locales, publisher Lenhart's pleas that his extravagant wife economize are met with resentful refusal. Enamored of Felix Shaw, she obtains a Reno divorce and marries him. Having difficulty in explaining his mother's absence to young Bill, Lenhart finds comfort in the boy's palship. After first comedy relief a sequence featuring Jean Oliver, author of flaming sexers, a type of book with which the ethical Lenhart wants no truck, the show moves into a skating rink scene where it develops that Lenhart takes a new view of his secretary Maxine's interest in Bill.

Meantime Eve, finding her marriage to Felix not the roseate dream she had visioned, is being whipsawn by Felix's grandmother, Emma Shaw, who is demanding that the couple get custody of the child whom she never saw and which Eve had not requested in her divorce complaint. Moving into the snow-covered mountains for a Christmas holiday, Bill first meets Mrs. Shaw via a comedy coasting accident. As secretary Maxine has come to the camp to discuss some business matters with Lenhart, she drinks herself into a condition that gives Lenhart a vivid idea of her more than boss-employee regard for him. Innocently, the next morning, Bill precipitates a situation wherein Mrs. Shaw sees the pajama-clad trio in Lenhart's bedroom.

Demanding that Eve and Felix go to court to gain custody of the child, Lenhart, striving to protect Maxine, is getting all the worst of it until, after she has been produced on the stand, Bill breaks into court to declare dramatically that his mother never has been a mother to him and that he wants to stay with his father. The pathos of the boy's plea has such an effect on Mrs. Shaw that she breaks down and confesses that she understands that Felix and Eve are worthless and that she selfishly wanted the boy for herself, but that never would she intrude on a love that is so real and true that a separation of father and son would be tragic. With this, the way is cleared for the happy ending that promises Bill a new mother in the person of one he loves, Maxine.

Though the boy, Holt, is the personality about whom the most compelling interest creation can be constructed, the picture is hardly a children's attraction. As its market most likely will be found among the adults, a campaign that treats the subject with sincerity and dignity appears to be the kind of publicity to create the most curiosity.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Unwelcome Stranger

(Columbia)

Drama

Drama, pathos, some comedy and lively action on and about the race track feature this picture, and serve well to take the place of anything resembling a romantic aspect in story or by implication. The yarn—of a small boy, a man, an understanding woman and a superstition of the track, it is really entertaining family material, the kind that may well be specifically sold by the exhibitor as for the entire family. The film points out the fallacy of silly superstitions and the hardship they may work on others, the triumph of right over wrong and a boy's love for horses.

The leading roles are taken by the always popular Jack Holt and Jackie Searl, capable and experienced youngster. In chief support are Mona Barrie, Ralph Morgan and Frankie Darro. Holt's name may be used to advantage, but most may be made of the story's theme and the race track action promised. It might be well to indicate the implication of the title relative to the story, the small boy whose origin makes him a "jinx" for the owner of the big racing stables, but who finally overcomes that superstition and wins a home for himself.

Jackie is a "gimpy" in the county orphanage, wearing one leg in a brace. As a consequence he never is adopted. His best friend is the orphanage's old horse, decrepit but gentle. Near the home is the stable of Holt, wealthy racing horse owner, continually beset by superstitions, the firmest of which is that orphans are his jinx, whether they be human or horse. His wife, Miss Barrie, and Morgan, his trainer, are unable to break it. When he hears the old horse is to be killed, Jackie takes him to the Holt stables seeking a refuge. He meets Holt, Miss Barrie and Morgan and they are impressed by his handling of the horse and his ability to approach a particularly balky young racer.

Miss Barrie takes the boy back to the orphanage, borrows him for a while, but conceals from Holt the boy's origin. Holt runs into a streak of bad luck on the track, chiefly the work of Bradley Page, his bookie, and a crooked jockey, Darro. He is at a loose end and needs first place in the Futurity to come through. Suddenly discovering that a promising colt is an orphan and that Jackie is also, he is about to sell the colt and ignores the boy. Jackie, preparing to leave during the night, is taken in by Morgan.

At the stables he overhears Darro and Page plotting to throw the race on which Holt has staked a large sum. He tells Morgan, who waits until race time. The horse counted on to win has gone lame, and Morgan persuades Holt to run the orphan horse. At the track, Darro's license is revoked, and Morgan quietly puts Searl on the horsre. A fast race sequence ends as Searl is thrown from his horse at the finish, but what looked like a second place becomes first when the winning jockey and horse are disqualified. Thus the jinx is broken and Jackie finds a new home—permanently.

With heart interest, action and comedy, the film should be acceptable any time during the week.—Aaronson, New York.

One Frightened Night

(Mascot)

Comedy Mystery

A combination of mystery and comedy, offered in almost equal parts, the mystery is rather the more successful of the two phases of the story. A somewhat incidental romance is injected, but the mystery comedy angle appears the one to be stressed in the selling.

Concentration on the story itself is necessary since the cast names, though familiar, and the players capable, will not of themselves serve to draw the patronage. Leading the cast are Charles Grapewin, Mary Carlisle, Arthur Hohl and Wallace Ford, with Evalyn Knapp, Regis Toomey and Lucien Littlefield in chief support.

The story's theme, revolving about a missing granddaughter, a fortune of millions of dollars and its disposition by a crochety old man, is hardly new, so that the selling lines should take the tack of the one murder and another near murder which are perpetrated in an unscrupulous attempt to gain a fortune. It is safe to assure the patrons that the identity of the murderer is well hidden, and probably will defy the efforts of the audience to discover the perpetrator of the crime, for which there are a full quota of suspects. There has been interjected the usual stupid detective for comedy, but in this case rather too stupid and not very comic.

Old Grapewin, millionaire, calls together Toomey, scapegrace nephew; Hedda Hopper and husband Hohl; Littlefield, his doctor; Rafaela Ottiano, housekeeper, telling them he is giving each $1,000,000. Then arrives Clarence Wilson, his attorney, also to share in the fortune, and bringing with him Miss Knapp, who claims to be Grapewin's long lost granddaughter. Her arrival scotches the plans of the others, since the girl is to get the entire fortune. On the scene come Miss Carlisle and Ford, she claiming to be the granddaughter, Ford her vaudeville magician partner. Grapewin decides to confront the girls with one another, but Miss Knapp is found murdered.

Fred Kelsey, hick detective, arrives to take charge, while Toomey and Grapewin attempt to solve the crime, and Ford gets in the way aud supplies the incidental amusement. Suspicion points to Hohl and the housekeeper. The murderer centers his attention on Miss Carlisle, seeking to dispose of this second menace to the original disposition of the millions involved. Toomey tries to protect her, is accused of trying to secure his fortune by marriage, and then becomes suspect himself. There is the expected series of door openings, reaching hands, and a masked and black-cloaked figure stealing about the house and grounds. Then it is revealed that Hohl is apparently the murderer, since he had received a telegram telling him of a shortage in his financial accounts.

But Toomey corners the real killer as he attempts to kill Miss Carlisle, and he is discovered to be Littlefield, who had been the least suspect. Toomey and Miss Carlisle conclude the picture romantically.

Sufficiently mysterious, having a portion of suspense and being actively paced, the film appears suitable for playing almost any time during the week.—AARONSON, New York.

The Youth of Maxim

(Amkino)

Drama

Lenfilm, at Leningrad, one of the producing units in the state owned film industry of Soviet Russia, for this production has gone back into the days of Czarist oppression and the necessarily secret, and bitter, struggle of the members of the Social Democratic Workers' Party, the party of the Revolution that was to come 10 years after the 1907 setting of the picture. It is strong drama, unrelieved, depicting in all its cruelty and fierce activity the effort of the authorities to smash the underground and subversive activity of the party, and its members' willingness to suffer anything to perpetuate their idea of revolution.

In that it makes of its revolutionaries praiseworthy heroes and of the authorities tyrannical browbeaters, in that it sings the hymn of revolution and the overthrow of Czardom, the picture is obvious propaganda. But it is at the same time in the nature of a historical document, since that which it protrays cannot be said, in the light of authentic history, to be too much overdrawn.

The dialogue is entirely in Russian, although numerous subtitle translations make for ready understanding of the story. Its theme, its origin, its dialogue are all factors in the conclusion that this picture can be considered as of only limited popular appeal.

The story has a young man, Maxim by name, as the point about whom revolve situations significant of the picture's entire theme and purpose. A prologue indicates the secret activity of the party, of which Polivanov is the leader and Natasha one of the ablest workers. Then comes the story itself, Maxim revealed as an honest and fun-loving young man working in a steel mill, happy with two friends.

One of his friends is killed after an accident caused by a faulty machine. The efforts to get help for the man before he dies are met with refusal by the owners. Maxim meets Natasha, agent of the Workers' Party, and the seeds she sows fall on fertile ground. Maxim is the leader in a workers' strike, which ends in Cossack brutality, jail for Maxim and Polivanov, and execution of Maxim's other friend. He becomes a disciple of Polivanov, joins him and Natasha, and arranges a gathering of the important members of the party in a forest. The authorities sweep down, Polivanov is wounded, Maxim makes his escape only after undergoing the severest hardship in his flight through the forest. Returned to St. Petersburg and the party headquarters, he and Natasha find in each other a complete attraction, and Polivanov assigns Maxim to the party leadership in a distant province. Thus ends the youth of Maxim, as he emerges from his revolutionary apprenticeship to become a leader of the party.—AARONSON, New York.

Goin' To Town

(Paramount-LeBaron)

Comedy

Logically this feature's dominating showmanship and exploitation factor is Mae West. The title, multi-story idea and supporting name and production values are secondary to her proved patron appeal. Primarily the picture is a comedy. Retaining all the color in action, dialogue and situations that patrons have come to acknowledge as peculiarly hers, it is essentially of high moral tone and not at all likely to encounter any of the difficulties which either hindered or aided her previous pictures. Always it is entertainment that has for its purpose to be amusing.

The picture, as constructed, is Mae West with all her familiar flippant zip, novelly presented in about seven different kinds of shows. Starting, it's a wild, woolly western. Out of the episode, Cleo, erstwhile queen of the dance halls, emerges as heiress to Buck Gonzales' millions when that he-man Romeo suffers a taste of sheriff's posse justice for not being a smart enough cattle rustler. With the picture veering to comedy romance, Cleo discovers that all the burning lure that cindered so many hearts is ineffective, when turned full blast on the austere Britisher, Barrington. Not a lady, as judged by his standards, she decides to become one if Buck's millions hold out.

Next it's a Buenos Aires night club horse race picture, featuring a race won by Cleo's horse through a comedy ruse. Experiencing a brush with real class society, Cleo buys herself a social position by marrying Colton, near relation of chief snubber, Mrs. Crane Brittony. Follows a swanky Long Island-Southampton drama, at first going burlesque in a comic presentation of Cleo and an unlisted tenor singing the theme song of the grand opera "Samson and Delilah," a sequence that turns into mystery melodrama as Colton is found dead and Cleo is accused by the cops. Everything turns out okay for Cleo, however, when her faithful Indian protector, Taho, puts the finger on gigolo Veladov. Barrington, who has flitted in and out of the picture half a dozen times, suddenly is convinced that Cleo is a lady, and offers her an equal share in his title, social position and newly inherited English estates.

In the dialogue there are many remarks that should be easily adaptable into crackling selling catch lines. While the title is hardly relevant, the many phases of the picture are a complete translation of the literal meaning of the slang expression and can be used in many ways to accentuate the box office magnetism of the star and the wide variety of entertainment which the picture offers.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Rustler's Paradise

(Ajax Pictures)

Western

An active western, this should be satisfactory for the youngsters, of all ages, who enjoy plenty of riding and shooting and scrapping, and the triumph of the fast-thinking hero over the forces of disorder as represented by bandits, rustlers and such gentry of the screen's west.

This is the second of a series of westerns starring Harry Carey, oldtimer who lacks the physical attractiveness and youthful personality of some of the other stars of today's westerns, but who rather makes up for that deficiency by a maximum of action, sincerity of performance.

The story is simple and hardly an innovation in any fashion, concerning a man in search of a long-gone wife and small daughter. His eventually successful effort to find them or learn about them, and his incidental eradication of a rustler gang make up the lively story. It is, of course, the sort of material which may be sold to youngsters, and placed on the weekend portion of the week's program. The youngsters in the audience may be expected to react enthusiastically to the manner in which Carey handles, with great deftness and effectiveness, an Australian bull whip. However, one sequence in which Carey, discovering the man for whom he has been searching, strings him to a rafter by his wrists, and "chastises" him with that whip after stripping him to the waist, is likely to provoke nightmares in some portion of the young audience. It is just a little too graphic.

The story finds Carey joining forces with the rustler gang headed by "El Diablo," which rules its "paradise" without let or hindrance, stealing cattle, murdering and robbing neighboring ranch owners of their property. In the shack which is their hideout is a small girl, waiting on the leader and submitting to his ill treatment. Carey befriends the child, then does likewise for a Spanish owner of a nearby ranch, when he is about to be tortured into revealing the hiding place of deeds to his property.

Carey is caught, succeeds in outwitting the guard and escapes with the girl to the ranch as the gang prepares to raid the place. They defend the house while one of their number rides for help. El Diablo escapes, Carey goes after him, catches him at the hideout and whips him, discovering that the child is his own, and that his wife is dead, killed by the bandit.—AARONSON, New York.

Only the Brave
Good Comedy

The clever and diminutive Ernest Truex, some time of the Broadway stage, affords considerable amusement in this comedy, as the physically weak man who tries to impress his fiancee with his non-existent athletic prowess. He rigs up all sorts of exercisers in his office, damaging himself thereby. Then, to counteract the fascination of his fiancee for a big game hunter, he employs the properties of a taxidermist. He frames a fake holdup scare with a friend, he to be the hero, but when a real crook appears, and the big game hunter, overhearing the plan, tries to thwart it, Truex actually emerges as the hero. An engaging comedy.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Little Black Sambo
(Celebrity)
Good

An entertaining cartoon of the Powers Comi-Color series, this recounts in amusing fashion the adventures of little Sambo, who is warned by his mother to beware of the tiger. His dog, to frighten him, dons stripes, but they both get more than the dog bargained for when the real tiger appears, bent on a good meal. The day is saved, and the tiger routed, but not until Sambo and the dog have had plenty of excitement.—Running time, 8 minutes.

The Life of the Party
Entertaining

One of the Song Hit Story series, this subject features the five "Cabin Kids," Negro children who seem to have an inherent gift for harmonizing effectively. At a house party, when the great singer refuses to sing because his accompanist is missing, the host gathers the youngsters from the kitchen to entertain the assembled guests. They do so. The Six Mountain Melodeers, a band, contribute to the entertainment of the party.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Calico Dragon
(MGM)
Good

One of the new Harman-Ising cartoons in Technicolor, this features scenery and characters made entirely of various types of cloth material. The effect is entertaining and colorful, as the small girl reads about the dragon guarding the castle in which the princess is incarcerated, and the toy horse, dog and prince awaken to go forth to conquer as the little girl falls asleep. They fight the calico dragon, successfully. An entertaining cartoon.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Number of Laughs

There are numerous laughs in this latest of the series of letters supposedly authentic, and conned from the files of various business houses. Somewhere in the subject there should be a laugh for almost every one. This number appears rather better in content than others, and on several occasions a New York theatre audience was provoked to gales of merriment.—Running time, 5 minutes.

Screen Snapshots No. 9

Fan Interest

There should be real fan interest in this number of the series, for the most part featuring the horsemanship of various members of the film colony in their "off" moments. Seen are Joel McCrea and wife, Frances Dee, on their ranch; Charles Buck Jones and his wife on his beautiful trained horse, Silver; Gene Raymond, and others. Then at Palm Springs, the swimming instructor provides amusement with comedy diving, while such stars as Al Jolson, Conrad Nagel, Lili Damita, Frank Morgan look on, and Art Jarrett watches his swimming star wife, Eleanor Holm, show how it should be done.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Chiefly interesting for its appeal to rabid motion picture fans, this number of the series, "Seeing Hollywood with Harriett Parsons," is featured by a baby party, a birthday party for one of the children of Ben Lyon and Bebe Daniels, which is attended by innumerable attractive film colony children, who are watched and cared for by such parents as Benny Rubin, Joe E. Brown, and others.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Brementown Musicians
(Celebrity)
Entertaining

An entertaining number of the Comi-Color series, this is a burlesque on the famed fairy tale of Peter Grimm of the same title. As such it should have an appreciative audience in the youngsters. The rooster, cat, dog and mule are tossed out by the farmer for refusing to work properly. They see the money earned by the musicians, meet failure in their attempt, and start back to the farm. Finding the farmer the victim of robbers, they go to work on them, a happy reunion resulting.—Running time, 8 minutes.

Colorful Guatemala
(MGM-FitzPatrick)
Excellent

The latest number of the excellent FitzPatrick Traveltalk series in Technicolor, this rates easily on a par with the earlier numbers of the group. From Guatemala, Central American republic, the cameras have extracted that which is most interesting, colorful and picturesque. Seen are the magnificent examples of early ecclesiastical architecture, some of the scenic wonders of the country, enhanced by the use of color, the production of coffee, the country's principal industry, examples of the inhabitants, while the interesting accompanying dialogue tells something of the history of the country. Worth special exhibitor attention.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Old Sawbones
(Columbia)
Good Comedy

Andy Clyde, always an entertaining comedian when the story is right, here has a reasonably good story. As the small town doctor seeking the appointment as county physician, he finds annoying competition from a newcomer, a go-getter whose fast roadster gives him a real advantage over Andy's horse and carriage. The county board decides to appoint the doctor who takes care of the greatest number of patients in seven days. Things move at a fast and furious, and amusing pace until Andy finally wins out by a nose—or a baby.—Running time, 17 minutes.

Mickey's Kangaroo
(United Artists)
Good

Walt Disney's latest creation concerning Mickey Mouse and Pluto, the lop-eared and lop-sided pup, is definitely up to standard, clever and entertaining. Mickey has a kangaroo, in the pouch of which is a baby. All four don boxing gloves. Pluto takes on the young gankaroo and Mickey takes on the mother. Pluto gets into all sorts of amusing difficulties, while Mickey discovers what it really means to "take it." Highly entertaining cartoon material.—Running time, 9 minutes.

Uncivil Warriors
(Columbia)
Amusing

There are real laughs in this latest comedy effort of the Three Stooges, Moe Howard, Larry Fine and Jerry Howard, as they are named as spies by the Union commander during the Civil War. Penetrating the Southern lines in an extremely funny manner, they almost fool the Colonel, but fail to convince the Southern captain, despite their amusing attempts. Trying to escape, they hide in a hollow log, but when that camouflaged gun goes into action, they return to the Union lines—in a hurry. It is sheer nonsense, but definitely amusing.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Good Comedy

The Our Gang comedies have developed a new star in young Spanky, who has made these comedies among the most outstanding produced. He knows how to act in a natural and amusing manner, and he makes the most of the stories which have been supplied. In this case when the teacher tells the class she will be married, and they think her changed name means they will get a new teacher, they do their best to break up the romance. Their efforts at the party in the school turn on themselves amusingly, as they discover they have not lost their teacher after all. A good comedy.—Running time, 20 minutes.

A novelty burlesque on the present disturbed conditions, it is an entertaining cartoon.—Running time, 7 minutes.

One of the interesting Oddity series, this features Charles "Chic" Sale in one of his old-man characterizations. This time, he is an old woodchopper, who has made pets of numerous small animals, including a porcupine. He finds a boy who has been setting traps in the woods, and succeeds cleverly in turning the boy's mind from trapping, and toward a love for the "little people" of the woods. He gives the boy the camera for which he has long saved, completing the reformation.—Running time, 9 times.

SEES ARMED CAMPS OVER NON-THEATRICALS

Arthur Edwin Krows in New Outlook Traces Rise of Non-Theatre Film Movement

The motion picture industry is splitting into two armed camps, according to an article in the May issue of New Outlook constituting a study of the non-theatrical fields by Arthur Edwin Krows, assistant editor of that publication.

On one side, Mr. Krows points out, are aligned the professional producers, distributors and exhibitors of films. Facing them, in "steady, determined ranks," are the churches, schools, private clubs, civic and welfare organizations, all avowing their right to provide their own entertainment, "when, where and how they please."

Mr. Krows' study of the non-theatrical situation is not a defense of either side; it is, rather, a digested history of the advent of non-theatrical showings and proponents, covering the period from the Spring of 1918, when Warren D. Foster's Community Motion Picture Bureau was providing 7,000 thousand-foot reels weekly to the American cantonments and 100 reels a week to the camps in France where 1,500 reels already were in circulation.

Under the title, "The Exhibitor Says 'No'," Mr. Krows explains to his lay audience the reason for the exhibitor's attitude toward such non-theatrical showings as those proposed by Mrs. A. Raymond Klock and the Parents and Teachers Congress.

Objects to Side-Interest

"He (the exhibitor) has no objection to persons from another line deciding to enter his profession, but he does protest the coming of those to whom such competition is only a side interest and especially those who enjoy what he deems unfair advantages," Mr. Krows says. "He, for instance, is obliged to maintain his theatre building in conformity with all sorts of structural and operating requirements like exit alleys, asbestos curtains, union employees and license fees, while the school or church is variously supported by public subsidy and tax exemptions and is not structurally so circumscribed."

Further, Mr. Krows points out, motion picture exhibitors might press their point were it not that "their opponents are also their patrons."

"Can't Afford to Quarrel"

"They cannot afford to quarrel openly with those whose dimes and quarters pay for their living and their profits, especially when, on the assumption that such support will continue, they have built a vast and expensive machine of service with millions of dollars in invested capital and hundreds of thousands of persons on their payrolls."

Mr. Krows traces the history of non-theatrical motion pictures from 1910, when George Kleine, pioneer producer, attempted to organize this market and succeeded to a degree in interesting the New York City Board of Education in some of his pictures for use in classrooms.

Through the Community Motion Picture Bureau the non-theatrical field really began to develop, Mr. Krows continues, what with the provision of film for American soldiers both in this country and in France as a basis and later stimulated by the interest of several national governments, including the United States, Great Britain, France, Canadian, New Zealand and Australian.

"By this means largely, and through accumulating war films made by its own staff cameramen, the Government developed an extraordinary interest in the non-theatrical field," Mr. Krows writes. "In 1917 it gave the activity a tremendous lift by admitting motion picture reels to the mails. In 1919 the Bureau of Education of the U. S. Department of the Interior found itself with a collection of 4,000 reels and no renewed appropriation for keeping them in circulation for the free shows that the Government had encouraged out of this supply.

In 75 Schools in 1920

"In 1920 those in charge of the matter solved the problem by depositing these reels in lots averaging 135 each, with 75 extension departments of State universities, normal schools, departments of education and museums. Each of these agreed to act as distributor to local applicants."

Mr. Krows describes the establishment of institutional film producing companies of every type and description, from agriculture and mining to science, medicine and social reform work, the setting up of International Church Film Corporation, which, he says, had been "flirting with ecclesiastical subjects" for some time in the years immediately following the War; the gradual birth of an organized business from what had once been considered a "junk market."

"This change-over, from the conception of the non-theatrical division as a junk market, to that of a new market for an entirely new product, is important to note in this present consideration, for it uncovers the one basis that is now clear, upon which may be erected an enduring peace between the warring parties," Mr. Krows continues.

"If the non-theatrical field should offer a type of attraction different from that obtainable from the theatre, then the claim of unfair competition must fall of its own weight."

Kuykendall to Address St. Louis Film Group

Ed Kuykendall, of Columbus, Miss., president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, will be the principal speaker at the anniversary meeting on May 17 of the Better Films Council of Greater St. Louis, at the Congress Hotel. Mr. Kuykendall will discuss motion pictures for the family. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, has called a meeting for May 17 so that as many members as possible may attend the Council luncheon.

Auto, Plane Crashes Take Toll of Death In Screen World

Death and injury, the instruments an air liner and an automobile, struck sharply into the world of the motion picture during the past weekend, in two successive accidents killing five people in or connected with the motion picture, and seriously injuring four others.

Late Saturday night, on a mountain road 55 miles east of San Diego, the car in which were riding Jackie Coogan; his father, John Coogan, Sr., Trent (Junior) Durkin, Robert J. Horner, radio actor and playwright, and Charles Jones, foreman of the Coogan ranch, was forced off the road and crashed.

Durkin, Coogan, Sr., Killed

Young Durkin, 20, for years a leading juvenile; Jackie Coogan's father; Mr. Horner, 25, and Mr. Jones, 40, were killed almost instantly. Jackie, who gained his great fame as a child actor when he played with Charlie Chaplin in "The Kid," and who now, at 20, is playing juvenile roles, sustained fractured ribs and other injuries, the sole survivor of a gay return from a successful afternoon's hunting.

Early Monday morning, a TWA passenger plane carrying two pilots and 11 passengers, unable to land on schedule at Kansas City, and running out of gasoline, crashed on a Missouri farm, five people, including United States Senator Bronson M. Cutting of New Mexico dying as a result of the crash. Aboard the plane, en route from the Coast to Washington, were six Paramount employees, bound from the Hollywood studio to Annapolis to supervise exterior work on a forthcoming feature, "Annapolis Farewell."

The only one of the film group killed in the plane crash was Mrs. William Kaplan, bride of a few weeks, and wife of a Paramount assistant director. She suffered a broken back and died on Wednesday morning.

The dead, beside Senator Cutting and Mrs. Kaplan, were Harvey Bolton and Kenneth Greeson, pilots, both of Kansas City, and Jeanne Anne Hillias, 20, also of Kansas City.

The injured were: Paul Wing, Paramount executive, father of Toby and Patricia Wing, actresses, reported near death late Tuesday; Richard Wallace, director; C. B. Drew, cameraman; Henry Sharpe, cameraman; Mr. Kaplan; Mrs. Dora Metzger of Newark, N. J., and her 15-months-old baby, and Mrs. E. L. Mesker of Kansas City, wife of a TWA pilot.

Louis D. Lighton, producer of "Annapolis Farewell," flew to the scene of the disaster late Monday. The studio dispatched Alexander Hall, director, and Theodore Tetzlaff, cameraman, by train to Annapolis to carry on the production.

Junior Durkin got his acting start on Broadway, appearing at the age of 12 in "Courage," in 1928. When he was 15 he was taken to Hollywood, appearing as Huckleberry Finn in "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn," the Mark Twain stories, in which Jackie Coogan played the role of Tom Sawyer. Subsequently young Durkin appeared in "Hell's House," then returned for a short time to the New York stage. His most recent screen appearance was in a leading role in Mascot's "Little Men."

Mr. Coogan, Sr., a native of Syracuse, N. Y., went on the stage as a youth, later becoming a musical comedy juvenile and vaudeville headliner. After his marriage to Lillian Dolliver, also of the stage, they went to Hollywood, where Mr. Coogan appeared in several films. When his son Jackie scored a tremendous success in "The Kid," his father retired to manage his son's affairs.

Advance outlines of productions nearing completion as seen by Gus McCarthy of Motion Picture Herald's Hollywood Bureau

REDHEADS ON PARADE

Fox

In this production there appears to be a well fused combination of story, personnel, production and potential entertainment values that makes for colorful exploitation and showmanship. The story, primarily romantic, moves to the tune of laugh-provoking comedy, music, dancing and fast action. Its lavish backgrounds are typical of a modern Hollywood motion picture studio and an ultra modern beauty shop. As can be readily understood from its title, many spectacular sequences of featuring a host of beautiful girls materially add to its gay atmosphere.

A Jesse Lasky production, the film is adapted from a story by Gertrude Purcell, Jay Gorney and Don Hartman, with the last named collaborating with Rian James on the screen play. Music and lyrics are by Gorney and Hartman. Dance ensembles are directed by Larry Ceballos. Direction is by Norman McLeod, maker of many "Box Office Champions."

John Boles, who has the lead, not only sings several numbers, but also will be seen in several solo dances. Sharing the lead is Dixie Lee (Mrs. Bing Crosby), who recently resumed her screen career in Paramount's "Love in Bloom." Also to be seen is Jack Haley, New York stage star, who, after appearing in a couple of pictures, went back to the stage only to return to pictures again in "Spring Tonic." Other players featured are Raymond Walburn, who has scored in many recent pictures, including "Broadway Bill"; Alan Dinehart, Herman Bing, Wilbur Mack, William Austin, who is teamed with Bing in the picture's principal comedy sequences, and a newcoming child star, Patsy O'Connor. Other featured players are Florine Dickson, Phillipa Hilber and Shirley Aaronson, with whom Boles dances. Girls, the parading redheads, are representives of every state in the Union.

As the picture is shaping up, it appears to be one that will lend itself readily to unusual contact advertising. It is in part a fashion show. The manner in which it deals with beauty shops suggests immediate contacts with such establishments, and other business building ideas are indicated in the title.

MEN WITHOUT NAMES

Paramount

While there is some of the characteristic story and action content in this production, it essentially is not a "g-man" picture in line with the current cycle. Instead of being a story of the government's war on organized crime, it is a romantic drama told against a background that accentuates certain phases of the gangster-federal man vogue. Story is an original by James Remington McCarthy with screen play by Dale Van Every and Howard Green. It is being directed by Ralph Murray, credited with "McFadden's Flats" and "One Hour Late."

In the production, Fred MacMurray, one of "The Guilded Lily" trio, later seen in "Car 99," assumes the role of the government operator. Trained in the manner made familiar both in picture and news stories, he is assigned to track down a gang of bank robbers. In a small town boarding house, he finds romance with Madge Evans (currently in "Age of Indiscretion"), and, as much of the story is devoted to the development of their love match, it is culminated when the girl's little brother, David Jack Holt (also starred in "Age of Indiscretion"), saves the trapped lovers and McMurray's colleague, Lynn Overman, by organizing a rural sheriff's posse to surprise and round up the gang of crooks.

Main action being centered in this group, other players are Dean Jagger, Elizabeth Patterson, Herbert Rawlinson, J. C. Nugent and John Wray. Although it preserves and embellishes the thrill action of the gangster "g-man" picture, the production incorporates more romantic love interest than usually is found in that type of attraction. This should suggest a type of publicity that should not only convince men patrons of the picture's entertainment worth, but also be beneficial in arousing feminine interest.

MURDER IN THE FLEET

MGM

Showmanship characteristic of two kinds of picture—a navy story and murder mystery—are to be found in this production. As they blend, the spectacle and adventure of one is combined with the excitement and intrigue of the other.

The story is an original by Edward Sedgwick, who is also directing the screen play by Frank Wead, author of a whole host of navy stories, and Joe Sherman. James Gleason contributes added dialogue. Practically the entire action takes place aboard a U. S. battle cruiser. In actual battle maneuvers, audiences are given intimate peeps into all the things that make the battlewagons' wheels spin. Several men are weirdly slain as attempts are being made to rush installation of a secret new fire control method before it can come to the knowledge of other nations' agents. Against these interesting phases, the story's light romantic theme is presented and the comedy developed.

While the cast is large, it also contains many marquee names. Included are Robert Taylor, recently in "Society Doctor" and "Times Square Lady," and Jean Parker, lately seen in "Sequoia" and "Princess O'Hara," who carry the romance. Comedy is taken care of by Una Merkel, Ted Healy and Nat Pendleton. Other principals are Jean Hersholt, Arthur Byron, Donald Cook, Raymond Hatton and Frank Shields, noted tennis player. Minor players include Robert Livingston, Mary Doran, Richard Tucker, Charles Wilson, Mischa Auer, Keye Luke and Leila McIntyre.

DIAMOND JIM

Universal

This is the story, part fact and part romantic, dramatic fiction, of America's first go-getter, high pressure salesman, James Buchanan Brady—Diamond Jim—jewel-encrusted promoter, eater, business man, friend of presidents, kings, industrial czars, stage stars, prize-fighters and bums.

Produced in a manner that reflects the spirit of its times and locales, the years following the Civil War and the early gay nineties when the cornerstones of America's great industrial empires, particularly the railroads, were being laid, it is based on a widely read biography by Parker Morell. It was adapted by Harry Clork and Doris Malloy, who have worked together on many recent successful pictures, with screen play by Preston Sturges, particularly remembered for "The Power and the Glory." Edward Sutherland, who recently made "Mississippi," is directing.

The production's most potent showmanship rests in the career of the man, its history-making incidents, the noted figures, particularly Lillian Russell, John L. Sullivan, the industrial and financial magnates, politicians and other famous personalities of the era who most influenced him. The cast is also one of interest creating value. The lead is taken by Edward Arnold, who has become one of the screen's popular names. The two women whom Brady idolized but never could possess, Jane Matthews and Lillian Russell, are played by Jean Arthur and Binnie Barnes. Others playing the colorful characters who were a part of Brady's life are Hugh O'Connell; the veteran George Sidney as the trusting pawnbroker who gave the daring young man his first chance; Bill Demarest, Eric Blore, Robert McWade, Bill Hoolahan as John L. Sullivan; Fred Kelsey, Otis Harlan, Charles Sellon, Henry Kolker and Lew Kelly.

Biographical in character, this treats of a modern personality whose lavish business creating, history changing exploits were rivalled only by his amazing personal eating and spending habits. Essentially it is an exploitation show which should open the doors wide to a flamboyant type of showmanship commensurate with the man's life and accomplishments.

MASQUERADE

Adapted from a stage play which was highly popular in Europe, this story is a blending of continental farce and worldly wise romance with much comedy in basic idea, dialogue, situations and action. It's the story of an artist, whose exotic portrait of one of his love lights got him into a peck of trouble; not only creating complications between him and the woman's husband, but as the result of giving the model an anonymous name, led to the appearance of an actual "Miss Major," a secret admirer whom the painter actually came to admire, but found the ghosts of past escapades arising to make his romantic path a rocky road.

This type of story, which has been given many unique twists, has often proved its entertainment and showmanship value, and there is much of commercial merit in the cast. William Powell, who won a new popularity in "The Thin Man," which appearances in "Star of Midnight" and "Reckless" amplified, plays the leading role. Opposite him is a newcomer, Luise Rainer, a German actress, who seems to have the looks, personality and talents that assure stardom. Supplementing this pair are Virginia Bruce, last in "Times Square Lady"; Frank Morgan, Academy prize winner, seen recently in "Good Fairy" and "Naughty Marietta"; Reginald Owen, also in "Good Fairy" and soon to be seen in "Call of the Wild." Another continental star, Mady Christians, featured in "Wicked Woman," has an important part. Supporting players include Laura Hope Crews, Lucille Watson, new-coming stage personality; Lilyan Iren, Claudelle Kay, Lita Chevret and Bess Flowers. The picture is being directed by Robert Z. Leonard, recently credited with "After Office Hours" and "Outcast Lady."

STUDIOS RESUME ACTIVITY; TEN FILMS START
SEEK AN AFFILIATION OF ALL INDEPENDENTS
"LITTLE THEATRES" PRODUCING REGULARLY
SIR ADRIAN FINDS NEW ESPRIT - DE - CORPS

THREATENED picture shortage in the last three weeks, in which but 16 features were started, was partly dissipated the first few days of May when 10 new productions went into work. While the fear that California's legislature would enact excessive taxes may have been a contributing cause to the inactivity—in the similar period last year 34 pictures were started—other reasons are readily discernible. Probably the most important of these is the determination of major producers to do something concrete in regard to the double featuring situation. With Fox West Coast Theatres finding it necessary to place its two ace houses, Loew's State in Los Angeles and Grauman's Chinese in Hollywood, on a dual bill basis, producers were brought face to face with a problem of contracts and sales with secondary neighborhood and suburban operators that puts a new aspect on the double feature vogue.

Secondary to this are the activities of the newly formed Republic Pictures Corporation, which, after absorbing Monogram production and exchanges, is negotiating to consolidate the leading independents in one organization. (See product article page 40 of this issue.—Ed.) Such a setup probably would result in the majors concentrating on making all the bigger and more expensive attractions, with the independents following through with the secondary features for double billing.

Fox Starts Three

Fox takes the lead in new work with three. First to start, "Orchids to You," a comedy romance, will feature John Boles, Jean Muir, Charles Butterworth, Ruthelma Stevens, Harvey Stephens and Sidney Toler. William Seiter is directing. In "The Dressmaker," dramatic romance, a newcomer, Tulla Rolf, will be introduced and Clive Brook will resume his American screen career. Supporting players include Nydia Westman and Leonid Snegoff. Harry Lachman is directing. The third feature, "Welcome Home," has James Dunn, Arline Judge, Rosina Lawrence, William Frawley.

Two of the new pictures are MGM's. At the main plant, "Broadway Melody of 1935," an elaborate successor to its first great spectacle musical success, went into work. In the cast will be a host of screen, stage and radio personalities, among them June Knight, Stuart Irwin, Una Merkel, Robert Taylor, Sid Silver. Roy Del Ruth is directing.

At Roach Studio, "Bonnie Scotland," a Laurel and Hardy feature, with James W. Horne directing and with James Finlayson started.

Paramount matches MGM in two ways; two new pictures and a pretentious successor to one of its prize attractions, "The Big Broadcast of 1935." In this feature, in which practically every name on the company's roster will be seen, the cast now includes Jack Oakie, Burns and Allen, Bing Crosby, Lyda Roberti, C. Henry Gordon, Wendy Barrie, Henry Wadsworth, Lou Clayton, Eddie Jackson, Bill Robson, Amos and Andy, Ethel Merman, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Guy Standing, Virginia Weidler, Benny Baker. Also started is the tentatively titled "Everything Happens at Once," which will star William C. Fields, with Clyde Bruckman directing. Mary Brian, Gertrude Hoffman, Lew Kelly, Robert Homans, Tammany Young and Irving Bacon are included in the cast.

"The Black Room Mystery" is Columbia's contribution for the week. Roy Williams is directing Karloff, Marion Marsh, Robert Allen, Thurston Hall and John Buckler.

At Universal, "Lady Tubbs," a comedy, was put into work. Alice Brady, Hedda Hopper, Douglass Montgomery and Lumsden Hare are featured. Alan Crosland is directing.

Warner started "We're in the Money," a comedy which again teams Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell. Ray Enright is director.

With two, Columbia is credited with half the number of pictures completed. The more important seems to be "Love Me Forever," a romantic drama with music, which stars Grace Moore, Victor Schertzinger directing.

The second feature, "Unknown Woman," a drama, teams Marian Marsh and Richard Cromwell in the lead roles.

Fox completed "Charlie Chan in Egypt." Warner Oland is again in the title role, with Louis King directing.

Warner's "Stranded" co-stars Kay Francis and George Brent.

Studio "Little Theatres"

The legitimate stage may be dying in the rest of the country, but in Hollywood it is flourishing. Five film studios maintain "little theatres" which produce regularly. The prime purpose is to unearth new talent and to make employees more "theatre-minded."

Oliver Hinsdell, head of the coaching school at MGM, goes in for a pretentious schedule. With student players and younger contract actors in the casts, he has presented at the Music Box theatre "All Good Americans," "The Wind and the Rain," "Sixteen," "Ladies' Money" and "No More Ladies." "The Devil's Disciple" is in rehearsal now.

At RKO-Radio, Lela Rogers, Ginger Rogers' mother, is in charge of "little theatre" activities, following her success in operating her experimental Hollytown theatre. She is rehearsing Anne Shirley for "Love Is Laughing," to be shown on the lot only for executives. Younger contract players are cast. A second "little theatre" at RKO-Radio has been in existence for some years under guidance of Dorothy Cormack, head of the stenographic department.

Lillian Barkley, head of the Fox School of the Theatre, gives a show once a month for executives with contract youngsters doing one-act plays and excerpts from recognized shows.

Phyllis Laughton has produced two full-length plays at Paramount, with young contract players. On the same lot, the Studio Club produces three shows a year, presented at the Music Box for two nights.

Columbia just has formed a little theatre.

Universal had a "Junior Stock Company" under Harold Turney, which closed in 1933 after rather heavy production.

Eleven other "little theatre" and art groups, outside of the studios, are in operation in and around Hollywood, exclusive of the Pasadena Players.

The list comprises:

"The First Nighters," rehearsing a play titled "Let Who Will Be Clever." Helen Marr Bartlett is director of this professional and semi-professional group.

Florence Pierce Reed's "The Devil's Tattoo" is at the Dominos theatre. Marjorie Burton is both producer and star.

"Her Design for Spending," a new play by Robert St. Clair, comes to the Harlequin theatre.

Edward Elsner's Little Dramatic theatre is showing "And the World Goes," written and directed by Mr. Elsner.

Louise Glaum is casting for "Ask Herbert," to open in the Little Theatre of Union Square. Frederick Murray is directing.

Evelyn Flebbes' new play "Venetian Blind" is at Neely Dickson's Hollywood Community theatre. David Scott has the lead.

Jean Muir, Warner player, is directing "Is Nothing Sacred?" at the Bliss-Haydon Miniature theatre.

"Witch Call," a new play by Mabel Stanford opened at the Padua Hills. Every Saturday matinee and night during May "Ysidro," Mexican folk play, is being shown.

The Spotlight opened with an amusing political satire by Bill Rankin, "Keep Your Shirt On."

"Daughter of Cain," a play purchased for production by the late David Belasco, will be given its first presentation at the Town Hall. Maxine Alton, the author will direct.

"Mandragola," by Niccolo Machicvelli, is at the Quill and Buskin, with Frederick Freeman.

Sir Adrian Baillie, leading theatrical figure from India, here to obtain British rights to Technicolor patents, scanned the Hollywood scene this week.

He plans to form a new company with British capital, and give American Technicolor 50 per cent of the stock, in exchange for the privilege of using the three-color process in a new plant to be built in England. In the new plant, release prints will be made for all Technicolor pictures released in the British Empire. Heretofore, such prints have been made in America, subject to Britain's ad valorem import tax.

Technicolor will make no commitment until Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president, journeys to London to survey the field.

"Talking films have added to the seriousness of purpose found in Hollywood today," said Sir Adrian. "There is an esprit-de-corps and cooperative effort which was not present on my last visit in 1926. Stars, directors, writers and executives work in closer harmony. There seems to be less temperament among players. Ten years ago, it would not have been possible to get two stars such as Constance Bennett and Clark Gable to share honors equally in a picture."

In India, where he rents his Bombay Studios to companies making features for native consumption, Sir Adrian says his stages are busy 24 hours a day.

"The pictures are made with all native casts. Story requirements are simple. Singing must be in every picture, and the story must be taken from local folklore that everyone knows. Films must also be long enough to play for three hours or more. The longer the better.

THE CODE QUESTION BOX

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Immediate reply is being made direct to the many letters which Motion Picture Herald is receiving from exhibitors and distributors in the field, and from others, in which various questions are asked concerning certain doubtful phases of the Motion Picture Code. In addition, such code questions and the answers submitted are published as a regular service.

For obvious reasons, the letters will appear anonymously. However, the originals will remain on file.

Answers to questions about the Code are submitted only after consultation with authorities familiar with the technicalities of the document.

This service is available to everyone. Send questions to the Code Editor, Motion Picture Herald, 1790 Broadway, New York City.

No. 114—MINIMUM SALARY FOR LABORATORY WORKERS

QUESTION—Could you tell me how many film printers must be employed by a firm in order for the printers to receive the code minimum salary? Does it make any difference whether one or many are employed?—NEW YORK.

ANSWER—The NRA code of fair competition and working provisions for the motion picture laboratory industry says:

Article IV, 2—Rates of Pay—(A) In laboratories employing 20 or less in number of mechanical laboratory workers, employers shall pay:

(a) Mechanical workers, except apprentices, a minimum wage of 50 cents per hour with a guarantee of payment to each such regular worker of not less than $15 per week.

(b) Apprentices a minimum wage of 40 cents per hour with a guarantee payment to each such regular apprentice of not less than $15 per week.

(c) All other regular employees not less than $15 per week in any city of over 500,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city; nor less than $14.50 per week in any city of between 250,000 and 500,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city; nor less than $14 per week in any city of between 2,500 and 250,000 population, or in the immediate trade area of such city, and in towns of less than 2,500 population, not less than $12 per week.

(d) Time and one-half wages to any employee for the time during which he may work in excess of eight hours in any one day, except to employees engaged in the processing of newsreels, who shall receive straight time for such overtime.

(e) All employees being paid at a rate of less than $35 per week as of July 1, 1933, no lesser rate of wage based on 40 hours of work per week than was paid such respective employees for 44 hours of work per week as of July 1, 1933; and any such readjustment of wages necessitated by compliance with this code shall be on an equitable basis.

(B) In laboratories employing more than 20 in number of mechanical laboratory workers, employers shall pay at a rate of a minimum of $25 per week for 40 hours of work per week to all classes of printers, negative cleaners and raw stock clerks, and a weekly minimum of $30 to negative vault tenders; with a guarantee of payment to each regular worker or apprentice of not less than $15 per week.

However, such employees as mentioned in the paragraph next above shall be paid time and one-half for the time during which such employees work in excess of eight hours, except employees engaged in the processing of newsreels, who shall receive straight time for such overtime.

No. 115—A COMPLICATED CONTRACT SITUATION

QUESTION—I was appointed manager of this theatre in 1934, and to this date I have not been able to straighten out the contracts made by the former manager.

We are holding contracts with all of the film companies, and every contract has a percentage basis on so many features.

We are heavily overbought on features, comedies, cartoons, travel subjects, seven old serials and four different newsreels.

We are not buying this year's product, and have Fox and RKO the only new product we will have playdates for the remainder of this year.

We are forced to run old product that was cancelled by the code last year, so I have no record of said pictures which were cancelled, and we will not make new contracts just to cancel the old ones, and again tie this theatre up with percentage pictures while our competitors play these percentage pictures on a double bill program.

How can we clear up this condition?—KENTUCKY.

ANSWER—It appears that this is entirely a contract problem and a question of the validity of existing contracts and whether or not the exhibitor is obligated to play out contracts that were apparently made in good faith with the distributors. We do not believe that the code is involved, and we know of no grounds on which the theatre could bring any sort of complaint under the code to get out of playing pictures that the theatre has under contract. After all, it is not the distributors' fault that the theatre has not been able to exhibit the pictures fast enough to keep up to date on the releases.

The exhibitor bought these pictures from each distributor separately, and each separate distributor undoubtedly did not know how much product was under contract at the time he made his deal.

In order to trade off the older pictures under contract for current releases, or to effect a voluntary cancellation of existing contracts, relieving the exhibitor of his obligations, he would have to bargain with each separate distributor. It is simply a question of his ability to trade out his existing contracts with each separate distributor in making new deals. In other words, it is a matter of bargaining between the exhibitor and each separate distributor. The same thing applies to changing over from percentage contracts to flat rentals. The code, in our opinion, is not involved in any way.

No. 116—CODE NOT INVOLVED IN ADVERTISING FILM SHOWS

QUESTION—We would like to ascertain whether or not it is against the code to screen advertising pictures for business firms in theatres. We are besieged by business men to screen their trailers in conjunction with Alexander Films Company, of Colorado Springs, Col. We do not want advertising of that sort on our screen, and would appreciate it if you could give us information concerning such. We are hoping it is against the code.—IDAHO.

ANSWER—We know of no provision in the code for the motion picture industry that regulates, controls, or prohibits the showing of screen advertising in a theatre. This is entirely a matter of theatre policy, which must be decided by the management of the particular theatre. The policy of theatres with respect to the showing of commercial advertising on their screens varies greatly according to the personal views of the management, and somewhat according to the audience reactions in the particular theatre, to the attempts to show such motion picture commercial advertising.

Mary Pickford to Tour

Mary Pickford has signed a contract with Henry Duffy, calling for a five-week tour of Coast cities: Vancouver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles. She will appear in "Coquette."

Paramount Devises Unique Tabloid Ad

The attention of advertising men has been drawn to a unique exploitation idea developed by Herbert Moulton, advertising manager for Paramount on the Coast. The idea consisted of an extra color section, in tabloid form, appearing recently with the Los Angeles Times, in connection with the new Claudette Colbert picture, "Private Worlds."

In addition to stories relative to the picture, its stars, director, producer and the like, the tabloid carried considerable advertising by national advertisers, including A. & P. Stores, Lux, Parker Pen, Old Gold, Ralston Purina and Max Factor cosmetics. Space was sold to advertisers at the regular Times rates, the tabloid prepared by Paramount for inclusion with the paper.

Reprints were made later, with space left on the cover for names of other newspapers and theatres. The reprints were sent to various Paramount exchanges over the country for use with local papers.

Victor Animatograph Observes 25th Year

The Victor Animatograph Company, nontheatrical equipment manufacturer, with headquarters in Davenport, Iowa, this year celebrates its 25th anniversary in the field, specializing largely in 16 mm. equipment. Offices are maintained in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. Alexander F. Victor, founder of the company, is still its president.

Plan WHN Deal

Louis K. Sidney, in charge of Loew's Station WHN, New York, is negotiating an agreement to turn over the half-hour program run by Sophie Tucker to one of several sponsors. Disposition of the Tucker program, it is said, will bring the company to a profit position for the first time since it began operations.

TECHNOLOGICAL

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 265 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) Explain, using simple language, how the operation of most vacuum tubes (not photoelectric cells) used in theatre sound systems depends upon heat. (B) With sound systems equipped with a motor-generator to supply low voltage direct current, sometimes trouble is experienced because of the generator of the set failing to "build up" when the system is first put into operation. What precautions can be taken to prevent such failure, and if and when it does happen, what action can the projectionist take to cause the generator to build up?

Answer to Question No. 259

Bluebook School Question No. 259 was: (A) What, in your opinion, are the essentials of a first class projection room? (B) What, in your opinion, is the best floor for a projection room, describing its constituent parts? (C) Why is a cement floor inadvisable. Just what should be done about it if you have one?

There were many excellent answers, but as between those from the following, there seemed little to choose: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; A. Sprafke; R. and K. Wells; R. J. Arntson; T. Van Vaulkenburg; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; P. H. Kay; D. L. Sinklow; D. Johnson; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh and M. and C. B. Traxler.

After very careful consideration I have decided to select the best from the above answers, since no one of them includes everything.

The location of the room should be such, vertically, as will not distort the screen image in excess of five per cent of its normal, undistorted height. It should be such as will, in a two-projector installation, permit each projector to be located equidistant from an imaginary line at right angles to the horizontal screen surface at its center; or if it be a three-projector installation, then the lens of the center projector should be located on said line.

The room should be readily and conveniently accessible, have two entrances (one at either end), if possible, not opening directly into the theatre auditorium; or if they do, then with two doors each, with a space between to prevent smoke from entering the auditorium when the projectionists leave in case of fire. The doors must be self-closing.

There should be space provided for possible future expansion in equipment needs, and the proper lavatories and other necessary rooms, the lavatories to have, if possible, both hot and cold water, and in warm regions, a shower bath.

There must be a perfectly firm foundation to prevent vibration that would show up in the screen image. The room should be provided with proper clothes and tool lockers for each projectionist.

The location should be such as will not require the use of projection lenses of less than four inches E. F., or greater than seven inches E. F.

In all cases there should be a permanently installed, unremovable high-grade opera glass trained upon the screen, preferably through a small, separate port located between the projectors, with nothing movable about it except the adjustment wheel and lens combinations, the latter to enable cleaning same.

The room must be thoroughly sound and fireproof, the materials selected to comply with both governmental and underwriters' requirements.

All ports must be equipped with fireproof gravity shutters that will operate automatically in case of fire, or may be dropped manually, either separately or together, such shutters to be held by fuses so located that they will release the shutters within a period of time not to exceed three seconds after the start of a fire at any one of the probable spots at which a film fire will start.

Not only must the floor be solid, but its surface must be so protected that dust will not be caused to arise by the projectionists' feet. Dark-colored battleship linoleum is best, and notwithstanding a few foolish local laws preventing its use, it is the best there is, for the reason that it not only looks well and prevents cement dust, but also is easy on the feet.

Lamp houses must be piped to either the outer air, or with proper precautions, to the main vent duct of the house ventilation system. The room must have sufficient ventilation to provide healthful conditions, without strong air currents. There should be an auxiliary means provided so that in case of a film fire all gas and smoke will be removed to the outer air as fast as formed, the same to be automatically put into action at maximum power by the dropping of the port fire shutters during the process of projection. The outlet duct of this system should be thoroughly insulated from all inflammable matter. Its motor must be so located or protected that the fire will not affect it or stop its operation.

Observation ports must be of ample size to permit free view of the entire screen from normal working position beside the projector. They must be covered with a good grade of plate glass, held in a removable frame at suitable angle from vertical to prevent reflections from interfering with the view of the screen.

Lens ports should be reduced as nearly as possible to the light beam dimensions, the reduction being soundproofed. The light beam area should be left open if it be possible without danger of annoyance to the audience.

All wiring should be installed in compliance with the National Electrical Code. It must, wherever possible, be in conduit, the same embedded in walls, floor or ceiling, as the case may be, and the conduit thoroughly grounded. All wall outlets must be of the flush type and readily accessible.

Means should be provided for lighting the room dimly during projection, with a circuit to provide for immediate, brilliant illumination in case of need.

Dimensions of the room must be such as will provide ample room for discharge of duties incident to projection, but preferably no larger.

The front wall, for best results, should be definitely dark in color, with a space at least 18 inches surrounding the observation ports in non-glossy black. The ceiling may be medium light—say, cream color—and the rear wall and end walls cream color down to within six feet of the floor; from there to the floor a dark color. So far as possible, no light at all should fall upon the front wall of the room, as it automatically interferes with clear vision of the screen.

Discussing of this subject will be continued in the next issue.

TEX TAKES A HOLIDAY: Wallace McDonald, Virginia Browne Faire—Gentlemen, I can take it. I've just sat through about 50 minutes of horse opera at its worst. This western (an old release) is the type that drives small town exhibitors to book society dramas on Saturday. It is inexpertly produced, badly cast, and terribly recorded. In fact, the sound was so poor that much of the dialogue was lost to the audience. The paper boasted "filmed in Multicolor," but probably due to the age of the film, there was color only in the introductory subtitle. This western might please in a Mexican community as the characters are supposed to be Mexican and the language is spoken occasionally.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Beacon Prod.

I CAN'T ESCAPE: Onslow Stevens, Lila Lee, Russell Gleason—Very good program picture that pleased on a Friday and Saturday. Running time, 58 minutes. —P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Chesterfield

IN LOVE WITH LIFE: Lila Lee, Onslow Stevens, Dickie Moore—This picture was represented to us as being far above the average for the lesser independents. It is not. As a matter of fact, it is even below Invincible's average in every department except settings. It is slow moving and badly photographed. The audience response was decidedly poor.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Columbia

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe —A good program picture. Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction. Played March 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Good picture that did not draw at the box office. I think the title hurt it. A number of our patrons must have thought this was a western.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

BROADWAY BILL: Warner Baxter, Myrna Loy—Marvelous. Every patron was more than satisfied with this well written and cleverly produced story of a race horse and his devoted owner. Amusingly enough, however, actual horseraces at a semi-local track kept many of our regular patrons away from the theatre.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

CARNIVAL: Lee Tracy, Sally Eilers, Jimmy Durante—We played this one while there was a real carnival in town and didn't do much business on it. Durante was really good in this pickpocket role. There are a lot of laughs in this picture and it will do a little better than average business. Played April 18-19-20.—Lee Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. General patronage.

JEALOUSY: Nancy Carroll, Donald Cook—A very good program picture. Stars acting fine. Story good. Gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

MAN'S GAME, A: Tim McCoy, Evalyn Knapp—A very good program picture; just right for Friday and Saturday. Running time, 59 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

SQUARE SHOOTER: Tim McCoy—This is an extra good western picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

UNWELCOME STRANGER: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Pretty good program picture. Good for the whole family. Running time, 69 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson—This is a wow of an entertaining picture. Life and lots of it. Great character work by Mr. Robinson and a splendid cast of entertainers. The picture gave good satisfaction and did better than average business for these days. Played March 21-22. —Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

WHIRLPOOL: Jack Holt, Lila Lee, Jean Arthur—Good drama of prison life, gay life and Holt taking his own life. That was the jarring note in the drama, that shot at the end. Played April 5.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

First National

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown, Patricia Ellis—This picture was good for children but did not do a thing at the box office. I played it too late. Recording good. Running time, 63 minutes. Played April 26-27.—Albert Heffernan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—While a first class production it does not measure up to previous "Gold Diggers" or "42d Street." Did fair business but not up to par. Running time, 90 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon—This team runs to form and pleases. Proved a good picture from start to finish. Running time, 70 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—This is a mighty good program picture Very funny in spots. Lots of hokum but entertaining. Pleased them all. Played March 16-17.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

Fox

BRIGHT EYES: Shirley Temple, James Dunn—Too much cannot be said in favor of this picture. It's wonderful.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

CARAVAN: Loretta Young, Charles Boyer, Jean Parker—Another washout, played on Wednesday and did not take in enough to pay for feature. Could not get them in.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland, Drue Leyton—Good Friday and Saturday picture. Warner Oland seems to be getting better all the time. P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers, Evelyn Venable, Kent Taylor—Don't let them make you believe this not up to the standard. It's another answer to a prayer. It did me the best Tuesday and Wednesday business in four years. Just bear down on the old-time politics. Stepin Fetchit's voice has improved 100 per cent, too, which caused a lot of favorable comment.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Rural and small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Although a very good Rogers picture that pleased all who saw it, it does not seem to have the pull the others had at the box office. Upon inquiring of the public, they all tell me the same story, which runs as follows: "We like Rogers about the best of them all, but his stories are all the same; see one and you have seen them all." They've got to give him more varied story material or they will kill him. Played April 21.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE, and JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers—Will always gets them in, but why must an exhibitor play so much worthless trash to get a few that will bring in a dollar profit.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

DOCTOR BULL: Will Rogers—A very good Rogers picture. Pleased Friday-Saturday patrons.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Rural and small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Help! Help! Are there any more? Yes, Ketti Gallian, Fox's new blonde star in "Marie Galante." It's just another washout.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

I BELIEVE IN YOU: Rosemary Ames, Victor Jory, John Boles—This program picture did only fair on a double feature program.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

JUDGE PRIEST: Will Rogers, Rochelle Hudson, Tom Brown, Anita Louise, Stepin Fetchit—Good and pleased the majority. Not near as good a drawing card as "David Harum" and "Handy Andy" but it made a little money so I guess we should be satisfied. Running time, 80 minutes.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: Lew Ayres, Pat Paterson—Just so-so. Nothing to brag about.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

MUSIC IN THE AIR: Gloria Swanson, John Boles —Just the poorest picture I have ever seen. Nothing to it or about it that could get by anywhere. I cannot understand how Gloria and John could consent to the showing of such a piece of junk.—Arcade Theatre, Camden, N. Y. General patronage.

UNDER PRESSURE: Edmund Lowe, Victor McLaglen—Okay for double billing. Women will not like it. Played April 16-17.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien, Dorothy Wilson—Just average, this one. Pretty slow until the end. It sins on the side of too little action where most of them are the other way. However, the western fans are not too critical but I have seen better and also worse.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHITE PARADE, THE: John Boles, Loretta Young—Excellent picture that is good enough for any theatre. Fox has some very good pictures.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Gaumont British

IRON DUKE, THE: George Arliss, Gladys Cooper—Good picture but completely failed to draw. Not as good as the usual Arliss production. The recording is below par and as the Fox exchange in Washington sends us terrible prints of every picture, it was lessened in effectiveness accordingly. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 23-24.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

Mascot

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen, Ted Fio-Rito and Orchestra—Disappointing. A below average program picture with very little to distinguish it from hundreds of others ground out yearly. However, it did well enough on a double bill.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

MGM

BABES IN TOYLAND: Laurel and Hardy—This feature was well received by the younger people. The two stars drew a little extra business. Leo's programs are invariably good.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET: Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton, Fredric March—An excellent picture and praised by two large audiences. Norma Shearer is splendid. The picture was well advertised and discussed by our schools. Give us more of these splendid historical productions.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery, Edward Everett Horton, Una Merkel—We have our regular customers for Ann Harding productions. We booked it for the Junior class of the high school as a benefit program for the Seniors. Heard only the most favorable comments from our patrons.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS: Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery—Just the type to please 100 per cent. Sure is a grand picture from leader to trailer. Don't pass it up. Played March 3.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MERRY WIDOW, THE: Maurice Chevalier, Jeanette MacDonald, Edward Everett Horton, Una Merkel—This picture was well received by our audience. They like classical pictures and plenty of music. We are looking forward to the production of more of these classical plays.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—Strictly high class musical romance. Victor Herbert's music, with excellent cast and wonderful voices. It's one to be enjoyed by class audience. Like all others of this kind and merit it does not click at the box office. Running time, 106 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy, Frank Morgan—The finest picture of this type ever produced. Your patrons do not have to be admirers of classical music to appreciate this picture. Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy are great. Miss MacDonald will impress all with her beauty and glorious voice. Nelson Eddy made a great number of admirers here. The title does not do the picture justice. Played April 18-19.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: John Barrymore, Helen Hayes, Clark Gable, Lionel Barrymore, Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—We have found it both profitable and patron-pleasing to present return engagements of old favorites. In the past few weeks we have revived "Forty-Second Street," "Night Flight," and "The Big Broadcast." Helen Hayes recently played in person in this city and the favorable publicity accorded her was a great aid in re-selling "Night Flight."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

OPERATOR 13: Marion Davies, Gary Cooper—Don't worry when you play this sweet picture. It's fine and will please everyone. Played April 12.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—Below the regular Garbo standard. Acting good, but story poor. Played April 24-25.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

PAINTED VEIL, THE: Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent—I should know better than book in a Garbo opus. She flops in my small village. Barely made rental and express. Played March 15.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—About the last word in outdoor pictures. Marvelous. This picture should gross top wherever shown with special advertising. Guarantee patrons the treat of their lives in the pictures. Exhibitors—go after this one and clean up and more than satisfy your patrons. Running time, 86 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Fine picture. Good photography and rather a thin story but the animal shots and the setting will and did make up for what it lacked in story. It is unusual and perhaps the best of the animal pictures that have come out. The bears supply the comedy. There are some beautiful shots of the deer and other animals. It is high class in every way. It is good Sunday, Monday or will go good for Friday, Saturday.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS: Helen Hayes, Brian Aherne—This is one of the poorest MGM features we have run for some time. Before booking it we looked up various comments on it from these columns and 85 per cent of the comments were unfavorable. Let more of us exhibitors contribute. We are helping ourselves by so doing.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. General patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—The top liners as they are supposed to be are not so tops as they were, and this is one of their mistakes. They take Carrillo, who has been in some small supporting roles, and another passe star that has had her day, Fazenda, and put them in the lights as stars to head a picture with resulting poor business and the picture deserves it. But it's the exhibitor that pays and pays for their errors of judgment. Too slow and not worth running.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Monogram

GREAT GOD GOLD: Sidney Blackmer, Gloria Shea—This is an interesting picture. Will satisfy any crowd. The story tells a lot of truth that we all should know. Gave great satisfaction here. Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

THREE REPORTERS ENTER THE RANKS

The North, the East and the Far West are represented this week in the three new contributors to the columns of the "What the Picture Did for Me" department, as follows:

U. S. ALLAIRE, Victoria theatre, Victoriaville, Quebec, Canada.

ARCADE theatre, Camden, N. Y.

A. R. HILAND, Hiland theatres, Yreka, Cal.

Read the first reports from these exhibitors in this issue.

NUT FARM, THE: Wallace Ford, Florence Roberts—A very ordinary program picture which managed to get by on a double feature program.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan—Good action picture, but a little overdrawn in their reaching for comedy to offset the drama. At that it did better business than a lot of the sophisticated pictures and I still contend that when a trailer shows some action, as does the paper, that the picture has a better chance of going places at the box office.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Jack Oakie—You can put it in the "What the Picture Did for Me" column that this is one picture that you do not want to miss and don't be afraid to back it up with plenty of advertising. It will pay you.—A. R. Hiland, Hiland Theatre, Yreka, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert—A very good picture on the order of "It Happened One Night" as to story material. Although it is not as good a picture, it is good enough for any date in any man's town and sends them out smiling. Played April 28.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Sir Guy Standing—One of the finest pictures I have ever seen, but played to only average business. Played April 7-8.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: W. C. Fields, Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Not outstanding but good entertainment. Played to average business.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

MAN OF THE FOREST: Randolph Scott, Verna Hillie—Fine western.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Rural and small town patronage.

DUCK SOUP: Four Marx Brothers—Return engagement. Old, but good. Kept the people in an uproar.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Rural and small town patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Edward Arnold, Paul Kelly, Peggy Conklin, Osgood Perkins—Played it pretty old and should have left it alone. A very unusual story that, however, pleased all who saw it, but it's nearly impossible to get them in because of lack of star value. Played April 14.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Chic Sale—Scott is a good bet in westerns but Chic Sale was worn out with the public long ago. They don't go for his line of stuff and that hurts the picture. Not up to some that Paramount produced last year.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Cary Grant, Myrna Loy—One of the best action pictures that I have played for a long time. It set them right on the edge of the seat and kept them there. Good story, direction and cast make this the kind of a picture that puts a small town exhibitor out in the lobby grinning as they come out. Played April 25.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural patronage.

RKO

DOG OF FLANDERS: Frankie Thomas, Helen Parrish—A nice program for double bill or benefit. Pictures like this have general appeal. Clean and wholesome. Running time, 65 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

FOUNTAIN, THE: Ann Harding, Brian Ahearne, Paul Lukas—An intelligent but too talky picture which will not appeal to the average patron. Our patronage said little against it and nothing for it. Played on a double bill with "Romance in the Rain."—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

GAY DIVORCEE, THE: Ginger Rogers, Fred Astaire—Whoe! Boys! What a ginger snap at B. O. Played it late but couldn't do better. Will repeat sure. Book, play it and rebook it, for it's worth twelve pictures. Ginger and Fred and the rest are none but gorgeous, stupendous, delirious and what not, but why, why don't you play it, and make something and about 500 per cent more than on the B. O. usuals. Played February 13-14.—U. S. Allaire. Victory Theatre, 14 Victoriaville, Quebec, Canada.

LIGHTNING STRIKES TWICE: Ben Lyon, Pert Kelton—A very good comedy drama. Played on a double bill and gave good satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—A very good picture that did not draw at the box office. I guess Hepburn is slipping. Good for the whole family.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne, Randolph Scott—Top notch entertainment and especially liked by the ladies. Played April 21-23.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This picture has everything for good entertainment. Great singing, dancing and acting. Interesting story and wonderful settings. Also a lot of good clean comedy. Wonderful direction. I call it a 100 per cent picture. Pleased them all. Played March 28-29-30.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Francis Lederer, Ginger Rogers—A very entertaining picture with a splendid finish; the kind patrons seem to like and talk about. Running time, 78 minutes. Played April 19-20.—M. W. Mattecheck, Lark Theatre, McMinnville, Ore. Local patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—Edgar Kennedy's name should be on the top. Was advised to lay off this one, but am I glad I didn't. It just fits in with the new streamline train from Bangor to Boston and should be a natural for theatres in eastern New England at least. If your folks like thrills you can't go wrong. The trailer does an extra good job on this one. Anyway, it came within $3.60 of "Bright Eyes" and that was top.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE: Jack Oakie, Spencer Tracy—Good action picture. Full of wise cracks and kept the audience interested till final fadeout. Pick it up. Sound fine. Played March 22.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—Very interesting picture. Moved at a fast pace and pleased. Played March 22.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD: Claude Rains, Joan Bennettt—Claude Rains is a superb actor and Miss Bennett was lovely, but the story was a colossal flop with the average patron. I'm the guy who lost his head—and his shirt. Played April 19.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

NOTORIOUS GENTLEMAN, A: Charles Bickford, Helen Vinson—Played on a double feature program and gave satisfaction. I call it a good average program picture.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane, Andy Devine—Universal should be ashamed for producing such bad program pictures. Here is another picture which belongs only on double feature programs with a sfrong supporting feature. The story is another one of those "a little child shall lead them" would-be tear jerkers which require the actors to walk through with long faces. Baby Jane is likeable and shows promise.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Ft. Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—This is a fine picture of the kind. The acting by both of the stars great. Very interesting story. Gave good satisfaction. Played March 23-24.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenwich, Mich. City and country patronage.

BEST GUIDE FOR SMALL THEATRE

"Enclosed are a few comments for the 'What the Picture Did for Me' department," writes H. O. EKERN, of the Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont. "I feel somewhat guilty for not submitting writeups oftener than I do, for I consider these writeups the best guide for a small theatre owner. Situated as we are here in the West so far from large centers of population, we are almost invariably guided by these columns in our bookings. We will do what we can to perpetuate this good work."

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Margaret Lindsay—Another picture with Uncle Sam supplying much of the background and big shots. My patrons seem tiring of the Cagney-O'Brien combination. Played to fair business. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 14-15.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

FOOTLIGHT PARADE: James Cagney, Joan Blondell, Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler—Picked this from the old bunch and glad I did. It was swell—elegant. Too bad there aren't more as good. Played March 8.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

KENNEL MURDER CASE, THE: William Powell, Mary Astor, Ralph Morgan, Helen Vinson—We played this one rather old but it drew a good crowd on 10-cent night. This picture will sure keep them guessing. Played April 23-24.—Lee Smith, Liberty Theatre, Quinton, Okla. General patronage.

SWEET ADELINE: Irene Dunne—This I call better than a program picture and not quite good enough for a special. All that saw it were surprised at the size of the production and they liked it.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. City and country patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Good picture but Vallee does not do average business, although this is the best that he has done. But he is no big draw at the box office. I wonder who ever told Dvorak she could dance. Pathetic after seeing the experts. A rank amateur could have done better. I am surprised that Warner's director gives her a dancing part. She is clumsy and has no sense of rhythm apparently. The audience gave a slight panning to this part.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

KRAZY KAT KARTOONS: Good cartoon comedy.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

LIFE'S LAST LAUGHS: I have never before reported on a short subject, but would like to say that I think this is the worst I have ever shown. First it shows a tombstone on which appears a rather hideous head which laughs a sort of drunken laugh, after which appear authentic engravings that have been found on old tombstones, all of them mourning the fate of the lost ones but at the same time listing their shortcomings while in this realm and making wisecracks about them. Almost everyone in the audience has some loved one buried in the local cemetery, and after being reminded of the fact, as well as having it made fun of, it can be well imagined in what a pleasant mood this leaves them to enjoy the show that follows.—B. J. Vanderby, Palace Theatre, Doland, S. D. Small town and rural partonage.

WINTER THRILLS: World of Sport—Good sport single reel.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

Educational

BOUNDING MAIN, THE: Song Hit Story series—A good singing reel.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

DOG SHOW, THE: Terry-Toons Series—One of the best cartoons we've had in this series. Running time, 6 minutes.—A. N. Miles, Eminence Theatre, Eminence, Ky. Small town patronage.

LAST DOGIE, THE: Song Hit Stories series—A very good western short and should be played before a western feature as it would get the patrons in the mood for the picture. It has western cowboy songs, etc. Liked by all.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MAGIC FISH, THE: Terry-Toon—Good cartoon with quite a few laughs.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MR. WIDGET: Joe Cook—Two reels of talking by Joe Cook. Not many laughs. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ONE RUN ELMER: Buster Keaton—Buster seems to have found his niche. This is good comedy that will click. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SUNNY SOUTH, THE: Terry-Toon series—A very good cartoon and they seem to get better right along. Running time, 6 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, The Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

MGM

BURIED LOOT: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—Decidedly a new and important step forward in short entertainment. Will create much favorable comment. One of the most powerful subjects you can bring to your patrons. Running time, 19 minutes.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

GOOFY MOVIES: Not so good. Would be poor except for the clever announcer.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

STAR NIGHT AT COCOANUT GROVE: Musical Revues Series, with all-star cast—Hope we will not have to wait long for more of this high standard. The best color subject we have presented.—Don Kelsey, Lyric Theatre, Blacksburg, Va. College and small town patronage.

RKO

BRIC-A-BRAC: Edgar Kennedy—We called it his best. Just the kind of slapstick stuff that kept them roaring. Running time, two reels.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Rural and small town patronage.

United Artists

BIRDS IN THE SPRING: Silly Symphony—Very good. No doubt these Silly Symphonies are the best cartoon comedies made. This one is all in color.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

MICKEY MOUSE CARTOONS: These are all top notch.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

SILLY SYMPHONIES: These and Mickey Mouse are all top notch.—Frank E. Sabin, Majestic Theatre, Eureka, Mont. Small town patronage.

Universal

FADS AND FANCIES: Joey Nash, Fritz and Jean Hubert—Good.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

ROBINSON CRUSOE ISLE: Oswald Cartoon—Pretty good; not as good as some of the others, but it will get by.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

Serials

Universal

RUSTLER'S OF RED DOG: John Mack Brown—Running fourth chapter. This has plenty of action, but is not liked on account of too many Indians. I don't understand why they want to rehash this Indian stuff so strongly.—P. G. Held, New Strand Theatre, Griswold, Iowa. General patronage.

TAILSPIN TOMMY: Maurice Murphy, Noah Beery, Jr.—I reported chapter one as looking good. Now, having shown chapter five and judging from both box office and comments, I'll report that it looks better.—Sam A. Kimball, The Yarn House, Limerick, Maine. Rural and small town patronage.

J. C. Jenkins--His Colyum

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We are indebted to the Pathfinder for its effort in trying to determine the exact number of apples that were eaten by Adam and Eve, and, in order to try and help that worthy publication out in finding the true answer, we have submitted the matter to a class of men best qualified to give a correct answer, since they have been in the apple business all their lives. We sent this question to a bunch of exhibitors, "How many apples did Adam and Eve eat?"

To this question Ted Mendenhall, branch manager for Paramount at Omaha, replied: "This question is simple enough. Any schoolboy knows that Eve 8 and Adam 2, making a total of 10 Douglas county Pippins."

Andy Anderson, up at Detroit Lakes, Minnesota, answered and said, "I am surprised, Colonel, that you'd ask such a fool question as that, for anyone with as much sense as a muskrat would know that Eve 8 and Adam 8 and that between the two of 'em they got away with 16 Maidenblushes."

But Then—

Down in Lincoln, that crossroads town where the state has just completed a fifteen million dollar capitol building and we have it paid for, Bob Livingston writes us to say, "If Eve 8 and Adam 82 the total is bound to be 90. Anyone with a thimble full of sense would know that." Bob always stood at the head of the arithmetic class (when the other member stayed at home), therefore we have to give his answer some consideration.

Harry Huffman of Denver, Colorado, is supposed to be the mathematical textbook of the Rocky Mountain region and he says, "Any mullethead who can't answer that question must be pretty dumb, for if Eve 81 and Adam 82, any producer ought to know that between the two they consumed 163 Winesaps without any reference to the blue buzzard or the NRA."

Then we got a letter from Clark Gable, out in the jungles of Hollywood. Clark said that Hollywood didn't deal very heavily in apples but that there were a lot of peaches out there and that his mind therefore ran more to peaches than apples, but it was his belief that if Eve 81 and Adam 812, the result would be that Rhode Island would have been short 893 Greenings." And then he added, "Better lay off of that bootleg stuff, Colonel."

On the Other Hand

Fred Hinds, the man who has never had the pleasure of meeting the sheriff up at Whitewater, Wisconsin, writes us in this fashion: "Say, what's the matter out there, are you still running at large? Have those sand storms filled up your gourd with sand? Don't you know that Eve 814 Adam and that Adam 8124 Eve, which would naturally make a total of 8,938 Northern Spies? I am surprised that the HERALD permits you to run loose."

Shine Mason, down at McAllen, Texas, took the matter up with Bob Smith of Mission (Bob, you remember, is the boy who has a cabin down on Red Fish bay) and between them they arrived at the conclusion that "if Eve 814 Adam and Adam 81242 oblige Eve, the total must have been 82,056 Missouri Baldwins." Then they added a footnote to it and said that we ought to remember that they lived in the best citrus fruit country on earth and ought to be able to figure out a simple problem like that. That "best citrus fruit country" sounds like California.

F. W. Zimmerman of San Marcos, Texas (who watched us catch 47 bass in Bluewing lake one time), wrote and said, "For gosh sakes, Colonel, why ask a fool question like that? If the HERALD finds that out they will fire you, for the fact is that Adam and Eve never ate a darned apple, not one, for who ever heard of a young couple eating apples under a fig tree anyhow?"

We don't know a thing about it ourself but we will venture to say that if Eve ever sank her teeth into an old Michigan Bellflower once she would have rung up the fruit store and ordered a bushel of 'em. Maybe she did, and maybe that accounts for why they have liked Bellflowers ever since.

You have no doubt read considerable about the dust storms we have been having. Well, they haven't been any worse here than they have in other places. New York had 'em too. Yesterday the dust was so thick that houses across the street were almost invisible.

The wind was blowing a gale from the south and we heard an airplane going overhead bound north with the wind, which proved to be a Government agent going north following an Oklahoma farm upon which the Government held a mortgage. When they think they can cancel a Government mortgage by removing the security in a high wind they forget how fast the blue buzzard can fly. Ripley ought to have this one.

Walt Bradley is now playing "Sweet Music" at his Moon theatre, and from the business it is drawing we judge that it is giving general satisfaction to everybody and Rudy Vallee is doing quite a lot of the chores in the picture, which no doubt will draw a lot of business to the house if the girls can all get out. It is said to be a very good picture, but we don't know pictures.

There is one guy in that picture that always gives us a giggle, and that is a Dutchman by the name of Cawthorn. He gets his language all mixed up like a jazz orchestra and then he stops to spit. When they are picking stars they ought to look this Dutchman over pretty carefully or they might miss an opportunity.

When a female star kisses a poodle it shows rather bad taste on the part of both of 'em, and it calls to mind when a woman back in South Bend, Indiana, kissed her darling pup and he ran out and bit a tramp so hard that he couldn't sit down for two weeks. That just shows you what taste some pups have.

Last night we saw Aline MacMahon and Guy Kibbee in "Mary Jane's Pa," and we pronounce it a rather good picture, although we don't know much about pictures. Our main objection to the picture (if one can call it an objection) was when Guy deliberately walked out on Aline without the slightest reason except that he had the wanderlust in his system. He grabbed a freight train and the next time we saw him he was setting type over in China.

He got up and deliberately walked out on Aline and her two little girls and left her to run the printing shop all by herself, and that wasn't fair. There was no sense in doing that just to please some director, but anyhow it was a very good picture, but we doubt if it will be listed as one of the "best ten" and we doubt also if Guy ate much chop suey after he got back to Silvertown.

Whenever we hear a jazz orchestra play the accompaniment for a radio crooner crooning a love song, we are inclined to wonder if the NRA has promised the Blue Pelican an Old Age Pension if he will go out and roost in that Shelterbelt.

NEWS ALONG WABASH AVENUE

CHICAGO

All dandied up with a new telephone number (Harrison 7651) and in a swanky new office (624 South Michigan Avenue) your reporter is neither a joy to behold nor hiccupy about it all. The old diggings at Van Buren and Dearborn were home suite home and news got the habit of rolling in under its own power and writing itself on the nearest cuff. Whole weeks went by without genuine reason for straying further from the typewriter than to Tony's. And now, with all filmdom just around the corner and a stone's throw in any direction, it's back to the mines and whaddayaknowtoday, men, whaddayaknowtoday. Time lurches on.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

ENTHUSIASM DOES IT

Set down in last week's issue was Dick Wright's able dissertation on service, a subject that looms importantly and rightly so in the proper conduct of the theatre. And as service is to be computed in terms of dollars at the box office, your venerable Chairman takes the liberty of suggesting that perhaps this much used and also oft abused term can stand a bit of dissection. It is therefore offered as one of the points for this week's discussion and the brethren are invited to unlax as the meeting is called to order.

From where we stand, the exhibition end of the industry depends upon three things: First, of course, the product. Next, the enthusiasm with which it is put over, and then the manner in which it is serviced to the patron.

Right here, we'll confess there is room for argument. Some will want to put service ahead of enthusiasm, but you've got to get 'em in before you can make 'em comfortable.

Okay then. We've got a trinity of values upon which the whole shebang rests. How does it balance? Well, let's call product the fulcrum of a scale from which is suspended on one side the above mentioned enthusiasm and service. That's no balance, sez you. And right you are. Then what counterweights do we propose for the other side?

Why nothing else than equal quantities of consideration for the theatreman in the matter of working hours and fair remuneration in exchange for his labors.

Less than a sleeper jump from this typewriter is a theatre managed by a showman of ability and experience. He is allowed sufficient latitude in putting over his shows, receives a respectable salary, enjoys his work, the goodwill of his patrons and superiors and does an eminently satisfactory job.

There are other theatremen in the same sector who no doubt have a like feeling for the theatre, but are not so fortunately placed. They are limited in operation, required to put in overlong stretches and in general have little opportunity or incentive to impress their personalities upon the neighborhood gentry.

Enthusiasm is a priceless virtue, but fragile nevertheless. And showmen from whom it gushes as crystal water from a mountain spring are to be closely guarded from unfair influences that tend to dampen their joy of living.

Enthusiasm among managers makes possible a high degree of showmanship, of service, comfort and convenience. The necessity of keeping it high and shining should be recognized by superiors as equally important as the perfection of service upon which so much of the theatre's success depends.

SHOULD BE MODIFIED

Rescinding of the regulation permitting unaddressed advertising matter in the mails is working a hardship upon theatremen, especially those in the smaller communities who have for the first time been able to afford full mailing coverage.

Writes Joe Crivello, of the Lyric Theatre, Gillespie, Ill.:

"We can fully understand the pressure brought to bear on the Post Office Department by the large metropolitan dailies because of the effect on display advertising and also by Chambers of Commerce because of the advantage gained by mail order houses. But consider the plight of the country town exhibitor whose only advertising medium is a weekly paper with a circulation of less than 1,000 copies. . . . True, the cost for full coverage is big on its face but, in our experience, the dividends at the box office have been nothing short of marvelous. . . ."

The increase in business due to the benefits of this service should convince the Postmaster General of the necessity of serious consideration for an immediate modification of the new and disturbing order.

INTERESTING LOBBIES

In his press book article, April 27 issue, Bill Yearsley brings out a significant fact that has to do with making the theatre front effective. Yearsley maintains that display material in the lobby and front must be interesting as well as artistic. The reason for this, he points out, is that such advertising (from press books or trade paper ads) attracts readers who may not purchase admission at the time but serve as decoys to attract others who will buy tickets. Life about a theatre front is good for business, says Bill.

In our section of town, there are two theatres across from each other. The one that does most of the business does not always show the better picture, but in every instance has by far the more interesting lobby. Mebbe that's the answer.

Recent newspaper story tells of a trio of gunmen who waylaid a manager at his home, took him back to the theatre where he was forced to open the safe, then returned the showman to his residence. Evidently the stick-up boys are beginning to realize the advantages of house-to-house distribution.

SHOWMEN'S LOBBY LAFFS

Little One to Big One: "I've been standing in line a coupla hours; do you mind if I talk to you? It gets kinda lonesome."

Cooper Celebrates Shirley's Birthday

Folks in Hackensack and nearby New Jersey points sure got themselves a load of Shirley Temple what with Manager Max Cooper of the Fox, in that spot, going to town to sell the starlet's birthday while snapping over "Little Colonel" with various click ideas.

Retailers of the Temple frocks supplied dresses for a kid fashion show, the juvenile models obtained by Max from local dance school. Store made up miniature stage showing dresses on Temple cutouts, gave copies of the movie books for distribution and took a lot of space in the dailies to announce the various tieups as had to do with the kid clothes styles.

For the birthday, Cooper made up a giant greeting card for lobby display, boys and girls being invited to sign their names, card then forwarded to the studio. In conjunction, a movie contest was put on and accompanying photo shows Max presenting cup to winner and judging by the expression on his face, he's enjoying the job.

"Why I Like" essay contest also clicked, with prizes of Temple dolls and guest tickets. Featured in benefit tied in with local V.F.W. post was a parade of junior drum corps down Main Street, children carrying theatre banners.

Cooper Presenting Cup to Winner

Fish and Game Warden Tieup

Cooper also reports the third annual tieup with the New Jersey Fish and Game Warden Association on a benefit performance, which he hooked in with a lobby display of animals and fish native to the state. Lobby was turned into miniature forest, trees and plants surrounding cages containing pheasants, ducks, geese, raccoons, bear, wolf, etc.

Exhibit also included aquarium of different trout families, with walls covered with skins, animal heads, etc., and a large buck mounted drinking at a stream. Lobby was also an advance on Baboona, the show breaking the local papers for smash stories and photos.

Drive, second half of which ended on May 4, was sponsored by General Manager J. J. Fitzgibbons and supervised by Gene Curtis, director of sales promotion. Additional prizes of $25 will be given winners of second-half competition, and three $50 prizes awarded for best continuous efforts throughout the entire "Festival."

Bally Reckless In N.Y. Easter Parade

It so happened that the New York Capitol had dated in "Reckless" during Easter, and to tell the folks about it, Billy Ferguson broke out with a flock of models in pajamas, beach robes and other summer accessories to make Fifth Avenue during the height of the annual Easter Sunday fashion parade. Gals carried discs with copy reading "don't be Reckless with your Easter outfit."

Distribution of various literature covered lots of territory. For instance, heralds with the fill-in figures to make Harlow the best dressed star, and folders containing paraffine tracing paper, with cash prizes offered for best tracings of Reckless ads. Summons for Reckless driving were handed out at all traffic stops.

Further traffic-stopper was 16-inch disc, copy on both sides—"Don't drive carelessly—play safe and see Reckless. Obey traffic rules." These were placed on wooden stanchions and spotted conspicuously. The "pooch" radio contest also was put on, prize dog from Hollywood given away with letter from Harlow to the winner.

Special front featured large glass-enclosed show case (see photo) with Harlow cut-out. Case contained balloons with electric fan below causing the animation. Title in raised letters was covered with stills lighted from behind.

N. Y. Capitol's Reckless Front

Reach Cagney Fans On G-Men Opening

According to the Warner publicists newspapers are now using the term "G Men" for heads on stories that have to do with Department of Justice agents as a result of the widspread job of selling on the picture of that name at the New York Strand.

It started three weeks ahead with a series of ten-foot high composites of the action scenes that covered the lobby frames and was followed with a series of buildups to reach all the Cagney fans in the metropolitan district.

These included first a clever throwaway carrying cuts of Muni, Cagney and Ed Robinson, wih tiein copy as follows: "Goodbye, Scarface, so long Public Enemy, farewell Little Caesar—you're through, thanks to G-Men."

The above were planted in ball parks and special four-page tabs distributed in the sportland stores around the Broadway sector. Imprinted two-color napkins were placed in every available spot in the midtown district. One sheets with title in huge block type, red on yellow, were sniped plentifully.

Front included eight-foot head of Cagney with star name and title in giant electric light letters hooked up to a wave effect. Across the arch was a series of high spots enlargements with blown-up newspaper ads in the front frames. Co-op ads and windows were promoted, outstanding among the latter being the Southern Pacific Fifth Avenue office (see photo) which dominated the entire front.

Drissel's Built-in Display Replaces Attraction Sign

That's quite an effect conceived by Roscoe Drissel at Loew's—Wilmington, Del., as a change from the lettering in his regular attraction sign. Accompanying shot on "After Office Hours" shows the flash over theatre marquee obtained by making up wall board sign same size of attraction sign. Cutout star and title letters are backed by heavy transparent paper, heads taken from the regular 24, mounted, and illuminated by spots from marquee.

Roscoe worked the same slant on Marietta with wallboard strips and cutout letters. Idea provides more room as sign only permits 14 spaces using the regular letters.

Another interesting Marietta angle was Drissel's display at downtown hotel during Art Week, showing the creation of an art poster. Four working panels were on exhibit with the finished poster of MacDonald and of course plug for the picture included.

MEET HIZZONER THE MAYOR

Theatreman Who Also Doubles as Canadian Mayor States Courtesy Most Vital in Both Operations

by H. E. WILTON
Manager, Strand, Hamilton, Ont.

What is the greatest and most important thing in connection with successful theatre operation? I say courtesy, and challenge successful contradiction.

If every rule which has been, or may yet be, applied, to theatre operation, is put into effect, and courtesy left out, it will be a failure.

On the other hand there are many, many things which can be overlooked, and still ensure success, providing courtesy is retained. It is the foundation of all business success, and any manager who overlooks this very necessary under-structure, is taking a detour which will land him up a blind alley.

I have served ten years of my life as a railway telegrapher; eleven years as a newspaper reporter, and the past fifteen years as a theatre manager. There are a few years of my life not covered by the above, but they have all been busy years, and during all those years I have made courtesy the basic principle of my life.

Why do I stress this word courtesy? Because any success I have enjoyed has, in my opinion, been due to that particular thing.

One hears and reads a lot these days about costless exploitation. Courtesy is one hundred per cent costless, and pays bigger dividends than any other thing.

Greets Patrons in Lobby

I have always made it a rule to meet my patrons in the entrance lobby of the theatre, and as a result, am personally acquainted with at least 90 per cent of them. This kind of personal touch cannot help but make friends, and as a result of that friendship, I was honored, on four different occasions, by being elected aldermanic representative to the city council for the ward in which the Strand theatre is located.

Two years ago I was further honored by being elected Mayor of Hamilton, and re-elected for the present year by the largest majority ever recorded in this city.

I hope this does not sound egotistical. I have no desire to convey that impression. What I am trying to do is to prove my contention that the best and surest way to all success is by building your whole life on a foundation of courtesy, and, I would like to add, it is highly important that this basic principle will never carry the upper structure, unless it includes your own home, and every walk of your private life.

Through the foundation of courtesy one makes friends. It is the duty of every theatre manager to take a personal, and honest interest, in social and civic affairs of his municipality.

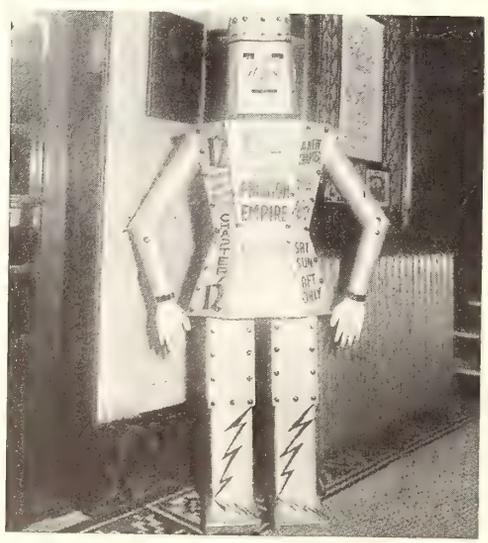
In the dual capacity of theatre manager and mayor, without in any way dwarfing my responsibility or duty to either, I have, on several occasions, further popularized the Strand theatre, by putting on departmental civic night. Because of my civic position many people call to see me at the theatre, and in this way there is an added contact of direct benefit to the theatre, with little, or no inconvenience, to myself.

In connection with my administration as mayor, I have, on several occasions, held staff meetings of all civic employees, at which time the importance of courtesy to the public has been stressed.

It must be remembered, however, that suggested action, without leadership example, is of little value, and no theatre manager can expect courtesy to patrons, if he fails in this important thing, in respect to the members of his staff.

Newcomers Welcomed by Letter

New residents in Hamilton receive personal letters of welcome from the Mayor. They also receive letters of welcome, and a pass, from the manager of the Strand theatre. The only connection between these two separate letters is the signature.



During the past fifteen years as manager of the Strand theatre; the happiest, and best years of my life, I have used practically every known system of exploitation, but the one which stands out as the best and most successful of all, is that of courtesy, which is a regularly established and permanent policy of Strand management.

"BALLY EFFECTIVE AT INTERVALS"

—ROY W. ADAMS, MASON THEATRE, MASON, MICH.

SAYS MANAGEMENT MUST "REACH INTO HOMES"

Dear Mike:

Concerning the matter of ballyhoo in a small town, my experience is that a street bally or a flash front is most effective when used at intervals as a variation on other advertising methods. You can't ballyhoo three or four pictures a week on the small town advertising budget, and it would soon get to be an old story if you did. Also I have never seen results that would justify a great expenditure of time or money on this kind of publicity.

I had a painful and rather expensive object lesson in this regard some years ago when two Universal exploiteers came to my town to put "California Straight Ahead" over in a big way. They built me up a very striking and attractive front in keeping with the picture; they held the expense down, but at that it was nearly the same as the picture rental. That front looked very good, and I expected to do business on the picture—but something backfired. Reginald Denny was a big drawing card then, and I call this one of his funniest pictures, but it did the poorest Sunday I had seen in months, and Denny was never worth a plugged nickel in my town after that. Scouting around to learn the reason for this very disagreeable surprise, I finally gathered from this and similar experiences later that the town's reaction to a flash front on my theatre is this: "It must be a darn poor picture—he's trying to kid us into coming in."

Attendance Not Greater on Saturdays

Believe it or not, there are more people inside the average small town theatre any night but Saturday than there are on the streets—and that's not saying that the theatre is crowded. People aren't thronging the streets day or night in a small town; if they are out at night it is usually because the exhibitor has reached right into the home and started them in his direction.

About half my trade comes from rural homes where the young people, and older ones too, are just as apt to drive to some other nearby town as they are to mine. It's up to me to get into that home and show them what I can offer in entertainment before they start off in some other direction.

I run off a thousand heralds twice a week on my printing press, and get them into every residence, store and car in my town and one neighboring village. Also about once a month I get out a blotter with a list of coming attractions, give them the same distribution, also drive a sixty mile circuit to leave them at all rural schools in a ten mile circle, also catch the houses, stores and cars, especially the country school kid's cars, in three other villages. On any big attraction I run off an additional lot of heralds and give them the same distribution. Also I have an ad and reader in the Mason weekly paper and two papers in nearby towns every week. My blotters, I find, remain in use in these homes, stores and offices until I replace them with a new one, and I change the color of every new edition.

Discussion on the merits of ballyhoo in the smaller communities continues on this page with opinions from Roy W. Adams, of Michigan, and Raymond C. Cronin, of Massachusetts. The subject was brought up originally by Harold Lee, of Bath, New York, who maintained that in his situation, ballyhoo was ineffective. Mason, Michigan, is a town of 2,000, and the Central Theatre is a neighborhood suburban house.—A-MIKE.

Some weeks ago Fred Hinds told us that there are no small towns, but road shows, both stage and screen, come into my town of 2,000 people and find to their surprise that the street bally and flash front which they claim is sure fire in larger situations is an uncertain bet here. Fred also said that he never heard of a Western picture breaking a house record in a small town. Some years ago "The Rainbow Trail" (silent) tied my house record, and right now for a tough spot like the week before Christmas or to meet stiff local competition like a basketball tournament or a school play, I spot in a Western with a popular star and have nothing to worry about.

I neglected to mention that I use one sheets, threes and photos on every change, on the theatre front, and banners on the week-end bills. Also I have one sheet stands around the business streets, and window cards and midget cards in stores, windows, lodge rooms, etc.—ROY W. ADAMS, MANAGER, MASON THEATRE, MASON, MICH.

GETS TOWN OUT OF RUT WITH FLASH BALLYHOO

Dear A. Mike:—

For more than eight years I have been getting ready to write to the pages of the Herald but this is the first time I have really set my thoughts to type. Chancing to see my old mentor's name—Monty Salmon of Philly—in the club columns the past week, I felt that perhaps there was room for a few random notes from me.

I can sympathize with Hal Lee and the other small town boys because for some time I was one of them. Being stationed at Portsmouth, N. H., for J. J. Ford of the Maine and N. H. circuit for a year and a half I came face to face with their problems. Now here in a neighborhood house of the Joelsen circuit in a suburb of Boston I find that it is really more provincial than any I have yet been in.

Advertising is and always has been one phase of show business that no one has ever been able to adequately pigeonhole. The problem of how to exploit a picture is individual with each house and manager. Often the type of ballyhoo which clicks in one spot is quite valueless in another. This house plays third run being two weeks behind two others of the same company. To exploit in the grand manner here is in my opinion quite useless and a waste of good money. By booking as close as possible to the other two houses we are thus enabled to take advantage of their rather extensive advertising. Not that the usual channels of exploitation are avoided however. On the contrary—as witness.

This house is in the class section of town and naturally some pictures have a value here far greater than they exhibit at the other houses. This was especially noticeable on such pictures as "The Barretts" and "Sequoia." On these we had tieups with clubs, schools and Browning societies. Being located near several colleges we were able to attract some business from them. As a matter of fact, on "Sequoia" there wasn't a stuffed deer head or mounted fish or bird left in town. All were in our lobby. To take advantage of such angles I have always regarded as the logical policy to follow.

Confines Poster Advertising

In regard to the use of posters and window cards on highways this too is a local proposition. In any spot with a well circulated daily newspaper I would advise the confining of poster advertising to the absolute minimum. In such a case the newspaper has a far greater appeal. And above all it is far more certain of its readers and reader attention.

I have always regarded the loud, flashy type of ballyhoo as a means of getting a town out of the rut. For towns, too, being but groups of people, get into habits and these very often prove disastrous to the box office.

Especially if they are allowed to form the radio habit. This in any community is a very virulent disease and often conducive to box office paralysis.—RAYMOND C. CRONIN, MANAGER, CENTRAL THEATRE, SOMERVILLE, MASS.

How They Did It in Winnipeg

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1934, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parentheses after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers.

PUBLICITY

"CURRENT news value" and fewer adjectives represent the epitome of the demand upon motion picture publicity of the reviewers of the daily press of the nation, according to Film Daily's reports on its annual questionaire addressed to the movie editors.

On this point the "critics" have been asked one question which they are especially qualified to answer.

"Current news value" means, one must assume, material pertaining to subjects that the newspaper's readers want to read about at the moment, which in reference to the motion picture means something related to the local playdate. The method of taking care of that is reasonably obvious. The excess of adjectives may be dealt with in the same manner that the copy-reader in other departments takes care of them.

"Greatest need of the publicity departments is for trained newspapermen," says Film Daily's report on the critics' report. The percentage of "trained" newspapermen in the publicity departments of the motion picture companies is higher than in the critical departments of the newspapers themselves. The few real newspaper men engaged in the conduct of motion picture columns across the land are so conspicuously capable in their performance that the hyper-fans and nieces of the publisher who gravitate to the job in casually managed newspaper organizations are thrown into a contrast made vivid by the grey majority.

On the other side is the fact that, in general, motion picture publicity activity is today entirely addressed at the job of selling individual pictures, and not at all toward the furtherance of the cause of the motion picture as an institution. This results naturally in copy and efforts which do not always precisely square with the viewpoint of the local motion picture editor. The publicity which achieves the greatest success is that which does the newspaper columnist's work for him. The idea is good but not nationally practical, release dates and zoning being what they are.

Another factor, which the newspaper critics, properly enough, do not weigh, is that publicity copy has, in the main, to originate in Hollywood, and that in Hollywood a paragraph in the local press, to be seen by the boss and the star's associate and intimates, is vastly more important in their eyes than columns across the nation. Hollywood's press agents fill their jobs by their national performance, but they hold them by their local showings.

For the reader there is no substitute for the reporter who is working for him, exclusively. That is why Hollywood, where reporters were unknown in 1916, now has an army of several hundred correspondents—all out there to get what the motion picture would not send them.

THE YES BOYS

THE "Yes Man" has long been one of the widely public jokes and inferred indictments of the motion picture industry.

Today the "Yes-demanding" minorities of vociferous militants among the members of the box office public are becoming a much larger and important curse.

Remember, to be sure, that they are minorities.

Within the fortnight in several metropolitan centers various Young Reds and local Communists have waged campaigns against various motion pictures, demanding cancellation of announced showings on the ground that the pictures were patriotic, or that they supported the cause of capital, or that they stood in some manner for the status quo. In addition sundry student bodies in colleges from New Hampshire to New Jersey have been bold enough to object to the exhibition of various pictures and newsreels because they contended that the productions in question contained "propaganda," which somehow did not square with the young idea.

The motion picture industry of these United States is, in the eyes of at least one experienced observer, engaged, to an amazing degree of concentration, in the exclusive job of presenting entertainment, and doing exceedingly well at it.

The pressures of these noisy, callow minorities are not to be mistaken by the experienced exhibitor as representing box office voices. Motion pictures of opinion, meanwhile, will be welcomed by audiences with buying power.

Any presentation of any aspect of any contemporary subject can, by biased partisans, be charged with being propaganda. The shouting zealots who want to see on the screen, and elsewhere, only that with which they agree, are not the American public.

All in all, however, there is progress. Because now, with the assortment of militants in the field, it is, more than ever, impossible for every motion picture to please all of the people all of the time. And the motion picture becomes an important medium in direct ratio to the effort to serve selected audiences. For a long time to come the major concern will be to find the big audience, even if that big audience can no longer mean everybody.

MAJOR EDWIN H. ARMSTRONG, famous wireless expert, has evolved a new ultra short wave method of avoiding static and sundry electrical interferences with radio. It promises a radio revolution. If the able Major would now devote himself to a filter to eliminate the continuous chiming of the dumbbells on the air he would be doing something.

STUDIOS BUY 100 STORIES AND PLAYS IN A MONTH

Producers Set Five-Year Record in Purchases, Giving Exhibitor Clue to Product Coming in New Season

Establishing a five-year record for such activity, 13 motion picture producers in four weeks have purchased 100 story properties with which to lay the foundation for the feature programs which they will deliver to exhibitors in 1935-36. Purchases consisted of 44 books, 43 originals and 13 plays.

In this first comprehensive analysis of what theatre owners may expect from the studios can be found many indications of strong box office possibilities.

Not since last September, when producers purchased 75 books and plays to round out 1934-35 programs, has there been story buying activity even approaching that of April, indicating not only the actual arrival of an early selling season, as was expected, but also early deliveries. Besides the contrast with the average of 53 purchases for each of the seven months preceding, there was also an investment of $500,000, on an arbitrary basis of $5,000 for each purchase. Some cost many times that amount.

Story and play purchases, recapitulated since last September 1st, follow:

Month	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals
September	28	40	7	75
October	25	20	6	51
November	39	17	8	64
December	19	19	6	44
January	26	14	7	47
February	21	17	3	41
March	28	15	5	48
April	43	44	13	100
Totals for 8 Months	229	186	55	470

The trend of the new purchases is toward the best selling novel and away from the original story. The seven-month average, from September 1st to May 1st, showed original stories as 49 per cent of all purchases; books, 39 per cent, and plays, 12 per cent, whereas April's purchases of originals dropped 6 per cent to 43 and book purchases increased 5 per cent to 44 per cent. The stage continued to be a limited source.

Outstanding among April activities was Metro's purchase of "The Bishop Misbehaves," Frederick Jackson's successful Broadway stage comedy. The same company bought Edward Hope's story, "Calm Yourself," and Abbie Carter Goodloe's O'Henry Memorial Award winner, "Claustrophobia."

There were dozens of popular magazine serials acquired, among them "The Clock Strikes," American Magazine, which went to Popular Pictures; "Dancing Feet," syndicated in 55 newspapers and magazines, to Republic; "Husk," Saturday Evening Post, to Radio; "Leander Clicks," Red Book, to Radio; "The Old Timer," Saturday Evening Post, to Paramount; "Snowed Under" and "The Trial of Dr. Beamish," both Liberty Magazine stories, to Warner; "The Whipsaw," Liberty, to Metro, and others. Many purchases were made with specific stars in mind.

Producers, directors and writers were assigned to many of the new books and plays, and in some cases production started immediately.

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., was signed Wednesday to a new five-year contract by the board of directors, made up of executives of member companies. The new contract goes into effect when the old one runs out in the spring of 1936.

Christine Jope-Slade's "Forbidden Heaven" went to Republic; "Franz Liszt" was acquired by London Films (United Artists); James Fenimore Cooper's "Deer Slayer" was another Republic purchase, while Metro got "The Great Ziegfeld."

Peter B. Kyne contributed a half-dozen original manuscripts, four of which were taken by Columbia for its new westerns.

W. Ray Johnston's Republic Pictures lost no time in expanding its product plans in keeping with its evolution from a states right distributor into a national distributing structure, purchasing 19 properties in April to head the list from the standpoint of numerical acquisitions. Paramount, Radio and MGM followed closely in order, acquiring rights to 17, 16 and 15 manuscripts. Numerically, April's acquisitions stood:

Company	Originals	Books	Plays	Totals for April
Cameo	..	5	..	5
Columbia	5	1	..	6
Fox	1	..	..	1
Goldwyn (U.A.)	1	1	..	2
Liberty	..	1	..	1

Radio	5	4	7	16
Republic (Monogram)	9	10	..	19

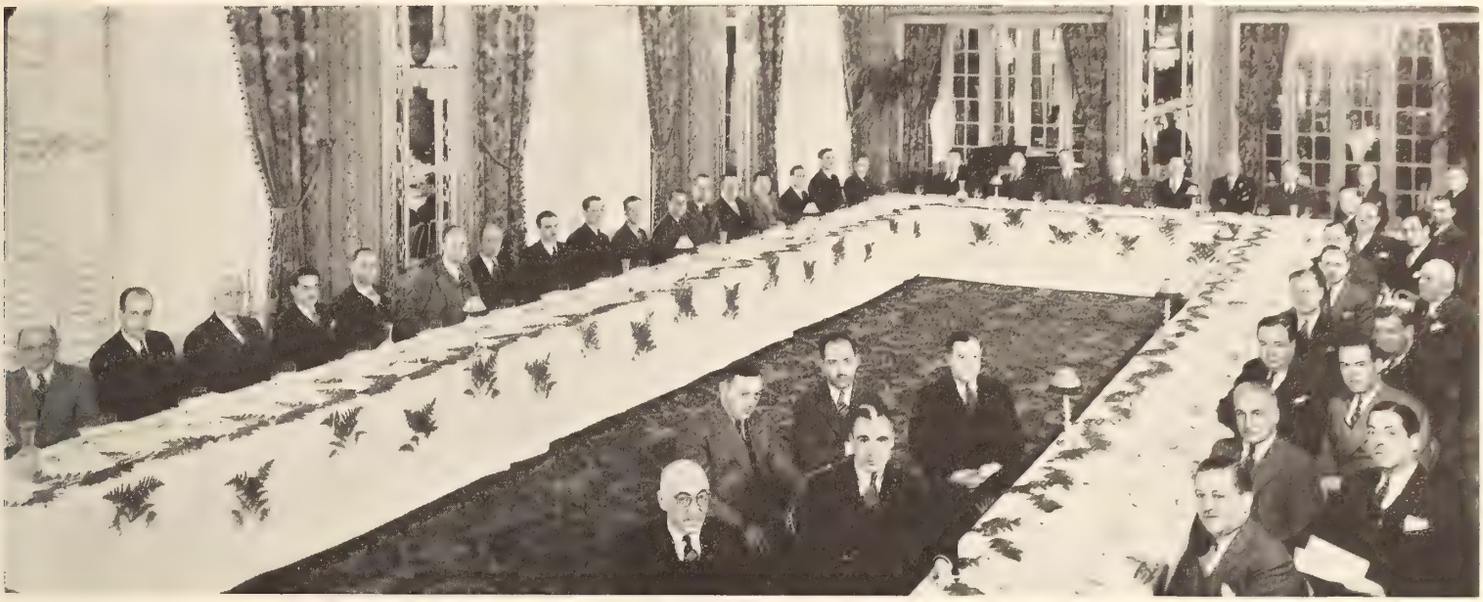
Heads of Three Companies Deny Merger Intent

M. H. Hoffman, president of Liberty Pictures; George Batcheller, head of Chesterfield Pictures, and Maury Cohen, of Invincible Pictures, declared independently this week that their respective producing and states rights distributing companies will not become a part of W. Ray Johnston's new national Republic Pictures.

"Liberty will not produce eight features for Republic," said Mr. Hoffman. "Liberty will not abandon its own identity as an individual producer, nor will it become a part of Mr. Johnston's new Republic. Liberty continues as heretofore as a producer owned and controlled by M. H. Hoffman.

"However, if satisfactory distributing terms are negotiated, Liberty may distribute its program through Republic exchanges."

George Batcheller, in behalf of Chesterfield, and Mr. Cohen, for Invincible, declared that they had no idea why their companies are being mentioned in connection with the new Republic expansion, inasmuch as their companies are not financed by Consolidated Film Industries, which has been participating in the financing of Republic, but rather by Pathe Exchange, Inc. They contemplate no merger, both added.



Herbert J. Yates, president of Consolidated, was quoted on May 7, upon his return to New York from California, as saying that Liberty next season would drop its own identity as an individual producer and would make a series of eight features for distribution through Republic.

He added, however, that Invincible or Chesterfield probably will not become part of the Republic plan.

New York Paramount May Close for Summer

The New York Paramount Theatre may close for part of the summer, it was indicated this week, shortage of suitable product being given as the chief reason. Two weeks' notice has been given to the theatre musicians and Reginald Foort, organist. It is reported that, as an additional summer economy move, the theatre will cut to $3,500 its regular weekly advertising budget of from $7,500 to $10,000.

BRITISH PRESS MORE INTERESTED THAN PLEASED ABOUT CODE VISIT

"Leader" Writers Urge History as Warrant for Screen's Portrayal of "Bad Goil" and the Low Gowns of Victoria's Day

MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S LONDON BUREAU

With Martin Quigley and Carl E. Milliken in London by invitation to discuss the American industry's Production Code and its administration, the British press is found giving voice to something less than unanimous enthusiasm.

The British "leader" writers appear to view with considerable skepticism any suggestion that America may tell Britain anything on issues pertaining to taste, morals or social values, most especially concerning the screen.

And Mistress Nell Gwyn, gathered to her reward November 13, 1687, famed for her kindness to the king, is made the text of a British defense that historicity warrants screen presentation without strictures from any Production Code Administration. A like defensive argument is made on the contention that the low-cut evening gowns of Victorian days partake of the virtue and conservatism of Queen Victoria herself. Thus far no one has brought Queen Mary's hats into the discussion. By the same reasoning the Italians could do wonders with a license of historic accuracy based on such a figure as the Empress Theodora.

Producers Fully Represented

The British producers are fully represented in the conferences, and the occasion is viewed here as the most important trade happening since the British picture makers have begun seriously to address themselves to the American market. There is a tendency to see in this contact possibilities of an Anglo-American understanding covering more than the matters immediately under discussion.

The official announcements from the Hays office in London have been featured in all London and provincial dailies and evenings, from The Times downwards, while a great number of papers print comments which, frankly critical of some details of American Production Code practice, are generally of a tenor welcoming the visit as a definitely helpful gesture to the British production industry.

Norton's Experience Quoted

The Daily Mail, under the feature headings "Film Code Talks Welcomed: British Concern at Threatened U. S. Ban," publishes, from its film correspondent, Seton Margrave, a contribution in which he quotes Captain Richard Norton, of British and Dominion Films, as saying:

"My experience in New York in getting certificates for 'Nell Gwyn' and 'Brewster's Millions' taught me that there is a real difference in outlook as between British and American censorship. Therefore I welcome any such discussion.

"It is impossible for British producers to make expensive films without having access to the American market, so that a discussion of the problem of American censorship may be said to be essential to the future of the British film industry."

Jympson Harman, in the London Evening News, says:

"Two wise men from the West will arrive in London to tell us exactly what is wrong with the morals of our films. They will explain why the good folk of Oshkosh may not be allowed to know the truth about Nell Gwyn and what was wrong with the frocks the ladies wore when the Prince Regent made merry.

"Michael Balcon, the Gaumont British production chief, who has just returned from a triumphant visit to Hollywood, tells me that these gentlemen have done a great thing for the cinema. Films were getting so near the knuckle that there seemed to be no limit to what they might do. Moral opinion against Hollywood became so strong that the whole business was in danger of being wrecked.

"This situation has been met and counteracted by the producers' own efforts, forced out of them at great financial cost by their self-appointed censors. Our coming visitors are two of the chief moral advisers.

"Mr. Balcon says that their visit is a friendly gesture, implying the admission that our films are welcome in the United States. If they were not, Messrs. Quigley and Milliken would not trouble to come over. . . . I know these gentlemen and believe that they are very honest and enthusiastic evangelists.

"Their chief trouble is that they take films too seriously. They want to uplift them too much.

"I dislike cheap smut as much as Messrs. Quigley and Milliken. But I have an idea that this uplift business can be overdone.

"The cinema is a very modern and very real form of entertainment. It deals, or should do, with things as they are, as long as these things can be put on in good taste. Never mind what good taste is. Your conscience will tell you that.

"These dignifiers of the films have been responsible for the filming of a score of old stories lately that Hollywood would not have touched with a barge pole in the bad old days."

On Historical Veracity

The Evening News also devotes a leading article to the subject, under the heading "Clothes and the Man," in which it says:

"There is, it appears, a possibility that some British historical films will be banned in the United States because they do not comply with the cardinal principles of decorum adopted by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America at the behest of the League of Purity.

"This will come as a surprise to Britons, the more so since the matters complained of appear to be concerned with historic veracity rather than with contemporary taste.

"We in this country are apt to assume that the Victorian decolletage, though out of date, can at least be exhibited with propriety in a film depicting Victorians. We are equally inclined to assume that a picture which depicts the dying King Charles asking his friends to 'take care of poor Nell' must be all right, since the request was actually made, and we do not condemn it on the ground that it violates what America calls the 'moral end values.'

"In the matter of morals we have taken it for granted that, both in regard to things seen and things said, British and American films are much of a muchness. Possibly some of the American films produced here are bowdlerized for American consumption. As to that we are quite willing that the League of Purity should wave its big stick at the Hollywood producers.

"We merely utter a mild protest when it tells us that our Victorian grandmothers, whom we always regarded as the pink of inexorable propriety, wore their evening dresses too low in front for the consumption of Chicago and Kalamazoo. . . .

"We do not suggest that British films do not occasionally err on the side of vulgarity and bad taste. On the other hand, we have a decent respect for historical accuracy, and we shall never blush at our grandmothers' evening gowns or feel it necessary to suppress the fact that the lamentable Nell Gwyns did not come to a bad end."

Unqualified Criticism

The People, a Sunday newspaper, strikes an unqualified note of criticism. It says:

"One would almost think that the Americans, our breezy trans-Atlantic cousins, have no sense of humor when one reads of their film purity campaign. But this is not so. They have merely learned how to keep expressionless poker faces when they are putting up their most audacious bluffs.

"Two ambassadors from Hollywood are coming over here to tell us how to keep our films clean. Think of some of the American talkies you have seen and heard and then try to laugh that off!

"'Nell Gwyn' was such a good British picture that the Americans had to interfere with it. Charles II said, 'Let not poor Nellie starve.' But the Yanks said, 'To blazes with history! She's a bad goil and she's gotta starve!'"

Appeal to British Ambassador

The Daily Express, by its film correspondent Paul Holt, under the heading "Purity Men from U. S. to Talk Over Our Film Morals," says:

"Two American film purity codists are coming to London to talk it over. Governor Carl Milliken (secretary to 'Czar' Will Hays) and Martin Quigley will meet the film producers' group of the Federation of British Industries the first week in May and explain to them the operation of America's socalled 'purity code.'

"The visit is an outcome of the recent protests through the British ambassador in Washington against the banning of British pictures throughout America on moral grounds.

"Objections by the Hays office to 'Nell Gwyn' and 'Brewster's Millions' has only just been removed after long delay.

"The visit is intended to clear up the vexed question of what is—and what is not—moral on the screen."

The Glasgow Daily Record, a leading Scottish paper headlining it "Help from Hollywood on the Way," says:

"With the blessing of Mr. Will Hays, the big shot in American movies, two gentlemen from

PRESS COMMENT VARIES

Hollywood are coming to these shores to instruct our producers in the intricacies of censorship as it is practiced in the U. S. A. Which is very nice of them, although their motive is not entirely altruistic. Film censorship in America varies from state to state, and apparently many British pictures are being sent across the pond which do not conform to all the rules of the game; they are acceptable in some states, but not in others—a handicap and annoyance to American renters who are trying to dispose of them to American exhibitors. It is to remove this handicap that a course of instruction has been arranged. . . .

"Film censorship in America undoubtedly presents many anomalies—and incidentally a good many hypocrisies: the necessary moral twist given to immoral situations not infrequently leaves a nastier taste than an honest treatment of the same situation would do. However, that is primarily America's affair. British producers will undoubtedly benefit from the forthcoming visit of Mr. Hays' representatives, and as a quid pro quo they might tell their visitors what's wrong with many of the films that come here from Hollywood. But perhaps that would take too long."

Visit Called "Good News"

A prominent English provincial newspaper, the Liverpool Post, has this comment:

"Ever since British films became exportable there have been undefined but real difficulties in the way of their full exploitation in the United States. The fault has not rested wholly on the other side of the Atlantic. Lack of full knowledge at this end of American box office appeal, and of the rules and regulations govcruing the cinema industry have also played their part. It is therefore good news that two leading American authorities chosen by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association of America, at the invitation of British industrialists, are arriving here for discussion with our own producers. Americans like the idea of seeing more British films. That they are going out of their way to help us to turn that goodwill to advantage is a pleasant courtesy—and, incidentally, a tribute to the quality of our pictures."

Satirical Reaction

The Era is satirical:

". . . the Code has done useful patriotic work in hampering the sale of one or two British films in America. Governor Milliken, of Maine, and Martin Quigley, of Quigley Publications, are coming here to pacify us about that.

"Government of Hollywood, by Hollywood, for Hollywood, and the rest may perish from the earth."

John Bull, once edited by the late Horatio Bottomley, and still specializing in "exposure" stories, writes:

"Is it merely a coincidence that Mr. Will H. Hays has acquired doubts regarding the good taste of British films just when American filmgoers have discovered their entertainment value?

"Mr. Hays is paid a large stipend by the American film industry to look after the moral value of U. S. talkie fans, and he has lately found cause to take exception to a number of British films.

"Those who have seen American pictures featuring 'it' girls and opulent ladies who invite the world to 'come up and see me some time' may be surprised to learn that the British-made 'Scarlet Pimpernel' film has been impugned on grounds of taste. 'Brewster's Millions' has also been condemned for offending against the lofty standards inculcated by a long series of (American) gangster films."

The Northern Whig, an important Belfast (Ireland) newspaper, after announcing the arrival of the delegates, says:

"Their consultations promise to yield useful results for the film industries of both countries."

Under the headline "To Standardize Purity," the Northern Echo, another important English provincial newspaper, says:

"There has been more than a suspicion of vindictiveness about some of the decisions against British pictures in the past year, when one takes into consideration the type of film which is still arriving here from America. In short, Elstree thinks that America's New Deal smacks of a raw one from their point of view."

Problem of Pronunciation

Says the Film Weekly:

"Messrs. Carl E. Milliken and Martin Quigley, two ambassadors from Will Hays, the American movie czar, are . . . on a diplomatic mission. They are going to 'explain' to British producers the peculiar standards of screen morality demanded by the United States Film Code. Messrs. Milliken and Quigley would do a great deal more to justify their trip to London if, while unravelling the morality code, they also made it their business t odebate problems of pronunciation."

Good-Humored Comment

The trade press made front-page stories of the trip and the Kinematograph Weekly also makes good-humored comment in "Screencomber's" gossip column. Under the head "Keeping it Clean," he writes:

"I understand that the people who promote the welcome lunches to visiting celebrities are in a quandary over the visit of Carl Milliken and Martin Quigley, both here to explain the Decency Code to British producers.

"A number of suggested menus have already been rejected as violating the Code. Leg of lamb has been totally rejected unless served in a stocking and not exposed above the knee. Cow heel violates the code if it includes the ankle, but breast of chicken has been banned entirely as a breach of the cleavage clause. Dressed crab will be permitted provided it is decently dressed. Whipped cream, artichokes, beaten eggs and other evidence of violence are all forbidden. Tipsy cake is also out. Eggs will be served on the understanding that they are not too hard boiled, and providing the hen can produce her marriage certificate.

"One thing we can be certain of—there will be lots and lots of tripe . . . probably in the speeches."

Recording Mr. Quigley's arrival from Paris on May 2, the Daily Mail, heading its story, "Cleavage King Arrives," ran a two-column picture of Mr. and Mrs. Quigley at the London railroad terminus.

At the second conference, held Thursday, between representatives of the Federation of British Industries and Mr. Quigley and Mr. Milliken, the British presented ideas they had developed since the first conversations. The Federation was host at a dinner Thursday night at Dorchester House.

Debate Copyright, Alien Actor Bills

Hollywood producers last week in Washington were the target of attack for what was termed their dependence upon briefs instead of personal appearance on legislation before Congress.

In opening hearings on his bill to make alien actors subject to the contract requirements of the Immigration Law, Representative Samuel Dickstein, chairman of the House immigration committee, threatened to reject briefs sent to Washington by several producers. Finally, he accepted the brief of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America after portions had been read by Representative Charles D. Millard of New York.

The only objection offered on the first day's hearings came from Lodwick Vroom of the Dramatists' Guild, who said that passage would handicap revival of the legitimate theatre. Paul Dullzell of Actors' Equity Association declared enactment "would bring about better days for the American actor."

Mr. Dickstein then said that "an investigation of Mr. Hollywood and Mr. Metro Mayer ought to be held," asserting that "this whole situation has been very badly neglected" and that film producers had imported foreign actors in wholesale lots.

The hearing was recessed by Mr. Dickstein until May 15 in the hope some of the producers would appear. Equity was invited to file a complete reply to the MPPDA's brief.

Copyright Bill Protested

While Mr. Dickstein was conducting his hearing on the alien actor situation, vigorous protests against the State Department-sponsored Copyright Bill were voiced before Senator William G. McAdoo of California, chairman of the Senate patents committee, by representatives of the MPPDA, the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and others.

Criticism was directed chiefly at the provision striking out the minimum penalty for infringement and the rigidity of the protection given an author against changes in his work.

Louis Silcox of the Authors' League told Senator McAdoo the proposed bill is "worse than no law at all." John G. Paine, head of the Music Publishers Protective Association, said the bill does not give any protection to publishers.

Legislatures on Last Lap

In Alabama, theatre operators won their fight to have the 10 per cent amusement tax stricken from the general revenue bill.

The joint steering committee of the California Legislature sent out an income tax proposal with a rate 20 per cent of the federal tax. Passage would necessitate an ad valorem tax of about 30 cents on $100 valuation. A bill calling for a one per cent studio payroll levy toward a state unemployment insurance fund in 1936 was reported out by the Assembly unemployment committee, recommending passage.

In Massachusetts a petition of Alexander Sullivan seeking a law penalizing unauthorized showing of prohibited pictures was killed. Sales tax bills have been put over.

Missouri's Senate is being asked to reconsider its vote reducing the two per cent sales tax rate, as passed by the House, to one-half of one per cent on retail sales.

The Nebraska House passed the chain store tax bill which also included theatre circuits. The levy ranges from $3 on a single unit to $175 annually for a circuit of more than 20 theatres.

The 10 per cent Pennsylvania amusement tax was dropped. The law and order committee of the House reported out a compromise Sunday film bill, providing for local option.

EXECUTION IN NEWSREEL DELIVERED WITH "SEE-IT-OR-DON'T" WARNING

"Close Your Eyes," Patrons Told If They Don't Like To Witness Death of Cuban Rebel in Its Universal Reel

A new chapter in the history of the motion picture newsreel was written this week when the death at dawn of a Cuban rebel before the bullets of a firing squad was delivered pictorially by Universal Newsreel to the American theatre audience on a "see-it-or-don't" basis.

Persons who are ordinarily disturbed by the grusomeness of a killing in cold blood, and who are resentful and condemnatory of its arbitrary presentation on the theatre screen as taken from "real life," are, for the first time in motion picture annals, given advance warning of what to expect. Running ahead of the scenes of the Cuban killing as shown in Issue No. 353 of Universal Newsreel, released Wednesday, is a subcaption of 24 feet, long enough to enable the slowest of eyes to read the following message of caution:

FIRING SQUAD ENDS
LIFE OF CUBAN REBEL

You are about to witness a stark chapter in the Cuban Government's fight against insurrection. If you do not care to look death in the face, PLEASE CLOSE YOUR EYES!

Whether the psychological effect on those who are fearful of gruesomeness, yet morbidly curious, defeats the purpose of the warning, is another matter. The warning is there. The patron may heed it or not.

Jose Costiello y Puentes is shown falling, in a pool of blood, his head and chest torn by the rifle bullets poured into his body by a firing squad of four following his conviction by a court-martial of shooting Lieutenant Juan Alvarez, a leader of an important military contingent of the regular Cuban Army.

Speedy court-martial and execution before firing squads were the order of the day in Cuba last week. But Universal Newsreel and International News Photo Service (William Randolph Hearst) were the only mediums to obtain a pictorial record. Negatives were flown by both from Santa Clara, Cuba, to New York.

The manner in which Universal "scooped" its competitors was grimly humorous. Universal's cameraman, Alberto Domingo, native Cuban, merely walked into the execution yard and photographed the killing. No one said anything to Domingo. He said nothing to anybody. The priest standing nearby as Puentes was led, handcuffed, from the cell to keep a rendezvous with death, the army privates who escorted him, the firing squad and their officers, all were indifferent.

The Hearst International News cameraman, handicapped by the time-taking awkwardness of his still camera, obtained but a few shots, and when the news service management in New York learned that Universal had secured a complete record negotiated an arrangement to use some of the newsreel pictures, with credit to Universal, in the 539 daily newspapers served pictorially by International. Times Wide World Photo, too, used pictures "blown up" from the 35 mm. Universal negative, sending them to its 56 regular syndicate subscribers and to hundreds of newspapers which use Wide World material on occasion, principally in rotos.

Scenes taken by Universal Newsreel cameraman of the execution in Cuba of Jose Puentas, rebel, who killed an army lieutenant. They appear in Universal's latest release.

Projection Scale Hearing June 4

A new schedule of booth costs for theatres in metropolitan New York, embodying features of each of the three plans considered at the public hearing held last January and submitted respectively by Harry Brandt, Charles O'Reilly, exhibitor heads, and Local 306, will be discussed at a hearing to be held by Deputy Administrator William P. Farnsworth June 4.

Under the new proposal the booth costs of many of the larger houses will be materially increased, but many of the smaller houses will be reduced. On the whole, it is said, the total expenditure for New York booths will be somewhat less than at present.

The new formula is based on the point system, with run, capacity and admissions the major factors. Two classes of runs are provided, houses having first, second, third and fourth runs comprising Class A and those with fifth or subsequent runs Class B. The seating capacity scale runs from 600 to 4,000 in jumps of 200, with houses of less than 600 seats classified in a group, while the admission scale runs from 15 to 50 cents in five-cent jumps.

Class A houses compute their booth costs at the rate of 12 cents per point per hour while Class B theatres compute at the rate of 10 cents per point per hour. Houses having stage shows are required to add seven points to their basic point as determined under the run-capacity-admission schedule.

Based on this schedule, a house of less than 600 seats, with fifth or subsequent run and an admission of 15 cents would have a booth cost of $1 per hour, while the same size and admission house with first to fourth run would have a cost of $1.20.

A 4,000-seat house, with an admission of 50 cents or more and offering a stage show, would have a booth cost of $8.04 per hour.

The proposed schedule, which if adopted would become part of the film code, provides that a theatre shall be classified as to run by the run of the majority of pictures it shows, and as to admission by the highest price regularly charged for the orchestra section. No employe working as an operator would be permitted to work more than 30 hours per week.

Portland Golfers Hold Annual Tourney

The majority of those engaged in any phase of the motion picture business in the Portland, Ore., district turned out in force last week for the annual golf tournament at the Portland Country Club. Stars and business men had donated numerous trophies. Winners of various special prizes were: R. O. Wilson, Universal, drive; Jack Kloepper, United Artists, low gross; Cleo Morelock, low net; Jack Rosenberg, putting; Mel Kellar, Warner, accuracy.

SECOND BRITISH DRIVE OPENS ON U.S. MARKET

Anglo-American Renters Plans Exchange of Product, Talent; Dent Due to Bolster BIP

The second British invasion of the American motion picture distribution market got underway this week when the following developments occurred:

1. Establishment of production and distribution agreements between American organizations and Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., for exchange of product and interchange of players being negotiated in New York by Capt. A. C. N. Dixey, acting chairman of Anglo-American.

2. Departure of Arthur Dent, managing director of British International, for New York to bolster distribution of his company's product in this country.

3. Resignation of C. M. Woolf as joint managing director of Gaumont British to join a new production venture which may have its basis in the United States.

The mission to the United States of Captain Dixey, member of Parliament and acting chairman of the newly organized international producing and distributing company, Anglo-American Renters, Ltd., is to negotiate for an exchange of product with American companies and an interchange of players and is generally conceded to be a prelude to concerted action by all major British companies to obtain a firm hold in the American market.

Plans 12 for United States

Anglo-American already has established its own producing and distributing organizations in England and on the Continent, Captain Dixey said upon his arrival in New York. From its French, German, Austrian and Italian affiliates it will take the most successful productions to be remade in England for distribution there and in this country. In addition, the company will have the complete output of Reunion Films, Ltd., a British producing organization headed by Victor Creer, who becomes managing director of Anglo-American. The company, Captain Dixey said, intends to release 12 on the American market in the new season, the pictures to be selected from its own producing sources and from some Continental producers. The first on the schedule is a French production which will be remade in England in about two weeks by an American director. Captain Dixey said that productions will be budgeted at between $150,000 and $250,000 each.

One of the principal aims of Anglo-American will be to select pictures for distribution here and abroad which have the greatest value in increasing goodwill, especially between America and Great Britain. Despite his connection with Parliament, Captain Dixey said there is no government financing of Anglo-American which, he said, has ample capital chiefly derived from business and banking sources outside the film industry.

Founded London Film

Captain Dixey was one of the four joint founders, with Alexander Korda, of London Films. The company, he said, does not intend to embark upon a program of theatre acquisitions, but will probably have one "show window," located in London's West End.

Captain Dixey denied that C. M. Woolf, who resigned from Gaumont British last week, would be associated with Anglo-American, although, he said, their relations were "of the friendliest."

Accompanying Captain Dixey are Peter Witt, foreign manager, and Gulio Nicholas, financial associate and acting chairman of Independent Producing Studios, Ltd., an associated company which finances independent producers in England.

Arthur Dent, managing director of British International, arrived in New York this week to commence a drive on behalf of his company on Broadway and the rest of the American market. John Maxwell, head of BIP, will follow Mr. Dent in about a fortnight.

Bringing with him some of BIP's most recent "big" productions, including "Mimi," co-starring Gertrude Lawrence and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.; "Abdul, the Damned," starring Fritz Kortner; "Queen Elizabeth" and a screen history of the British Royal Family, "Royal Cavalcade," it is understood Mr. Dent intends taking a Broadway theatre at which he will preview them for the trade and the press. After that he plans to go to Hollywood to negotiate some deals for American talent.

Reports from London this week were that Mr. Dent's American trip is creating some speculation along Wardour Street on account of the viewpoint, existing in several quarters, that several of the pictures he has with him are not qualified for American distribution.

Woolf to Produce 20

Reports that C. M. Woolf, joint managing director of Gaumont British had resigned that post to join a new production venture, possibly in the United States, were confirmed in New York by Arthur Lee, vice-president of GB.

Mr. Woolf's name has been mentioned frequently recently in London in connection with Anglo-American. It is regarded as certain that Mr. Woolf will produce and distribute as many as 20 features annually, according to reports from the British capital, and that six from Max Schach's company, Capitol Productions, will be included.

Mr. Woolf's name also has been linked with Union Cinemas. It is understood he is planning to sail for the United States some time before the end of this month.

In London, Gaumont British's internal organization was undergoing a thorough overhauling subsequent to Mr. Woolf's resignation. Mark Ostrer is now the sole head of the company and Jeffrey Bernerd will be general manager of home distribution. Mr. Bernerd is reorganizing the sales staff.

It was reported this week that Mr. Woolf received £120,000, or about $600,000, in settlement of his contract, and that his son, John Woolf, received £30,000.

Paul Soskin, who made "Ten Minute Alibi" in England, has started "While Parents Sleep," from the Anthony Kimmins' West-End theatre success. This second production of Transatlantic Film Corporation will be directed by Fred Zelnik at the B. and D. studios, Elstree, in conjunction with that company, and will have United Artists release.

Arthur Clavering, who was managing director of Film Booking Offices, in London, until 1925, has been appointed joint managing director with Julius Hagen of Twickenham Film Distributors, Ltd., which will rent films made at Twickenham studio, and those of other independent producers, aiming at a feature program of 24 a year.

Rules Texas Law Does Not Apply To Film Contracts

The civil court of appeals at Dallas last week, in an important decision, affirmed a denial of the state district court of the granting of a temporary injunction to R. Z. Glass of the Knox and Fair theatres in Dallas. The decision was a victory for Karl Hoblitzelle, Robert J. O'Donnell and Interstate Circuit. The court held Texas anti-trust laws do not apply to film contracts.

The complainant brought suit in connection with contracts Interstate had signed with various distributors providing that pictures playing first run at 40 cents or more cannot play in subsequent houses at less than 25 cents. The appeals court agreed on all five points noted by the lower court, except the damage angle, on which it passed no judgment.

The district court had concluded that the distributor contracts are made in interstate commerce and the anti-trust laws of Texas therefor had no application; that the contracts showed they were made for licensing of copyrighted films, and the Texas laws have no application; that the evidence indicates there was no conspiracy as alleged by the plaintiff; that the plaintiff failed to show such probable damage as would warrant injunctive relief, and that the NRA code for the film industry furnishes a remedy to the plaintiff.

Federal Judge Clark in Newark last week set May 20 for the plaintiffs to show cause why complaints in suits by the Ledkirk Amusement Company and Strand Theatre Operating Company, East Orange, for $1,060,000 against Fox, Paramount, Warner, RKO and others should not be dismissed. Defendants contended they cannot be sued in New Jersey without their consent because they are not incorporated there. Conspiracy to withhold product is charged.

Authoritative sources have reported that federal authorities from the Department of Justice are in Sandusky, Ohio, investigating the film industry and seeking information regarding monopoly charges.

Consolidated Film's Net $212,536 in Three Months

Consolidated Film Industries, Inc., and subsidiaries reported a net profit of $212,536.73 for the quarter ended March 31, 1935, compared with $317,780.94 for the same period last year. Current earnings, after all charges and federal charges, are at a rate of 50 cents a share on the 400,000 shares of preferred and two cents on the 524,973 of common outstanding. Net for the same period last year was at 50 cents on preferred and 22 cents on common. Shares outstanding in each group were of the same total.

Conditioning Firm Starts

The Barrett Manufacturing Company has been organized in Kansas City to manufacture cooling and air conditioning systems for theatres. S. W. Barrett heads the firm. Installations already have been made in several local houses.

NRA CODE FAILS TO SOLVE TALENT PROBLEM; ACADEMY BACK IN FAVOR

Standard Players' Contract Restoring Order After Fights Between Factions While Hollywood Remains Uncodified

SPECIAL FROM HOLLYWOOD BUREAU OF MOTION PICTURE HERALD

With failure of the motion picture code to settle disputes among Hollywood talent factions, the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood is definitely being re-established as the medium of adjustment of differences among its frontline membership.

Hollywood alone remains virtually uncodified under the Blue Eagle, on this the last month of existence of the National Industrial Recovery Act in the form in which it was written some two years ago by the Roosevelt Administration. Furthermore, from all appearances Hollywood will remain uncodified even if the life of the Eagle is extended beyond June 16, as indicated by the Senate action Tuesday in voting that NRA be continued until April 1, 1936.

The National Recovery Administration in Washington, its compliance director and chief film code figure, Sol A. Rosenblatt, together with the motion picture Code Authority, set up by both, and various NRA dignitaries and Authority appointees have been unable to apply the tenets of the code for establishing fair practices between producer and talent.

Code provisions for skilled labor worked smoothly in production from the beginning. Their scales and schedules of hours always had been advantageous—due, principally, to union strength—to the studio carpenter and electrician, painters, plasterers and plumbers; gaffers and grips, projectionists, property men and scenic worker. The American Federation of Labor, at code-drafting time, complimented the producers for the high working standards applying to these crafts.

Trade practices governing relations under the code among producers themselves are very few and comparatively unimportant.

Code Clauses Not Working

But, the code prescribes machinery for setting up standards of fair practice governing the relations between studio and talent: writers, directors, players, agents and the like, and no one has ever been able to make it work.

Much was expected in Hollywood when Presidential approval was affixed to the code on Nov. 27, 1933. What followed is now history: the bitter fights between talent factions; the demands of talent and their subsequent refusal by producers; the many trips westward made by both Mr. Rosenblatt and John C. Flinn, Code Authority secretary. And the results have been virtually nil.

Many years before anyone ever heard of an NRA, the production arm of the industry had established its own mutual relation organization—the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. The story of the NRA code efforts is the story, too, of the near-wrecking of the Academy. In the early days of the Blue Eagle the Academy, as a recognized constituted body, sent representatives to the Washington code-drafting meetings. The Academy pronounced itself able to accommodate practically any problem that might come within the scope of any code applying to producers and talent.

Meanwhile certain factions of its own Actors' Branch, constituting themselves as torch-bearers of the minority group who for many years had maintained that the Academy was "producer controlled and a "company union," improperly handling their interests, planted the seeds of dissension. The Screen Actors' Guild was born, piloted by Eddie Montgomery, Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding, Frank Morgan, Chester Morris, James Cagney, Otto Kruger and others.

Bit players, character actors and even extras, adapting the "we-don't-wish-to-be-browbeaten" psychology of their more illustrious "top-notch" confreres, acted independently and organized additional groups. It soon became difficult to determine who was speaking for whom.

Then the Screen Writers

Immediately following the secession of a large number of member actors from the Academy, a rebellion that also saw the withdrawal of one of two producer members, members of the Screen Writers' Branch, feeling that their interests were different and that they were being "double crossed," got together. Among their leaders were Ralph Block, Howard Emerson, James Gleason, Dudley Nichols, Waldemar Young, Ernest Pascal, Nunnally Johnson, Adele Buffington, William Conselman, James Creelman, Delmar Daves, Albert Hackett, William Slavens McNutt, Seton Miller, Wells Root, Samuel Spewack, Dwight Taylor and Harlan Thompson. Thus came the Screen Writers' Guild. As in the case of the minor players, writer members resigned from the Academy. Other writers, such as the free-lancers, those working for independent producers and others not on contract, emulated the tactics of the minor players.

The high hope of an equitable code was riddled by turmoil, the prestige of the Academy well nigh vanished. Deputy Administrator (at the time) Rosenblatt previously had requested both the actors and writers, as well as the groups not in harmony with them, to submit their versions of code trade practices. Little progress being made, Mr. Rosenblatt last year announced he would visit Hollywood and call a series of hearings.

Upon his arrival, the situation was thrown into worse confusion than ever, when the agents representing talent organized and demanded a voice in the proceedings. Following the sessions Mr. Rosenblatt returned to Washington. Shortly after his arrival he abruptly denied the agents group any part in formulating the trade practices.

Meanwhile, certain conservative forces within the Academy, representative of both the producers and some creative talent, were realizing that all the benefits through and by the Academy were in danger of being washed away in the controversy. They banded together and formulated the Standard Players' Contract, effective in March of this year.

As its provisions included virtually all the demands and concessions that the Screen Actors' Guild had been insisting upon in the code, except for a board of arbitration not made up of Academy members, there was little else for them to debate and the Actors' Guild now is gradually fading from the picture as its membership returns to the Academy. However, to solidify their position the die-hard Screen Guild members joined the American Federation of Labor in the "Five A" performers' group. But as far as the code is involved in the Hollywood acting profession, practically nothing is being done, while under the benefits of the comparatively new Standard Contract, all apparently is serene. At least no outward expressions of condemnation are being heard on Hollywood Boulevard.

Actors' Guild Fading from Picture, but Writers Still Wonder; New List of Extras Being Prepared After Protests

Writers' Case Not Settled

The case of the writers has not progressed thus far. The producers have not made any Standard Contract for them similar to that of the actors. Today they have a code in Washington, but are still waiting to see in what manner they will be recognized in a code either imposed upon them or in that which they voluntarily submitted to the proper NRA sources.

Besides establishing wage scales and working hour schedules, the production section of the code set up working conditions and salaries for extra players, atmosphere folk and crowds not classified. Also, it provided machinery for a standing committee to reclassify "extras" as such, and to hear their grievances against employers.

Of the 1,085 complaints filed with the committee for the year ended April 10, there were 981 disposed of, 70 decisions were rendered and were awaiting compliance, four were awaiting interpretations from the Code Authority and 26 were awaiting final action. The committee awarded $4,696 to the extras, although $480 had not been collected from producers.

There continues, however, to be difficulty in establishing of reclassified extras, registered, as provided for in the code.

Protest Over Extras

The situation began to look quite hopeless when, about April 1, a six-page letter of protest was mailed from Hollywood to Mr. Rosenblatt in Hollywood, by the Picture Players' Alliance, The Troupers, Inc., and Hollywood Picture players' Association, Inc., which declared unfair tactics had been used in selecting only 1,000 extras for the list then awaiting his approval. The letter, drafted by Frank Woods, former Academy secretary, charged that 2,000 equally qualified extras were excluded from the list.

They also demanded that the NRA interpret the code's Article 3, Section 4, pertaining to players on location.

Attorney Eugene H. Marcus, Hollywood, representing the organizations of extras, finally went to Washington two weeks ago, and upon his return said the list of 1,000 had been dropped, predicting the compilation of another record, which he intimated would not be limited numerically. [See "Hollywood Scene," page 43.—Ed.]

The Screen Actors' Guild was attempting to continue its fight against the Academy, aiming its fire at the arbitration machinery set up in the Standard Contract under Academy sponsorship, and demanding that arbitration under the Guild be substituted. The Guild was conducting its campaign by pen and word-of-mouth among players and agents, suggesting they refuse to accept the studio contract clause when a player demands his own conciliation board.

Academy writers were drafting proposals for a contract and code of their own, to be submitted to producers. The Screen Writers' Guild was up in arms over such procedure.

ALLIED LEADERS SET FINAL PLANS FOR ATLANTA CONVENTION MAY 20

Sessions of Four-Day Gathering Divided into Discussions of Business and Public Relations and Organization

"What are the independent exhibitors of the United States to do about the motion picture code? Compulsory block booking? The music tax? Film distributor aggression?" . . .

Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors—800 strong, and led by Abram Myers, chairman and Sidney E. Samuelson, president—will converge on Atlanta Monday morning to attempt to decide these questions, at the national annual Allied convention, May 20 to 23, at the Piedmont hotel.

Declaring that "independent exhibitors who spend their time and money to go to Atlanta will not be satisfied with a list of meaningless whereases," a bulletin from the office of the president in New York said that it is the present purpose to divide the convention into three main projects, as follows:

First—Business Relations

To supervise discussion of all business relationships within the industry affecting independent exhibitors: sales policies, double features, premiums, giveaways, price wars, and such parts of the code as relate to operation of theatres. Leaders who are expected to head the discussions include: Aaron Saperstein, Ben Golder, Moe Horwitz, Frank Hornig, Charles Olive, Edward Ansin, William Davis, Andrew Gutenberg, Morris Wax, Bill Smalley, A. E. Lichtman, J. B. Clinton, Charles Metzger and Guy Troyer.

Second—Public Relations

All discussions relating to legislation, "clean picture" campaign, NRA Code, and general relationship of the independent exhibitor to all groups outside the industry. Leaders will discuss block booking, the music tax, state legislation, under the leadership of Col. H. A. Cole, Nathan Yamins, Abe Stone, Fred Herrington and Dave Barrist.

Third—Organization

A discussion of the mechanics of regional and territorial Allied organization: How to finance an independent exhibitor unit; how to service independent exhibitors; how to make organization effective in business relations and public relations. The discussion will be led by Walter Littlefield, H. M. Richey, Martin Smith, N. H. Waters, W. A. Steffes, Herman Blum, Henry Lazarus, Ray Branch, Arthur Price, Arthur Howard, John Piller, P. J. Wood, George Erdmann, Oscar Neufeld, Ray Tesch and Ike Katz.

The final program will be arranged in detail at the directors' meeting at the Piedmont at 4 p. m. Monday. All state leaders were urged by Mr. Samuelson to participate in formulating the program as it eventually will be carried out on the convention floor.

All independent exhibitors, regardless of national or state organization affiliations, were invited to attend.

Advance registration indicated that some 800 will attend; in this event the overflow will be housed at the Fulton hotel and elsewhere.

Bobby Jones, former golf champion, will start the Allied convention tournament at the East Lake Country Club Tuesday morning.

Newsreel photographers will grind as the Governor of Georgia, Eugene Talmadge, now in the national political eye, makes his address on Wednesday afternoon, May 22, inasmuch as a special stunt has been arranged for this occasion with Mr. Samuelson as the other leading figure. In addition, talking pictures will be snapped by National Screen Service.

The Atlanta Convention Bureau, Mayor James L. Key, the governor and virtually every leading picture luminary in the Southeast have banded together to make the convention a success. Additional headquarters have been opened on the Piedmont mezzanine, where there will be quartered 20 concessionaires who will display their equipment. These include: RCA, National Screen, National Theatre Supply, Conger Printing Company, Southern Fan, Claude Neon Sign, Triangle Poster, Amity Film Exchange, Theatre Service, N. Emile Savini, Visugraphic Film, Wil-Kin Theatre Supply, American Seating Company, Selig Company, National Film Carriers and others.

Sam H. Borisky of Chattanooga is general chairman of the convention, with Mrs. Fay Ellis of Atlanta as chairman of entertainment. N. H. Waters of Birmingham is chairman of finance and program, assisted by A. Jules Benedic of Atlanta.

Other Exhibitor Units Active

Akron theatre owners formed the Independent Theatre Owners Association, succeeding a dormant unit, and elected Robert Menches of the Liberty as president; Willard Hart, vice-president; J. G. Deetjen, secretary, and A. P. Botzum, treasurer.

In Atlanta, Ike Katz, president of the Georgia-Florida-Tennessee-Alabama Independent Theatres' Association, an affiliate of Allied, called the spring convention for May 20 and 21, at the Robert Fulton hotel, Atlanta.

Leaders in Indianapolis of the Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, at a special board meeting, elected Roy R. Bair president, to succeed Earl Cunningham, who left exhibition to become manager of the Judell Film Exchange at Milwaukee. Frank Sanders was elected to the board.

Morris Wax in Philadelphia succeeded B. M. Golder as president of the Independent Exhibitors Protective Association.

In Richmond, Va., a resolution opposing the use in schools and colleges of film equipment and motion pictures, except non-theatrical films, was approved at a meeting of the board of governors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Virginia. The state convention will be at Roanoke, June 16 and 17, at the Patrick Henry hotel. Hunter Perry was chosen convention chairman.

"THE SCOUNDREL" is that kind of picture!...Here's Why:

Playing its world premiere at the Radio City Music Hall, "THE SCOUNDREL" brought forth an avalanche of critical huzzahs seldom accorded any but the greatest of films . . . truly an event in cosmopolitan New York, where only the startling, the unusual, and the bizarre create excited word-of-mouth!

New York Film Critics Give Reams of Space in Praise of "THE SCOUNDREL"

N. Y. AMERICAN — Regina Crewe
"There were cheers . . . Tale is told with vital forcefulness and vivid imagery. The lines are brilliant. There is lots to laugh about. There is romance to appeal to young love, and the play is drenched with drama . . . Superbly interpreted."

N. Y. TIMES — Andre Sennwald
"Enormously entertaining, witty and bizarre. Contains the most dazzling writing ever heard on the screen . . . A distinctly exhilarating event in the cinema . . Mr. Coward is perfectly attuned to the part. The other players are thoughtfully repressed in the mood of the film. Filmgoers who fail to see 'The Scoundrel' are likely to be frozen out of the after-dinner conversation for the next two weeks."

N. Y. TRIBUNE — Howard Barnes
"Illumined by shrewd touches of violence and decorated by as bitter and incisive dialogue as has accompanied a motion picture in a long time . . . The work is fashioned compellingly and unforgettably . . . Mr. Coward's portrayal is one of the finest acting achievements of the season. 'The Scoundrel' is generous with splendid characterizations. Mr. Garmes has outdone himself in his sensitive and beautiful photography."

DAILY NEWS — Kate Cameron
"A film play that is astonishing the patrons of the Music Hall . . . penetratingly and diabolically satirical."

N. Y. DAILY MIRROR — Bland Johaneson
"A stunning psychological drama. Noel Coward gives an exquisitely polished performance. A sheer break for the mature, thoughtful and literate audience . . . Brilliantly written."

BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE — Martin Dickstein
"Undoubtedly one of the season's superior films . . . A climax which is built with the unerring sureness of expert playwriting . . a photoplay far off the beaten path, proving that the motion picture is capable of an occasionally great achievement."

N. Y. SUN — Eileen Creelman
"Builds to an end as emotional, as mystic and as forceful as any motion pictures have yet offered us. Its dialogue probably the best that has reached the screen . . . This is a picture that gets under the skin . . . offering an experience rare in motion pictures. A picture no grown-up person can afford to miss."

WORLD TELEGRAM — William Boehnel
"Enjoyed every moment of it. A brilliant blending of tart humor at its cruellest and wittiest, and fantasy at its most imaginative and sensitive peak. Beautifully written and characterized . . . taut with theatrical suspense and piled high with pity and understanding. Noel Coward is superfine. All the others help to make this a film of distinction."

NEW YORK POST — Irene Thirer
"A rare and dextrous drama. Film fans who appreciate the original and unusual will certainly realize the worth of this production. In the highest degree we recommend it."

THE NEW YORKER — J. C. M.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

HERBERT M. WOOLF, well known Kansas City sportsman, merchant and former partner of the Midland theatre circuit, has been impersonated a number of times by a variety of people, but confesses that a recent Hollywood experience beats all.

Friends on the California coast have advised Mr. Woolf that a quiet party at the home of attractive Jean Harlow was interrupted one night recently by a ring of the doorbell by a man carrying a suitcase who impressed the butler with the urgency of his seeing Miss Harlow. The unbidden guest announced himself as "Herbert M. Woolf from Kansas City."

Puzzled by the unexpected visit, but knowing Mr. Woolf for some years, Miss Harlow asked that he be shown in. The man greeted her with "Hello, Jean, dear, well everything is all set. Let's get married." Recognizing the man as an imposter, Miss Harlow protested, but the stranger insisted he was none other than Mr. Woolf, the big financier from Kansas City, and his insistence grew as he demanded that Miss Harlow accompany him forthwith to be married. By that time, Miss Harlow was beside herself with fright, and, excusing herself, went into another room and called the police. The gent was apprehended and is now in the Los Angeles county booby hatch.

It's an ill wind, etc.: Burton Davis, who writes under the nom de plume of Laurence Saunders, got exceedingly well blizzard bound far in the Connecticut hills at his country place, Copper Head in Weston, in the big storm of 1934. Not being able to do anything else about it he built a big log fire and wrote a serial, "Snowed Under," which is now to appear in Liberty, in a Warner picture version, and on the stage of a summer theatre in Westport. And Mr. Davis comes from way deep in Texas where they do not like snowstorms.

When the natives of Hamilton, Ohio, arrived downtown the other morning following a period of heavy and continuous rain, they were startled to find what was apparently a telegraphic news bulletin posted conspicuously, headed in large letters: MISSISSIPPI IS OVERFLOWING. Closer inspection, however, revealed the rest of the story, in small letters, which said, in part: "with romance, music and comedy."

It was Bill Yeakle's idea of advertising Paramount's "Mississippi."

Black eyes may come and black eyes may go but there'll probably never be an explanation for another shiner just like this one, passed on by Read Kendall, from Los Angeles.

While strolling along the beach at Malibu enjoying the sunshine on a day's rest from the studio, Margot Grahame suddenly became aware that she was being followed by one of the opposite sex. The man kept making little cutting remarks at her as they walked along.

She didn't turn around, thinking that by completely ignoring him, she would discourage his attentions. But he kept right at her heels and continued his flirtatious chatter.

Tempered to the boiling point Margot stopped of a sudden and let go with her right. Her fist landed flush on the annoyer's left eye.

And that is the explanation for Francis Lister's discolored orb. Furthermore, Francis Lister is none other than Margot Grahame's husband, and he was merely out for a lark to tease her.

That's their story—and they're sticking to it.

"DEAR JIM," pens good ol' Sophie Tucker, "I am organizing the 'Life Begins at 40' Club to keep alive the spirit of achievement, tolerance and understanding, and the joy of living that every 40-year-old possesses, and to let the youngsters know that they have much to look forward to when they reach 40. This is the day of the 40's, rather than the 20's, and why should it not be glorified?

"Membership in the 'Life Begins at 40' Club will be international. Qualifications: Men and women are eligible if they are 40 and over, and if they have achieved some part of their heart's desire when they reached 40.

"Chapters are being formed in all the cities throughout the world in which I have appeared or where I am known.

"It would please me so much if I could add your name to our Advisory Council, but I'm afraid that the age limit may prevent you from joining. We shall be delighted to have you become a member, however, when the 40's do come rolling around. With best wishes."

Well, best wishes to you, Soph, and a hey-nonny-nonny and a hot-cha-cha. But, we're afraid that if we tried to doctor our birth certificate we'd be discovered and we would lose our standing as an Eagle in the Boy Scouts of America.

GENTLEMEN:

Although not married recently, I thought it would be so nice to have a gift from each New York film corporation with whom we do business.

SEVEN THOUSAND GUNS in cabinets and on pegs fastened to the walls of his little office; but in all the years he has been accumulating them he has never fired a shot.

Their histories, dating back to the 15th Century with some, and the gay, gallant days of the French court with many others, are lost or forgotten.

Some are inlaid with gold, silver and ivory; others are carved with infinite skill by some long dead craftsmen. But they're just so many commodities to J. S. Stembridge, who has charge of the arms collection at Paramount's studios in Hollywood.

Arms are his business, Mr. Stembridge says. A gun is a gun and that's that. Their romance, the glamor that comes of age and the fact that they were once used to defend kings and queens and courtiers does not appeal to him. He views them with the eye of a motion picture studio property man.

Mr. Stembridge has agents in every part of the world on the watch for additions to the collection. Unusual guns, antique ones, handed down from father to son over and over. Frequently they have a colorful history, but finally circumstances prevail and the weapon that grandfather fought a duel with or the old rifle that was used in the Civil War passes into the hands of the collector, and its history passes into oblivion.

Mr. Stembridge recently bought a magnificent pair of antique guns from a London collector in whose family they had been for 250 years.

Originally made in Germany in the early Sixteenth Century, they are ranked among the finest examples of the early armorer's craft in existence. One is a wheel-lock and the other a matchlock. Weighing nearly 20 pounds apiece, they are magnificently inlaid with ivory and are engraved with hunting and pastoral scenes.

A whole wall-sized cabinet is devoted to nothing but parts of dueling pistols, each with all the accessories that the old gunmaker used to furnish to the bewigged gallants of the day.

Another side of the gun-room is devoted to modern firearms, ranging from a tiny .22 caliber "garter" pistol, designed for milady to carry in a dainty holster attached to her garter, to the heavy-calibered six-shooters used by the Tom Mixes in quick-shootin' westerns.

There is a collection of machine guns of sufficient number to equip a whole army battalion. These are stored in a steel vault, under federal supervision, the weapons ranging from deadly "Tommy" guns to heavy Browning and Lewis guns for international warfare.

A special federal permit is necessary to harbor the machine guns, and they are very closely guarded.

And with all this variety of pistols, rifles and shotguns, Mr. Stembridge has never fired a shot from any of them. He dislikes hunting. He can take very one of the 7,000 guns apart in the dark, repair them and put them together, but he refuses to permit a cartridge in the building.

In Metro's "Society Doctor," Taylor operates on Chester Morris, who, in the picture, has mirrors arranged so he can watch Taylor perform.

OTTERSON, KENT TESTIFY IN MONOPOLY ACTION

Defense Testimony Continued Pending Court Decision on Motion for Dismissing Suit

John E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, Inc., and Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, were the principal witnesses this week for the defendants, Erpi, Western Electric Company and American Telephone and Telegraph Company in the anti-trust action brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio Corporation in United States district court at Wilmington, Del.

Mr. Otterson, who took the stand on Monday, denied knowing of any instance where the defendants ever protested distribution by Erpi recording licensees of productions to theatres with non-Erpi equipment or of any instance where the defendants prevented or attempted to prevent distribution to theatres not equipped with Erpi sound. He said the defendants did not object to licensees who produced on non-Erpi equipment.

Questioned by chief counsel for the defense George F. Hurd, in regard to previous statements made by Max A. Schlesinger, president of General Talking Pictures, Mr. Otterson denied that in his talk with Schlesinger he told him (Schlesinger) he would have to take the equipment of the defendants exclusively if he desired to obtain pictures of any of Erpi's recording licensees.

In regard to other testimony by Mr. Schlesinger, Mr. Otterson denied he told Mr. Schlesinger to "bide his time," in a deal with Adolph Zukor and Carl Laemmle and said he never once asked Mr. Schlesinger to cease making deals for DeForest equipment. He said he talked with William Fox and Cortlandt Smith and that Mr. Fox asked him (Otterson) if he was interested in DeForest patents or the business under the patents, but he said he was not interested because Erpi had all the patents required. He denied advising Mr. Fox in regard to the DeForest deal in which Mr. Fox dropped negotiations with a DeForest option after depositing $100,000 for the purchase of DeForest stock.

Denies DeForest Plot

Mr. Otterson denied he told Mr. Schlesinger to stay out of the business he proposed to transact in connection with GTP, the business of successor to DeForest Phonofilm Company and denied he was behind a plot to force DeForest out of the business. He said he never had conversation with Keyes Winter, then district attorney or attorney general, who, Mr. Schlesinger had previously testified, told him of a conversation between Mr. Otterson and Mr. Winter in regard to the DeForest incident.

Mr. Otterson said that he had refused to install Erpi equipment in Mr. Schlesinger's theatres in South Africa because the order was not big enough for Erpi to send men that distance. He denied he told Mr. Schlesinger that he would have to take the engineers to South Africa to install Erpi sound, at his expense and that Erpi would later organize there, forming a company and instituting service charges, or charge $15,000 or $20,000 to install equipment.

Mr. Otterson told of his discussions with Joseph Schenck, president of United Artists; David Bernstein, treasurer of Loew's; Robert Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, and Adolph Zukor, president of Paramount, his objective being to interest producers in talking films, in addition to which he wanted to strengthen the Warner facilities financially. His idea was to form a corporation owned jointly by all the producers to buy out Vitaphone. He said some of them did not want to enter partnership with competitors and withdrew.

Mr. Otterson said A. T. & T. had a cross-licensing agreement with RCA, General Electric and Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing, the defendants' greatest competitors, for certain patents so that both would be in a position to furnish broader licenses under the combined patents. He also went into the early cost of reproducing equipment and service charges of the defendants and declared that the servicing charges at the time were "very large."

In discussing the early history of sound, Mr. Otterson told of the resistance of producers and exhibitors to talking films. He said producers resisted because of the revolutionary change.

Mr. Kent testified that he carried on an agreement for Mr. Fox with Mr. Zukor, Harry Warner and Waddell Catchings of Goldman Sachs for a combined deal to buy out Vitaphone, but the deal fell through because they couldn't agree on price.

A producers' committee was formed shortly afterwards, he said, to secure an equipment company to manufacture equipment and one with big enough resources to take care of any patent litigation. He said the capacity of an equipment company to manufacture on a large scale was vital and the committee spent considerable time trying to get from Erpi a stipulated number of equipments in a certain time. His committee, he said, investigated DeForest, RCA and General Electric and was besieged by various manufacturers of equipment.

The deal for an equipment company finally fell through, he said, because the producers wanted direct license and not sub-license and wanted to do their own recording after the equipment was installed. Erpi was to handle all recording for the producers, Mr. Kent said.

Mr. Kent also pointed out that at the time the producers' committee was looking for an equipment company, Paramount had $18,000,000 tied up in silent pictures and had spent $4,000,000 to put in sound.

Engineers Testify

Four Erpi electrical engineers opened the case for the defense after a motion for dismissal of the action was presented by Mr. Hurd. They were George E. Mather, of Richfield, N. J.; Halsey E. Frederick, of Mountain Lakes, N. J.; David G. Blatner, of Mountain Lakes, and Allan McLean, of Maplewood, N. J. They told of the operation of the sound equipment and the problems relative to the equipment of the defendants. The court reserved decision on the motion for dismissal.

Technicolor Plants For London, Paris

Technicolor will establish two European plants, in London and Paris, this summer, Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus said in New York this week on his arrival from Hollywood.

Dr. Kalmus, who was accompanied by his wife, Natalie Kalmus, would not reveal the identity of French interests which are obtaining rights to the Technicolor patents, but he indicated that Sir Adrian Baillie, Bombay producer who represents British capital, has connections with major British producers which will assure wide use of Technicolor facilities in England. Dr. Kalmus had conferred in Hollywood with Sir Adrian, who arrived in London this week from New York.

Technicolor, Dr. Kalmus said, will retain control of the foreign resources, "to the extent of assuring world wide consistency of all factors considered fundamental, such as patents, quality and prices." Although he plans to leave New York for London, May 29, his departure may be delayed, he said.

"English film companies have been desirous of making use of natural color and are now ready for the Technicolor process after experimenting with other methods which were found not up to the standard set by perfected Technicolor," Dr. Kalmus said.

Dr. Kalmus said that while some progress in color film has been made in England, France and Germany, none of the processes developed abroad measures up to the proven process as exemplified in a number of films produced in America with Technicolor in the past year.

The forthcoming season, he said, will see tints extensively supplanting black-and-white, following the appearance of Pioneer's "Becky Sharp," which is being released by RKO.

"All studios are waiting to see that picture," he said. 'It is the first feature-length film to be made with the three-compound color process.

"Everyone in Hollywood is seeking new production values and color is an answer to their problem. Color is fundamental in description, and plain black-and-white, like a meaningless description, does not fill the bill."

KAO Officers Are Reelected

Lambert, vice-president and general counsel; Leon Goldberg, vice-president and treasurer; A. E. Reoch, vice-president in charge of real estate; Nate Blumberg, vice-president in charge of theatre operations, and O. R. MacMahon, comptroller.

Each of the four series, starting January 1, will also have feature versions.

Production starts next week when "Forbidden Heaven," with Charles Farrell and Charlotte Henry, will be launched, and when Paul Malvern takes a unit to Utah to make "Westward Ho." "Two Black Sheep" and "My Old Kentucky Home" also will get underway in May.

Mr. Johnston, returning to New York Tuesday, announced that regional sales meetings had been set for the last week of May, in Salt Lake, Cincinnati and New York, with Edward A. Golden, general sales manager, presiding. Some 135 salesmen and managers will take to the field following the meetings.

At Kansas City, en route, Mr. Johnson let it be known that the company's original plans for the handling of Republic exclusively by the affiliated exchanges had been slightly changed to permit of the sale of other companies' short subjects.

With the closing by Mr. Johnston of a contract with Midwest Film Distributors, for the territories of Kansas City, Omaha and Des Moines, distribution plans for the entire country were completed.

MGM Gained 20%; To Raise Budget

Felix Feist, MGM general sales manager, concluded a week of sales conventioning last Saturday at Kansas City, where, after a three-day meeting at Detroit, he explained to delegates that the company's revenue had increased 20 per cent in 1935-36, crediting much of it to Government spending.

"The moment the Government starts spending money in a community attendance jumps," he explained. "The grocery clerk begins taking his girl to the movies again and the landlord's children start trooping to the shows on 'family night.'"

Mr. Feist observed that theatre attendance in the United States has increased 20 per cent as a whole, and while the radio deprives motion pictures of about 5 per cent of its business, this percentage is steadily diminishing, because "there is a place for both types of entertainment."

One factor, said Mr. Feist, is the recent willingness of educational forces to cooperate with theatres.

"There are 8,000,000 or 9,000,000 people going to the movies daily in this country," he continued. "The motion picture industry, by the costly method of trial and error, has found out what 60,000,000 people wanted to see every week.

"There were from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 who never went to the movies. We weren't making what they wanted, but when we occasionally did make what they wanted, they still didn't go. We were willing to risk a few original investments, but when you consider MGM gambles as much as $1,000,000 on a film, you will understand that no company could go on sinking such sums forever in the hope of luring these coy theatregoers to the box office.

"Previously educational groups had clamored for better pictures and had ignored them. The recent agitation for more wholesome pictures made these groups militant. We had to take the plunge and gamble on an overwhelmingly expensive picture. That picture was 'David Copperfield,' but when we had made it, they broke their tradition and cooperated.

"'David Copperfield' was a success, financially, because the educational groups got the absent 10,000,000 into the theatres. After they got there, they liked it. I believe the first evidence of such cooperation was with 'Little Women' (RKO). If it continues we certainly will continue to make such pictures."

Mr. Feist said considerable confusion has resulted from the tendency to insist that "the public wants" a certain type of picture. Ten millions want "David Copperfield" and nothing else, he explained. Perhaps 30,000,000 more want "David Copperfield" only occasionally. Thirty millions more want something entirely different.

Mr. Feist sees no decline in the star system.

"The unit of the amusement business is a week," he said, "and in that time word-of-mouth is not sufficient to build up a show's reputation."

More Flexible Sales Policy

Mr. Feist said he regarded giveaways, double featuring and low admissions as depression measures which exhibitors will discard once theatre attendance returns to a satisfying point. "Dime theatres" will not be sold.

Asserting that Metro's sales policy will be more flexible, he told the convention that the policy, especially as to preferred playing time, will provide that each situation be sold individually according to local conditions.

The budget on 1935-36 specials will be considerably increased.

Commenting on Loew's invasion of the Chicago theatre field, Mr. Feist said the booking combine which brought about the Loew building program there was best described as an organized conspiracy of exhibitors against Metro.

Howard Dietz, advertising-publicity director, declared $1,500,000 will be spent on outdoor and magazine advertising. Fifty magazines will be used. Mr. Dietz left after the convention for the coast.

Si Seadler, advertising manager, lauded Mr. Feist at the convention banquet for his ten years with Metro as sales director.

Announcement was made that "star" productions would be increased from 22 to 27.

William R. Ferguson explained exploitation plans and some of the outdoor and billboard campaigns to be used.

The feature lineup will be increased further to 51, it was heard around convention headquarters, with a radio musical embracing the new talent program idea being used both at theatres and radio stations, and probably tied in with Loew's Station WHN, New York, and elsewhere, directly with Metro theatre accounts.

It was denied that Hal Roach would assume charge of all of Metro's short subject production. Fred Quimby, short subject sales manager, told the delegates 47 one-reelers would be produced for 1935-36, and not 37. There will be eight more one-reels next season than this.

Mr. Roach declared that, anticipating a strong demand for good shorts despite double billing MGM is going to increase its short subject production budget by 35 per cent.

In addition, the Roach company will make at least one feature, besides the previously announced Laurel and Hardy feaures.

"Lucky Beginners" was determined upon as the title for a two-reeler to be made in association with the New York Daily Mirror. It will tie-in with talent programs broadcast by radio stations and with theatres.

The convention received a wire asking for a less stringent sales policy, and signed by some 50 members of the Independent Theatre Owners Association, New York.

Arthur Loew, vice-president, conferred with foreign representatives.

Robert Benchley was added to the Metro program, Hal Roach re-signed Charley Chase for eight more comedies, and "Camille" was announced as the second Greta Garbo production.

Other Companies' Activities

Besides the product and sales activities of Republic and MGM, were those of 13 other producers, as follows:

MARCUS SEES VICTORY FOR OPEN CASTING LIST
TWO FILMS COMPLETED BUT 19 ARE IN WORK
ACADEMY NAMES COMMITTEE ON TELEVISION
FOX PICKS EXECUTIVES TO DEAL WITH AGENTS

EUGENE H. MARCUS, attorney, representing several organizations of extras, apparently has won his fight to have Central Casting lists thrown open to all. Marcus recently spent several weeks in Washington conferring with Sol A. Rosenblatt, NRA compliance director. Upon his return here, Mr. Marcus declared that while Rosenblatt does not approve the closed lists personally, he did not like to override the standing committee. However, Mr. Rosenblatt is said to have asked the committee to submit a recall list voluntarily.

This list, on which are the names of extras inactive the last ten months, has been submitted, and the names on it have been withdrawn. Though the group comprised only about fifty names, it is believed a start has been made, and that soon Mr. Marcus will have won every point.

The working of closed lists is particularly significant when it comes to choosing ensembles for big musical productions. Until Bobby Connelly picked his girls for "Flirtation Walk," it had been the custom for studios to call Central Casting and have them send over girls to be interviewed. Mr. Connelly was very much surprised when he found that but 50 girls were on hand. Accustomed to working in New York musicals where hundreds of girls respond to a chorus call, he declared he could not pick an ensemble of 35 from a group of 50, and said, "I want to see every girl in Hollywood who wants a job." It was explained that girls sent by Central Casting were paid their carfare for the interview, and that it would be impossible to pay the fares of more than 50. Mr. Connelly contended this was a minor detail, and said that every one interested in working would be glad to come to the studio at her own expense. That he was right, was proved when nearly 500 showed up for his next interview, which was open to every one.

In "Flirtation Walk," many new faces are seen in the ensembles. Many in Hollywood believe this is an innovation, bringing in new folk and spreading the work.

Two Completed, 19 in Work

Only two pictures were completed in the past week, but nine went before the cameras. These, plus the 10 started last week, lift production programs to the general weekly average of nine pictures.

The more important of the completed features is Radio's "She." Adapted from Sir Rider Haggard's fantastic novel, it features Helen Gahagan, stage star, with Randolph Scott, Helen Mack, Nigel Bruce, Noble Johnson, Gustav Von Seyffertitz, Samuel Hinds and Lumsden Hare. Irving Pichel directed.

Chesterfield's "The Girl Who Came Back," also completed, presents Shirley Grey, Sidney Blackmer, Noel Madison, Ida Darling, Matthew Betz, Torben Meyer, Maude Truax, Robert Adair and Frank LaRue. Charles Lamont directed.

Of the nine new pictures two are credited to MGM. First to go, "Mad Love," a shocker, marks the American screen debut of Peter Lorre, remembered for his appearance in "M." Karl Freund is directing.

Also in work is "Calm Yourself," with George B. Seitz directing. Robert Young, Betty Furness, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, and Ralph Morgan are in the cast.

Warner started "Broadway Joe," a comedy with music and dancing, starring Joe E. Brown, with Busby Berkeley directing.

Radio started work on "The Return of Peter Grimm," with Lionel Barrymore, Helen Mack, James Bush, Donald Meek, George Breakston, Constance Purdy and Allen Vincent. George Nichols, Jr., is directing.

At Universal "Sing Me a Love Song" has Ricardo Cortez featured. Stuart Walker is directing.

Atherton Pictures started "Hard Rock Harrigan," starring George O'Brien, with Dave Howard directing.

Berke Productions began "Social Error," featuring David Sharp, Harry Frazer directing.

"Ladies Love Excitement," a Mascot, teams Preston Foster and Evalyn Knapp in the leads. Nick Grinde is director.

"Reckless Roads," Majestic, has Judith Allen, Lloyd Hughes, Ben Alexander and Regis Toomey. Bert Lynwood is directing.

DOG KEEPS HOME BY ODD DECISION

Under a unique court decision in Los Angeles this week, Kazan, valuable police dog which has appeared in numerous motion pictures, will be permitted to stay with his master, Jack King. Bankruptcy Referee Earl Moss approved an offer by which creditors of Mr. King agree to permit the dog to stay with its owner, the creditors to take 25 per cent of the dog's earnings until 35 per cent of their claims are satisfied. Creditors threatened to take the animal to satisfy claims aggregating $14,000. Mr. King protested vigorously, claiming the dog would not act for anyone else. He had testified previously that the dog might die of grief if separated from him.

Clarence Geldert Dead

Clarence Geldert, veteran actor of the silent and talking motion picture, died this week as a result of a heart attack while on horseback during the filming of a western. He was 67 years old. He was born in St. John, B. C., Canada, and served with the Royal Northwest Mounted Police before coming to the United States.

He entered motion pictures in 1915 with D. W. Griffith after several years on the stage. His pictures included "Joan the Woman," "Woman of Paris," "Dress Parade," "Cuban Love Song," "Daddy Longlegs," "Jungle Bride," "Man Trailer" and others.

Cullman to Ask RFC For Loan for Roxy Theatre

Federal Judge Francis Caffey on Wednesday signed an order, applied for by bond and note holders of the New York Roxy theatre, instructing Howard S. Cullman, as trustee, to apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for a first mortgage loan as the first step in reorganization. Plans must await an RFC decision.

Hearing of testimony in the Chicago Title & Trust Company action against William Fox over alleged defaults in guaranteed redemption of Roxy Theatre stock amounting to $1,000,000 was assigned to Sol M. Stroock, as referee, when the case was called for trial in New York supreme court on Monday.

The Texas Rambler

(Spectrum Pictures)

Western

This is active western material, with its full quota of hard riding, quick shooting and fighting. The usual romantic angle, though subordinated, is present. Bill Cody is the star, supported by several old timers in western pictures.

Sold as straight western material, making the most of whatever popularity the star enjoys in the particular community, the film should prove acceptable to western fans when offered in the weekend position on the schedule.

Cody, as the Texas Rambler, rescues Catherine Cotter, bound, with her dude attorney, by stage to take over the ranch left by her uncle, supposedly murdered shortly before. The ranch is to go to her and to Tom Manning, who has disappeared. The dude attorney makes a deal with Carson, neighboring rancher, whereby he will seek to persuade Miss Cotter to sell the ranch to Carson in return for a sum of money. Also a fake holdup in which the attorney is the hero is designed to further his suit for the hand of Miss Cotter.

Carson double-crosses the attorney and he, Miss Cotter and the old friend and lawyer of the murdered uncle are held captive by Carson's men. Cody, meanwhile, acting at the behest of a mysterious character whom he hears but does not see in the mountains has joined Carson's gang, and now goes into action again. He rescues the imprisoned group, and assists in their capture when the sheriff is brought by Carson's girl, vengeful when he pays too much attention to Miss Cotter. It is discovered that Carson had been the attacker of her uncle, and suddenly the supposedly murdered man appears. The developments were a scheme of his own, first to test the Rambler, who actually is Manning, the missing heir, and to show up the dude attorney to Miss Cotter, and second to trap Carson into an admission that he had meant to kill the uncle and steal his mine and ranch. Cody and Miss Cotter conclude the film in the expected manner—AARONSON, New York.

Produced and distributed by Spectrum Pictures. Supervised by Ray Kirkwood. Directed by Robert Hill. Story by Oliver Drake. Cameraman, William Hyers. Release date, May 15, 1935. Running time, 59 minutes. General audience classification.

Oil for the Lamps of China

(Warner-Cosmopolitan)

Dramatic Romance

This picture should prove both a good exploitation feature and a fine all-audience attraction. On the exploitation side, it is adapted from a novel that made a profound impression. The cast includes a number of outstanding screen names. There should be commercial value in the title. It is photographed against strange, unfamiliar and sometimes awesome backgrounds. The story, dramatically realistic yet human and sympathy-inspiring, strikes a different method of arousing natural emotions.

From the entertainment viewpoint, it is dramatic romance with a heart punch. Basically it is a story of a great loyalty and a great love. Sometimes blending beautifully, sometimes erupting into seething conflict as loyalty to an ideal seems to take precedence over domestic hopes and dreams, it results in entertainment that is grimly real in its love interest, drama, tragedy and emotional appeal.

With the ideal that "the company always takes care of its men," indelibly impressed upon his mind, it is the story of Stephen Chase, his wife, Hester, and the Atlantis Oil Company. The interior of China is its major locale, where, following a strange courtship, Chase takes the woman he had never seen until the day he married her. One by one, incidents that would shatter the faith of the ordinary man, belying the truth of the company's slogan, only serve to strengthen Stephen's loyalty. He sees his Number 1 Boss commit suicide when the company breaks faith, and his best friend left in the breadline when the company forgets. His invention, that made millions for the company, is credited to another man. Preserving the company's property, his baby dies at birth. A barrier arises between husband and wife that only stark loneliness crumbles. Winning new contracts for the company, he is forced to discharge a good friend, Don, whose child Hester had saved from cholera. Saving the company's money at the risk of his life, during a Communist uprising, and promised great rewards, he is relegated to a minor clerkship as political intrigue within the company makes it forget its noble promise.

It is his wife, Hester, who makes the company remember; the woman whose faith and trust in her husband's idealism and loyalty win him the job as the company's president, giving reality to the slogan, "the company always takes care of its men."

This is one big picture which, in every phase, demands the best showmanship. The idea and locale of the story are suggestive of the character of interest-arresting showmanship that should be applied. Selling that informs patrons that this picture has the convincing quality that makes them believe they are actually living with its characters, experiencing all that they experience, should be sufficient to create a lively curiosity in the picture.—MCCARTHY, Hollywood.

Les As Du Turf

(Paramount)

Comedy

From the French studios of Paramount has come this comedy of the race track, a pair of inveterate hangers-on and their adventures on and about the track. It is lively and rather entertaining material, but appears to be adaptable only to the audience with a knowledge of the French language, as all dialogue is in French. The film lacks superimposed subtitles or captions which might assist patrons not familiar with the language.

In view of the fact, also, that the greater part of the comedy lies in the dialogue rather than the action, a knowledge of the language is practically a prerequisite to enjoyment of the film. Obviously, then, only those theatres located in large centers—which may count upon a number of French-speaking patrons may expect to attract an audience. For them the film contains considerable amusement.

The two comedians, the Flower and the Butterfly, one short and slim, the other extremely corpulent, win several hundred francs, and, hearing the result of the race in a cafe, treat every one to drinks and cigars. At the same time, they meet and are drawn to two attractive girls. When the bookmaker fails to appear, the cafe owner makes them work to pay for the refreshments. Then the bookmaker arrives, they force him to pay, and arrange to meet the two girls at the track next day. Through an error, one of them buys a ticket for 500 francs. They win a large sum, but through the stupidity of one of them they find themselves in possession of a race horse, bought at auction.

The bookmaker, with the assistance of the cafe owner, successfully steals the horse when the pair are locked in the wine cellar. They break out, trace the horse and find the two are attempting to steal their girls as well. They rout the conspirators and arrive at the track next day to find the bookmaker trying to collect for the victory of their horse. They see the pair off to jail, sell the horse for a large amount and marry the girls.—AARONSON, New York.

Murder in the Fleet

(MGM)

Mystery

Showmen are given a lot with which to work in exploiting this picture. Just a glance at the title tells what the picture is—mystery, thrill, action, danger, adventure, suspense, heroism, villainy—all theatrically dramatic and all happening aboard a battle cruiser. Along with those elements, there are two kinds of romance, real love stuff and the other variety; additionally there is a surprising amount of comedy, much of which, because it is so unexpected, gives the picture a hokum twist that at times alters the complexion completely. Supplementing these straightaway entertainment qualities and a spirited spectacular background, there are several better than ordinary cast names and a story telling technique that gives the production constant attention-holding color.

While the picture is dramatic mystery and thrill, plus comedy, it eschews horror. Though much that is hair-raising is developed, there is no resort to blood chilling melodramatics.

The plot capitalizes the topicalness of the spy menace as it affects the cruiser Carolina, one of the Navy's prize battle wagons. Much has gone wrong with a secret new fire control system that is to be installed. Romance between Lieutenant Randolph and Betty Lansing is introduced to go temporarily on the rocks as it runs into a line of duty versus human desire conflict. It is counterparted by a comedy love affair involving Petty Officer Burke, civilian freighthandler O'Neill, and Toots, every sailor's sweetheart. With the arrival of civilian engineers Carson and Duval, quickly followed by the Oriental consul and his secretary, and reporter Drake, just as the machinery is being loaded, the motivating drama and mystery get under way. Between accidents to the equipment, three or four killings and tamperings, suspicion is attached to almost everybody aboard the ship. Of course the Oriental consul and his secretary seem to be the most logical ones, but the solution is carefully held until the thrill-packed climax. Randolph, trapped in a powder magazine by the villain, who threatens to blow up the ship, battles with him. Orders are given to flood the magazine and it's a case of sacrificing two lives, one a hero, the other a menace, that hundreds may be saved.

As none of the ordinary elements that make for good entertainment has been ignored and as the preview audience's reaction indicated that it is full of the hoke quality that gets under the skin of the masses, adaptation of the values that the picture contains should bring the rank and file of patrons who get a thrill out of having their heroes heroic, action moving and comedy funny.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Black Sheep

(Fox)

Drama and Comedy

An international gambler, temporarily deserted by Lady Luck; a vivacious nervy lady who calls herself an actress regardless of critics' opinions; the wastrel scion of a proud Boston family; a vampish jewel thief and would-be smuggler; two middle aged playboy amateur card sharps from the prairies, a genial perpetual drunk, and a hawkshaw detective constitute the odd collection of personalities with which this picture deals.

Located aboard an ocean liner making the westward Atlantic passage, the story is a novel and attention holding expression of the "Grand Hotel" episode entertainment idea. Told in a manner that gets directly to the point of its many stories, precision and speed characterizing action and dialogue, it combines romance, drama, comedy, adventure, thrill and a vein of "believe it or not" human interest which showmanship can place before the masses.

All the characters are black sheep of one type or another, and the story is simply a portrayal of their experiences during the voyage. Wanting nothing other than to be let alone, gambler Dugan traveling second-class can't prevent actress Janette from wishing herself on him. An excursion into first-class quarters brings the pair into contact with young Curtis and the snooty Mrs. Millicent Bath, who has Curtis under her thumb and intends to make him the tool for sumggling her stolen pearls past the customs inspectors. By a queer quirk, after preventing the youth from hopping overboard, Dugan discovers the boy is his own son, but keeps his knowledge a sacred secret. However, gambler Dugan gives the would-be gamblers Belcher and Schmelling a sleigh ride for their dastardly tricking of Curtis, and together with Janette also hands Mrs. Bath a trimming. But ship's detective Mather catches up with Dugan and has the Captain confine him to his stateroom. Desirous of saving his son and teaching Mrs. Bath a further lesson, he lets himself out by pass key, gets into her room, steals the pearls and sets the stage for the comedy dramatic finale.

At New York, he slips the pearls into Belcher's pocket while the trick cane which Mrs. Bath has given Curtis is productive only of aspirin tablets when inspected. As he dashes away from it all, Belcher, Mrs. Bath and Schmelling are left to do some tall explaining as Janette permanently attaches herself to Dugan via a taxicab clinch.

The entertainment of this picture is its showmanship. In dialogue, action and production effects there are innumerable features that can be readily adapted to interest-creating exploitation. While not at all a big picture, it is one more than likely to benefit by word-of-mouth advertising, after getting in the greatest number possible to witness the first performances.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

The Flame Within

(MGM)

Romantic Drama

The theme of this picture will cause talk. Handled with the same degree of showmanship intelligence that marks its production, it should draw, especially among the women. The picture is serious drama, dealing with a serious romantic topic. Directed with taste and understanding, qualities which likewise are vividly noted in the acting, "The Flame Within" is a story of the happiness and heartaches of love, a story of the near tragedies when its course is not smooth. It concerns itself with modern persons who live modern lives.

The subject matter is daring and different, yet not dangerous, though the title might create the impression. As it tells a story that might happen, there is an atmosphere of reality that is human as well.

Mary White is a doctor specializing in treating the mentally ill. She is held in esteem and love by her co-worker, Doctor Phillips. To her comes Lillian Belton, madly in love with Jack Kerry. A high strung, fast gaited creature, Lillian pleads that Doctor White take Kerry in hand and straighten him out. She does so, but in the doing Kerry becomes infatuated with her, much to her discomfort, and Phillips'. Kerry, restored to normalcy, marries Lillian, takes her to England, where their lives are far from happy, though they have everything for which to live.

A year later the couple return to America. Kerry tries to resume his infatuation for Dr. White and it becomes known to Lillian, making her a mental wreck which Dr. White must take in hand, not only to prevent Lillian's self-destruction, but also to preserve the peace and happiness of herself, Phillips and Kerry. She succeeds there, too, and Lillian and Kerry are reunited under a mutual love, a union that convinces her she can find happiness with Phillips.

Not ordinary screen merchandise, the picture is the kind that cannot be successfully sold with ordinary showmanship methods. Its story content should be treated with dignity and sincerity, but in a manner that does not permit the regular patrons to get the impression that the picture is either too sophisticated or highbrow. For commercial purposes, the value of the names Ann Harding and Herbert Marshall are pretty well understood, but this picture does much for Maureen O'Sullivan and the newcomer, Louis Hayward. A campaign that combines the interest-creating qualities of these two factors aimed, as previously suggested, predominantly at women patrons, appears to be the line to follow.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

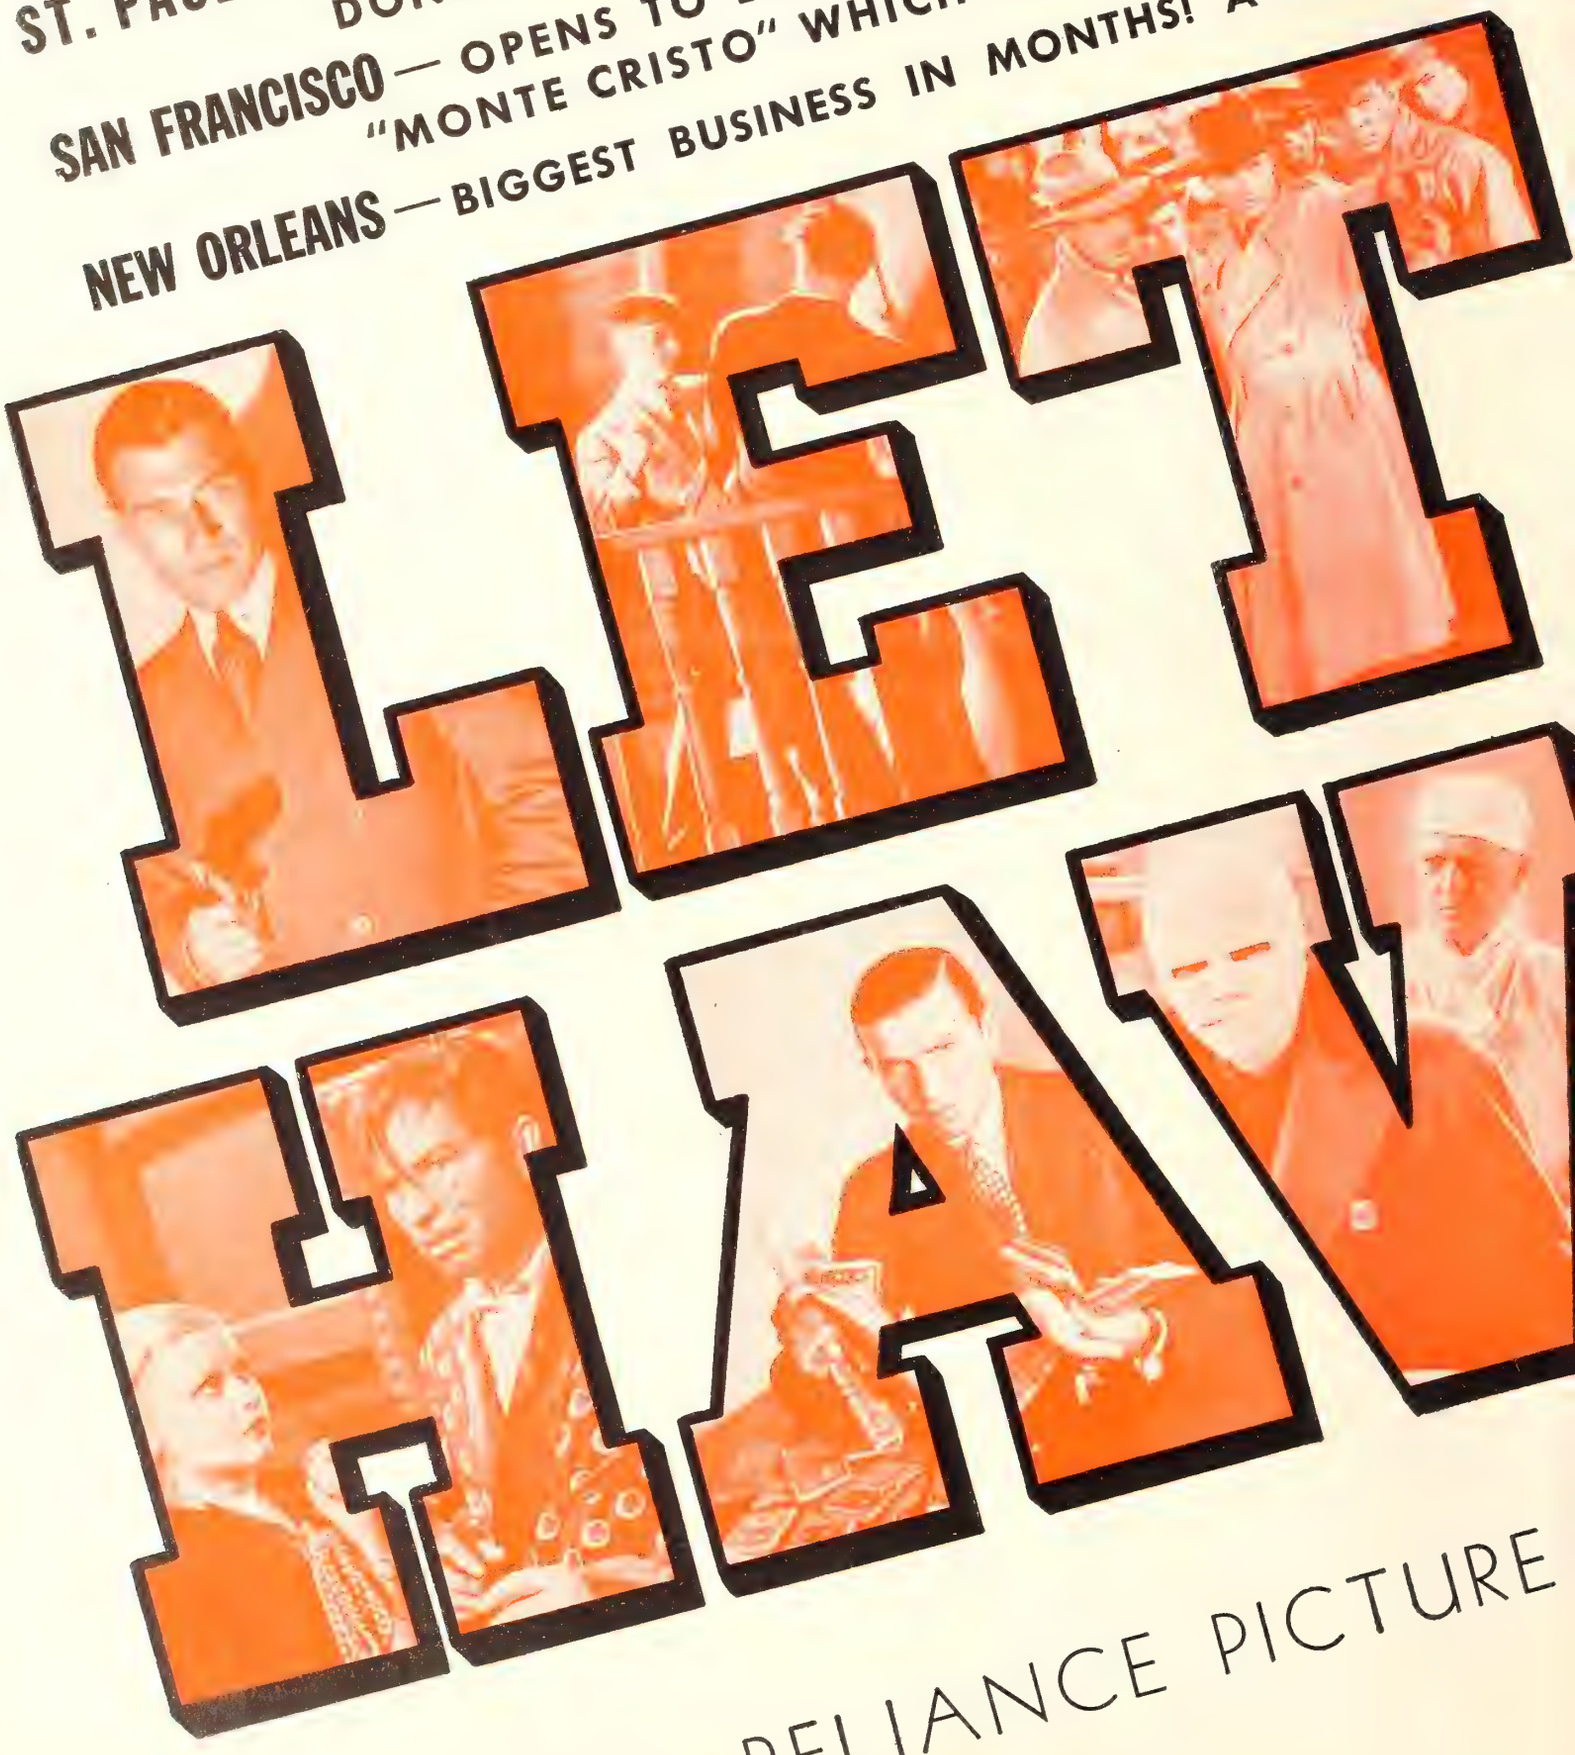
The Headline Woman

(Mascot)

Comedy Drama

Two stories are told in this comedy drama of newspaper men. The first is practically all comedy, as its main theme is embellished with a series of ludicrous incidents. The second is a melodrama-tinged romance which comes as a direct result of what previously has been built up. In the main it moves with dash and speed, with plenty that is new and novel. When it turns dramatic, it slows up a bit, as the hero reporter, in pursuing his romance, endeavors both to score a scoop and keep his lady love's name out of the headlines.



Though the picture starts off to the tune of a murder, there's plenty of fun in the first sequences. When Police Commissioner Desmond clamps down gag restrictions as a result of flaming news editorials, the press association boys, headed by Grayson, devise a plan to get police news despite Desmond's ruling. Picking on a flatfoot cop, Meyer, they make him via hectic publicity a big shot who advances from one grade to another in return for his tipping them off to what is happening.

Following a cleverly contrived situation in which the reporters, still headed by Grayson, enjoy a regal feast, Gambler Clarkey is murdered. In the excitement, as Meyer makes a raid, Grayson gets a hunch that Myrna, a girl to whom he previously has been romantically attached, knows something about the killing. Getting her out of the raid by a ruse, he hides her away from his pals and while trying to learn her identity and what she knows causes considerably more fun. The upshot of his association with the girl is his learning of where the killer is hiding out. Going there, he succeeds after a couple of exciting battles in subduing Zarias. Meanwhile, the girl, revealing herself as the daughter of the owner of the paper that has been loudest in opposition of Desmond, is in his office. As she pleads that something be done to rescue Grayson, he arrives in the office and after telling Desmond how inefficient his cops are, reveals that he has Zarias locked up down stairs. Grayson gets the reward everyone knows he will—Desmond's backing down, the girl and a big new job on her father's newspaper.

While not a picture likely to cause any great excitement, it does offer showmen who wish to demonstrate their ability plenty opportunity to create forceful exploitation campaigns. Principal name value being concentrated in Heather Angel, Pryor, LaRue, Sterling and Tearle, there are also several additional wellknown personalities in the cast.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Western

One of the John Wayne starring westerns, this should be found actively satisfying for the youngsters and the adults who like fast action material. Wayne has a following among devotees of westerns, and his name should mean something on the marquee, especially if the picture is played during the week end portion of the weekly program.

In support are Marion Burns, in the feminine role, and such old timers as Yakima Canutt and Earle Hodgins. The selling may well concentrate on the name of Wayne, with the indication to the patronage that here is a lively and fast moving western. The fact that the story is concerned in part with the movement of an old time traveling medicine show, with the usual "entertainers" and the bottles of "cure all," which contain alcohol for the most part, may open the way for ballyhoo which revolves about that showmanship method of an earlier day.

Wayne, a government agent, is assigned to track down a band of counterfeiters believed working near the Mexican border. His clew is the fact that a former counterfeiter, released after 10 years in prison, is running a medicine show. He learns that the man had gone to prison when his partner had turned state's evidence. He picks up the trail of the show, and saves them from the attack of a group of bandits. Hodgins is the boss, and the former convict, Miss Burns his daughter. Wayne joins the show and discovers when they reach a certain border town, that Canutt is anxious that Hodgins and his show leave town. When the gang finds intimidation ineffective, stolen jewelry is "planted" on Wayne in order to cause his arrest. He makes his escape, uncovers the fact that Hodgins is innocent and that Canutt is the man he is after, and goes to arrest him. Hodgins and Miss Burns have been captured by Canutt's men, and held captive in an abandoned mine tunnel. When Canutt escapes Wayne, he makes his way to the mine to kill Hodgins, the man he framed into a jail sentence years before. Wayne arrives just in time to save them and arrest Canutt, while the Mexican police take care of his gang.

Wayne and Miss Burns are about to conclude the picture on the romantic note, while Hodgins goes back to selling—and drinking—his "cure all."—Aaronson, New York.

Produced and distributed by Monogram. Produced by Paul Malvern. Directed by Carl Pierson. Story by Lindsley Parsons. Screen play by Lindsley Parsons and Robert Emmett. Edited by Gerald Roberts. Bulldog Jack

(Gaumont-British)

Farce-Comedy

The Bulldog Drummond formula is burlesqued here by Jack Hulbert, British light comedy star, with Fay Wray, in the feminine lead, providing an American value. "Sapper," the author of the original stories, has collaborated, and, in the final scenes especially, there is a very laughable travesty on the hairbreadth escapes and superhuman achievements associated with the authentic Bulldog.

Undoubtedly the highlights of the picture are in these scenes, set in the interior of the British Museum at midnight and in an underground crooks' resort which has been created out of a deserted subway station. From their headquarters the gang have tunneled into a room in the museum containing an idol which they plan to despoil of its jewels. There is real comedy value in episodes in which Hulbert, deputizing for Drummond, wages a boomerang battle with the thieves. In the end the thug leader goes crazy and with Hulbert, his ally and the girl, drives full speed through the deserted "tube" until he is overpowered and the train brought to a standstill a few inches from destruction. It is a first class climax with thrills and comedy nicely blended.

The story is that Bulldog Drummond, his brakes tampered with, is laid out as a result of colliding with a car driven by Jack Pennington, a man-about-town of an apparently brainless type. Drummond tells Pennington to take his place in tracking down a gang which is planning a big jewel raid. With the assistance of Drummond's fatuous aide, Algy, Pennington proceeds to make a complete mess of things. He helps the gang to kidnap an old jeweler who has sought protection in Drummond's flat, and later the old man's daughter also is kidnaped.

The girl is needed by the thieves because her father, asked to make a duplicate of the British museum jewels which the gang is after, has deliberately injured his hands and she is the only other person with the requisite skill. Under guard she is working on the idol in the deserted museum when Pennington's face appears in its mouth and he takes the jewels. Discovered, he lays all the thugs out with boomerangs snatched from a show cabinet and then knocks himself unconscious. Algy has managed to reach police headquarters and the underground resort is raided. The leader of the gang thereupon gets away with the train.

This should be sold as a burlesque. In its English form it opens slowly, but cutting will make it good entertainment on its stunt value and the fertility of ideas which Hulbert shows in the invention of incident.—Allan, London.

Produced and distributed by Gaumont-British. Directed by Walter Forde. Original screen play by J. O. C. Orton, Sydney Gilliat and Gerard Fairlie in collaboration with "Sapper." Basic idea and dialogue by Jack Hulbert. Art direction, Alfred Junge. Photography, H. Greenbaum. Sound, A. C. O'Donoghue. Running time, 70 minutes. "G."

The Red Village

(Amkino)

Drama

In this latest importation from the Soviet state, the Russian motion picture again goes back into the conflict between the old order and the new, the theme here centering about the difficulties encountered by the workers of the new in meeting the sabotage of unreconciled members of the old. The sum and substance of the entire film is that conflict, centering about a community the very god of which is the electrical plant. The village is located in the Ukraine, in west Russia, the time of the film between 1919 and 1921.

The picture, taken in a comparative sense, is hardly the equal, as a production, of several recent importations from the same source, and so has little to recommend it to the general screen audience from the standpoint of unusual or striking production value. It is, of course, spoken entirely in the Russian language, although the frequent use of superimposed subtitle translations makes for ready understanding of the story. The picture is likely to have its greatest appeal to those, usually in the large cities, who for one reason or another have a definite interest in the Russian productions.

The story opens in the last days of the revolution in west Russia, a group of White Guards or counter-revolutionaries fleeing from the pursuing Red soldiers. One of the White Guards makes his escape in a swamp surrounding the village, while two Red soldiers, mired therein, are rescued by the local blacksmith, when his two daughters discover their plight. Several years later, the revolution in full swing, an electric plant rises where the swamp had been. One of the daughters of the blacksmith is married to a worker at the electrical plant, the other, Marina, is a research engineer at the same community plant. The blacksmith has become an inventor, whose devices have resulted in more efficient operation.

Marina is in love with another engineer, the chief of a section of the plant. There are evidences of sabotage or attempted sabotage in the unit, and when something goes wrong, Marina's friend is reduced from his position, Marina being named in his place. He resents her promotion, believing it to have been the result of her scheming. One of the plant's directors is suddenly recognized by a worker, and when an accident occurs in one of the turbines, Marina takes the responsibility of shutting off the power, which apparently is a cardinal Soviet sin, and the director is revealed as that same counter-revolutionary White Guard who had escaped in the swamp years before. Thus the workers are pictured in triumph over the enemies of the revolution, which, after all, seems to be the prime purpose of the production.—Aaronson, New York.

Distributed by Amkino. Produced by Belgoskino. Directed by Brodyanski and Korsh. Music by Dunayevsky. Running time, 90 minutes. Release date, May 1, 1935. Adult audience classification.

Comedy

Produced in France by Paramount's French studios, this is something of a slapstick comedy, with limitation of appeal probably to those patrons understanding the French language in which all the dialogue is spoken. There are no superimposed or subtitle translations of the dialogue making extremely difficult the following of the story, and the greater part of the picture's comedy lies in dialogue rather than in action.

Thus the situation which would be most apt to find the film worthwhile is that in the larger metropolitan center, where the exhibitor may count upon a certain number of patrons interested in foreign product and familiar with the language. There are no names meaning anything to the American audience.

A young would-be actor finds himself jobless and his sweetheart persuades her godfather, head of an insurance company, to give him a job. As an agent at a resort hotel, he finds little success amid an atmosphere of parading and posing girls in varied bathing costumes, until he steals the jewels of an idle and corpulent countess in order to interest her in insurance. Immediately he begins to sell insurance in large quantities, covering anybody on anything, including a policy insuring the hotel against the failure of dance act and the appearance of a sultan at a party that evening. The head of the insurance company and his goddaughter arrive, he to find things in a mess, she to discover her fiance flirting with other girls. The young agent and his friends do everything possible to avoid payment on the policies, playing the dance number themselves. The agent is about to impersonate the sultan when the real monarch appears, and the fellow-tricksters begin insulting him, thinking he is the imposter.

Considerable running about, pursuit, noise and general confusion feature the closing sequences, at which point the agent successfully sells his fiancee the idea that she is the only one.—AARONSON, New York.

Produced by Paramount's French studios. Distributed by Paramount. Directed by Roger Capellani. Music by Borel-Clerc, Oberfeld and Marcel Lattes. Running time, 83 minutes. Release date, May 3, 1935. General audience classification.

La Dame aux Camelias

(DuWorld)

Drama in French

Adapted from the story by Alexander Dumas, fils, this French picture is a worthwhile importation. Its exhibition in this country, because of the language handicap, perhaps should best be confined to the intimate type theatre in the larger metropolitan centers where there is an interest on the part of patrons in the better foreign importations, or where there will be a certain proportion of the patronage who are apt to understand the language. There are, however, plenty of superimposed subtitle translations of dialogue, so that it is a simple matter for one not versed in French to follow the story.

It is simple, but strong drama, telling the story of the love of Armand Duval for Marguerite Gautier, the "lady of the camelias," and there should be universal appeal in the story. In the telling, there is fine production execution and excellent performance. Metropolitan audiences may be aware of the identities of the two leading players, Yvonne Printemps and Pierre Fresnay, both of whom this past season have been highly approved for their work, in different plays, on the New York stage. Miss Printempts sings attractively.

The little country girl comes to Paris, innocent and alone, but under the hard treatment of circumstances she acquires knowledge and fascination, and with her natural beauty, soon captivates the city. Her salon is the meeting place of distinguished men, the "names" of Paris. There, too, comes Armand Duval, to meet and fall in love with Marguerite. She in turn falls in love with him. For three months, at Armand's country home, the two are supremely happy with each other and their few best friends. Then, when Armand is away, his father comes to her, begs that she leave him, in order to prevent the scandal which will attach to the great name of Duval if she should continue to live with Armand. She leaves, and Armand, finding her gone, goes on a wild search through Paris for her.

He fails, and leaves the country, while Marguerite, stricken with tuberculosis, is slowly dying. They meet at a gay party, he insults her and leaves. Not long after, repentant, he comes to her, reaches her bedside, and is forgiven, as the couple are reunited just before she dies.

It is a tragic conclusion, but a logical ending to a finely told dramatic story of two young people and their momentarily broken romance. Where appreciation of this sort of motion picture may be expected, it is worthy of the exhibitor's best effort to try to attract "class" patronage.—AARONSON, New York.

The Tin Man

(MGM)

Fair Comedy

Thelma Todd and Patsy Kelly, comedy team, manage some laugh provocation in this subject, in which they become mixed up with a mechanical man, operated in an otherwise unoccupied house, by a demented man of science. Lost in their automobile, they enter the house and are in a continuous state of terror as the robot greets them, talks to them, bulldozes them and an escaped convict who had been in their car without their knowledge, and finally gets out of control and pursues the scientist over the landscape, while the girls make their escape and the convict begs to be taken back to the peace and quiet of the penitentiary. There are amusing moments.—Running time, 19 minutes.

COLORADO COLLEGE WORKS COOPERATIVELY

Indicative of the recognition given the motion picture as an educational aid by schools was the action taken recently by the State Teachers College of Colorado, at Greeley, in adding a course in film appreciation and study, and allowing credits to students for the work, which will include attendance at motion picture theatres.

Certain films will be selected as material for the students and, through arrangements with theatre owners, admission price will be reduced.

Paramount and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and others have worked out similar arrangements nationally with schools and colleges on certain films.

Laughing With Medbury In the Old Days

(Columbia)

Fair

In this number of the series John Medbury, who handles the accompanying dialogue, takes the audience back into the New York of the nineties. Pictorially the subject is interesting and entertaining, but Medbury, it seems, feels called upon to be continuously comic in his dialogue. Much of it is not too successful. A little less punning might help.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Is My Face Black

(Paramount)

Amusing

Molasses and January, the two blackface comedians of the Showboat hour on the radio, here appear as a pair of not too clever Pullman porters. The owner of a headache powder company fires his hill-billy band when he hears them playing on the train, and, overhearing the comedians trying their jokes, hires them for his radio program. They are so good that people no longer have headaches, so they are fired. The pair are amusing and entertaining, and their radio popularity should make them worth selling.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Fair

A fair number of the Screen Snapshots series, this is devoted entirely to picturing a recent benefit performance in Hollywood. Seen in short bits from their acts are Jimmy Durante, the Boswell Sisters, Tim McCoy, Henry Armetta, the Three Stooges, Victor Jory and several others. The lack of outstanding personalities, other than the few seen entering the theatre, weakens the subject.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Choose Your "Weppins"

(Paramount)

Good

As is usual with the Popeye series of cartoons, this is amusing and clever. A big crook escapes from his policeman-captor, enters the Popeye pawnshop and he and Popeye go into battle when he tries to fleece Olive Oyl. Knives, swords, everything handy come into play and Popeye is in a bad way until he takes his spinach. Then the crook is only too happy to return to the comparative safety of his handcuffs and the policeman.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Shoemaker and the Elves

(Columbia)

Good

Although this cartoon theme has been done before, this is still to be rated as a good cartoon subject, the effectiveness enhanced by the use of color, this being one of the Color Rhapsody series. The old shoemaker comes to the rescue of a poor little boy, struggling hungry through the snow, and for his good deed the elves rally at night, amusingly making numerous pairs of handsome shoes for the old shoemaker. The story is told in accompanying off-screen musical rhyme, which is tuneful. A good subject.—Running time, seven minutes.

FILM STILLS WRITE WORLD SCENARIO

Moffitt's "Unreeling History" Tells Pictorial Story of World From Days of the Dinosaurs

by AL FINESTONE
Kansas City Correspondent

"Unreeling History," pictorial feature compiled by John C. Moffitt, motion picture editor of the Kansas City Star, now appearing in the Sunday gravure sections of the Star and other newspapers, is one of the newer media developed by outside sources for developing interest in and goodwill for worthwhile motion pictures.

Executives of theatre circuits and film companies have suggested that theatre managers urge their local newspapers to run the feature, which is being distributed nationally by the Bell Syndicate.

Consisting entirely of stills from films of an historical nature made domestically and abroad and dramatizing the highlights of history through the ages, the feature is being offered as tangible evidence that films intended for mass consumption can be both intelligent and educational without lowering entertainment value.

Commending the series, in expressions published in the Star, were Howard E. Jameyson, Fox Midwest Theatres district manager, besides players Pat O'Brien, W. C. Fields, Bob Montgomery, Frank McHugh, Jean Harlow, Gail Patrick, Bill Powell, Franchot Tone, and others.

In Middlewest circles it was believed that the series will serve to overcome the effects of such features as "Hollywood Unvarnished," socalled "expose" which was carried in Sunday rotogravure sections of many metropolitan newspapers.

Made Exploitation Medium

In Kansas City, where "Unreeling History" started in the Star on March 31, the exploitation angle is being worked to good advantage. Through George S. Baker, manager of the Publix Newman, the Paramount studio has arranged for an album of autographed photos of its stars to be offered as a prize by Claudette Colbert for the best scrapbook of the first 10 weekly installments.

The five first-run theatres in Kansas City, through the local Variety Club, each week award a pair of tickets for best letters on a subject suggested by the stills.

Several hundred thousand stills, said Mr. Moffitt, were examined by him, in selecting the 250 for the series, to run 23 weeks. The author is negotiating with an eastern publisher to bring out "Unreeling History" in book form, expanding the material to 1,000 pictures with probably an accompanying narrative.

The feature has been praised by educators as suggesting "a possible revolution in educational methods," but Mr. Moffitt's intention was not so much education-wise as to produce an entertaining feature. The explanatory comment is in popular vein; at the same time, there is meat for the scholar.

The series is presented a chapter a week, each dealing with a progressive era in mankind's development. In the underline text are references to some details of production and to memorable figures of the screen who had a part in making history in celluloid as well as celluloid history.

It is addressed particularly "to that little band of heroes, the movie stockholders, who, somewhat in the manner of the Light Brigade, risked the sinews of war and the life blood of commerce in this long succession of costume pictures."

The series will wind up with a peep into the future as visioned by such films as Fox's "Just Imagine." Early instalments contain shots from "Judith of Bethulia," David Wark Griffith's first spectacle, and from "epics" which include, merely as an example, FBO's "Moon of Israel," William Fox's "Queen of Sheba," Griffith's "Intolerance," Paramount's "The Wanderer" and foreign-made "Queen Elizabeth," with Sarah Bernhardt.

Much of the material came from the large film companies. The personal collections of D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. DeMille were thrown open to Mr. Moffitt. Among other sources were the New York Public Library, the Los Angeles motion picture museum, and the "morgues" of several publications. Amkino and Gaumont British supplied some stills; the Associated Press was instrumental in obtaining pictures from other foreign companies. Mr. Moffitt's inquiries developed the fact that few stars of former days saved scenes from their best pictures.

The series starts with pictorial reproductions of prehistoric animal life of the Dinosaur age, and in the second instalment treats the early Egyptian age, following with Moses, the Ten Commandments and other Biblical episodes. The fourth group introduces the "frightfulness" of Assyria, and episode five shows "Big, Bad Babylon."

Material for the "cave man" era came largely from Paramount's "Adam's Rib," Varick Frissell's "Viking," Metro's "Eskimo," Paramount's "Four Frightened People," First National's old "Lost World," "Ingagi," "Three Ages," Metro's "Tarzan and His Mate," and Radio's "King Kong." There are monsters aplenty, both men and beasts.

Cites Educational Service

Mr. Moffitt's "Dedication" of the series is made to "divers artists, including Miss Annette Kellerman, and to that strange breed of fusty little men who are filed in Times Square rooming houses against the day when they will be brought out to impersonate Voltaire (whom they never have read) in the background of 'Monsieur Beaucaire.' "

"The movies," concluded Mr. Moffitt, "from their very inception, have devoted much of their effort and considerable of their resources to films that fundamentally were educational."

FORBES SEES FUTURE FOR AIR-CONDITIONING

"Not since the Civil War has America been so ripe and ready for a business boom," observed B. C. Forbes, editor and publisher of Forbes Magazine, in Liberty. Pointing out that $43,800,000,000 worth of prosperity is ready and waiting for modernizing and improving the country and its homes and buildings and factories, Mr. Forbes said that air-conditioning of theatres, offices, schools, homes and such "promises to rival in its growth, in its importance, in its employment-giving even the automotive industry."

He predicted much for television, too, believing that "before long television may sweep the country, affording employment to vast numbers and adding zest to the daily lives of millions."

Senate Extends NRA to April

Ignoring President Roosevelt's demand for a continuation of the NRA for two years, the Senate late Tuesday suddenly and without a record vote approved the Clark joint resolution to keep the recovery act alive only until April 1, 1936.

Independent exhibitors of greater New York this week carried to Albany their argument that the motion picture code tends to promote monopoly.

Observers in Washington believe that revamping of the picture code will include the dropping of many provisions, such as those setting up in Hollywood committees which have never been active, and others covering such matters as salary control. Other provisions will be materially changed, possibly including those covering the grievance and zoning boards.

Exhibitors may be eliminated under a clause making codes inapplicable to any person engaged solely in intrastate commerce.

Rescinding a previous order, the Code Authority adopted a resolution permitting exhibitors to file individual complaints in territories where clearance and zoning schedules are waiting approval. This directly affects theatre owners in New Haven, Milwaukee, Detroit and Kansas City.

In territories for which schedules have not yet been drawn, 30 days after inauguration of the Los Angeles plan, which is May 15, local clearance and zoning boards may, at their own option, draft plans.

22 CHICAGO THEATRES CALLED LOEW'S PLAN

Allied States Threatens Boycott of MGM Product If Expansion Project Is Completed

Loew's Inc., made further moves this week to strengthen its program of theatre expansion in the United States and in several foreign countries. The latest addition to the Loew circuit will be a projected 1,600-seat theatre in Oak Park, Ill., announcement of which brought a formal statement from Allied States Association condemning the move and threatening to boycott all of MGM product.

Under a deal now being discussed by Loew officials with Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer, Chicago operators, Loew's would be financially interested in from three to four planned Chicago theatres. The circuit would give Jones a long-term MGM franchise. Similar negotiations are under way with other operators, but all decisions will rest with Nicholas M. Schenck, Loew's president, in New York.

22 Acquisitions Called Plan

Handling the Chicago negotiations for Loew's are Robert Lynch and Ernest Schwartz of the MGM branch office in Philadelphia. Loew's, it was reported this week from Chicago, also is considering taking over a number of theatres, competitive to the Essaness and Schoenstadt circuits there.

Fundamentally the Loew plan of theatre expansion is to blanket all subsequent-run situations and in Chicago alone it is said that the circuit will acquire 22 theatres. Officially, however, circuit executives in Chicago said there is no definite number of theatres to be built or acquired.

The Allied reaction, coming just prior to the organization's national convention in Atlanta, involves the advice to MGM to "stick to distribution and stay out of theatre operations."

"If Loew goes ahead with the project, Allied at its Atlanta convention will adopt a resolution for a national boycott on MGM," a member of the Allied board of directors was quoted as saying. "MGM should stick to distribution and stay out of theatre operations. There are seven other major distributors we deal with. If Loew's goes ahead with the Oak Park situation we can expect every one of the other companies to build where they cannot get together on terms with exhibitors."

New Sales Policy Reported

It was reported unofficially that eight Chicage exhibitors previously fighting MGM policies are now ready to accept the distributor's new flexible sales plan. Under this, it is reported, there would be from four to 12 pictures on percentage, to be divided into three groups from which exhibitors may choose. One of these groups, it is said, will call for four specials at 35 per cent with playing arrangements to be worked out between the exchange manager and the exhibitor.

The second group presumably would call for eight features on percentage to be divided into two groups of four, one group at 35 per cent and the second at 30 per cent with playing arrangements to be worked out. The third plan, it is reported, would call for 12 percentage pictures to be divided into two groups of six, with 35 per cent for the first six and 30 per cent for the remaining six.

For the 1934-35 season, Essaness declared it could not buy from MGM unless the circuit agreed to 14 pictures on percentage. Essaness refused to accept.

Throughout Chicago, Loew's is moving slowly in the purchasing of additional plots because of zoning conditions, the clearance setup and the Balaban & Katz franchise, which has another year to run. All contemplated Loew houses will be in the neighborhoods.

Sees Warner Film New Opera Form

One hour and 20 minutes of the two hours and 20 minutes of running time on the Warner adaptation of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," directed by Max Reinhardt, is dedicated to the music, Professor Erich Wolfgang Korngold said in New York last week.

The Viennese composer, who arranged Mendelssohn's music for the picture, sailed last week after six months in this country. It was his first visit to the country and the first time he had worked on a motion picture with Mr. Reinhardt, although he had done stage work with him in Europe before.

Speaking of the finished product, Professor Korngold said, ". . . the film is a work of art. . . . Mendelssohn's classical score has been generously used. . . . Shakespeare's language has hardly been changed."

The professor said he had supervised the cutting himself, and expressed his enthusiasm for the successful collaboration of all persons concerned in the production.

"An entire new opus has been created," he said, "an opera spoken in rhythm, in which dialogue and music are closely connected. It required long preparation and it was probably the first time that a Hollywood production was rehearsed for four weeks before the work on the set actually began. A new shooting technique had to be invented, as music and dialogue were never separated and always synchronized."

French Trade Deal Under Discussion

Paving the way for discussion of better treatment of American films in France, the state department at Washington last week announced it has opened negotiations for a reciprocal trade agreement with that country on which public hearings will be held by the committee for reciprocal information June 24.

Paramount Board Election June 3

Formal election of the board of directors and officers of Paramount Publix by stockholders will be held on June 3 instead of May 15, it was determined last week at a meeting of the present board and creditor representatives. Paramount sales convention has been postponed from May 23-26 to June 13-16 at New York, because of the postponement of the election. Officials felt it was vital the company's executive personnel be determined prior to the sales meeting.

The June 3 session also will pass upon changes in the by-laws, new capitalization and changes in the corporate charter. The principal change in the by-laws will reduce the number of directors from 20 to "not less than 16 and not more than 18," and will classify the directors into three groups serving one, two or three-year terms until 1938, after which they will be elected annually for one-year terms.

Court Approves Erpi Agreement

Paramount trustees have been advised by counsel that a transfer of assets to the reorganized company is unlikely before late in June.

Federal Judge Coxe last week approved the agreement between the trustees and Electrical Research Products, providing for allowance of Erpi's $2,022,597 claim against Paramount in the total amount of $1,193,945, reducing Paramount annual royalty payment to Erpi by about $250,000 and permitting new contracts without compulsory servicing charges.

Special Master John E. Joyce approved allowance of the claims of Heymann and Brothers, and Joseph J. Greenberg for $20,252 and of Cooper, Neel, Kemp and Sutherland for $3,764 and the expunging of the $20,271 claim of E. V. Richards, Jr. Mr. Joyce approved a petition of the trustees to discontinue agreements with Skouras Brothers for operation of the Atlantic States circuit.

Kane Suit Settled

Judge Coxe approved settlement of Robert T. Kane's $35,440 suit against Paramount, based on the disaffirmation of his contract as general manager of Paramount foreign production in 1933. The settlement provides for allowance of a claim of $21,000. Judge Coxe also approved application of Paramount to purchase 18,236 shares of a new issue of Famous Players Canadian stock at $10 per share. The court approved the expunging of six claims totaling $119,000.

The newly elected directorate of Paramount-Richards Theatres, Inc., holding company for the reorganized Saenger Theatres Corporation and Saenger Realty Corporation, includes: Adolph Zukor, E. V. Richards, Y. Frank Freeman, Walter B. Cokell, N. aL. Carter and H. K. Oliphant. Harold Wilkes, New Orleans Paramount exchange manager, has been named assistant treasurer, and Mr. Oliphant assistant secretary. The exchange of bonds of the old company, which has been reorganized into the two Saenger companies, for new bonds is progressing rapidly. The same amount as the old, $2,550,000, is being issued.

MOTION PICTURE DAILY'S HOLLYWOOD PREVIEW

"Public Hero Number One"

(M-G-M)

HOLLYWOOD, May 13.—Another blazing yarn of "G Men" ripped from the front pages and offering a fresh slant and taut romance is Leo's roar for the Federal "dicks."

With unerring suspense it follows Chester Morris in a jail break, paralleling San Quentin's spectacular release, and thus gaining the confidence of Joseph Calleia, Purple Gang chief. Dillinger's face lifting, and his last stand in a Chicago theatre alley are tightly woven into the film, which sweeps along with sinister and melodramatic bounce.

Lionel Barrymore, outcast doctor of the gang; Paul Kelly, Federal chief; Jean Arthur, Calleia's sister, for whom Morris falls in tracking down her brother; Lewis Stone, prison warden and Morris carry the brunt of the story skillfully and convincingly. Calleia's first screen role as the merciless killer shines. Miss Arthur, in a romantic vise, gives warmth to a human performance. Both should be in demand.

J. Walter Ruben's direction has virility with a fine balance of action, comedy, plot and romance. Wells Root's screen play from Ruben's and his own story stresses entertainment. Lucien Hubbard produced distinctively.

As a highly effective gang yarn with dramatic twists, M-G-M's contribution to the "G Men" cycle looks like a clean hit.

COURT APPROVES PLAN FOR FOX METROPOLITAN

Schenck - Fox Theatres Plan of Reorganization Called Fair; Paramount Thus Eliminated

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack last week tentatively approved the Joseph M. Schenck-Fox Theatres plan of reorganization of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, and including a 10 per cent participation by Keith-Albee-Orpheum. Three of the four members of the Fox Metropolitan bondholders' committee unconditionally approved the plan. The fourth member, Frederick Peyser of Hallgarten & Company, indicated he was in accord in principle, but was withholding complete approval until he had seen the final modifications in printed form.

There is every indication that a final disposition has been made of the 84-theatre circuit, which has been in and out of the courts for three years. With the court's approval of the plan, Paramount is eliminated as a competitive cash bidder. It is understood Paramount creditors would not consider a cash offer of $4,500,000, and it is believed only a large cash offer for direct purchase of the circuit's bonds would influence the creditors at this time.

Creditors Have 30 Days

Fox Metropolitan creditors have 30 days in which to agree to the plan or withdraw from the committee which has recommended it. If, at the end of the 30-day period, two-thirds of the creditors assent to the plan, it will be placed in effect by the court.

In approving the Schenck-Fox Theatres plan, and rejecting the only other submitted to him, that of Si Fabian, Judge Mack said he was guided by his belief that the Fox Metropolitan bondholders were more assured of the redemption of their new bonds and the payment of interest on them under the Schenck plan. He was also influenced, he said, by the facts that the Fox Film franchise would be retained for the circuit and that the Skouras Brothers and Randforce would continue as operators.

Under the Schenck plan, the court declared, the circuit is no longer "so highly speculative" an enterprise. "We have comparative security for the bondholders, even though much is dependent upon the future management of the properties. The advantages weigh heavily in favor of the Schenck plan and, subject to the modifications in process of drafting, the court finds it fair and equitable and feasible."

Schenck to Remain Five Years

The modifications give the present bondholders $200 cash and $550 in new debentures for each $1,000 bond and a pro rata bondholder share in a new issue of Class A stock which shall amount to 15 per cent of the outstanding common stock to be held in Schenck and Fox Theatres Corporation. Working capital of the new company will be increased from $150,000 to $300,000; Mr. Schenck will agree to remain with the company for at least five years and agrees to sell United Artists and 20th Century product to Fox Metropolitan on "fair" terms. An unconditional guarantee by Mr. Schenck and United Artists Theatre Circuit is to the effect that the $200 cash notes will be paid, and $600,000, in addition to $100,000 already posted, is to be delivered to the bondholders' committee. No dividends will be declared on either the common or Class A stock until 50 per cent of the outstanding new notes have been retired, and no dividends will be declared out of a fund to be set aside for "wastage."

It is understood Mr. Schenck will acquire the 50 per cent stock interest of Fox Theatres Corporation in addition to his own 50 per cent. An agreement provides that he will not dispose of his stock during the five-year period, except the 10 per cent covered by the K-A-O agreement.

A new operating agreement with Skouras and Randforce is now being developed, and will be ready within a month, according to Mr. Schenck. The new agreement is expected virtually to continue the present arrangement.

National-Skouras Contract Ready

Under the terms of a new operating contract between National Theatres Corporation and Charles and Spyros Skouras, the two will receive combined annual salary of $156,000, equal to $1,500 per week for each. Retroactive to January 1, 1935, the contract is expected to be signed shortly on the Coast. The brothers also are to receive a graduated percentage of National's profit after a $2 dividend has been paid. The brothers are conferring on the Coast, with managers in session there. Spyros, as executive vice-president of National, supervises subsidiaries, including Evergreen States Amusement Corporation, Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Fox Columbia Corporation, Associated Theatres, Fox Midcontinent and Fox Philadelphia Building Corporation.

Federal Judge Albert L. Reeves in Kansas City last week refused to review the sale of Fox Midland and Fox Rocky Mountain circuits to National Theatres, on petition of Lee H. Hamlin, creditor and bondholder of General Theatres Equipment. The sale was confirmed in federal court after the buyers recorded settlement with Mr. Hamlin to the amount of $1,700.

Fox Kansas Theatre Company, controlled by Fox Midwest, has reduced its capital from $1,158,538.43 to $50,000. The amount is represented by 1,000 shares of no par value, owned by Fox Midwest.

TWO FEDERAL COURTS SUSTAIN BANK NIGHT

Des Moines, San Antonio Courts in Injunctions Prevent Any Interference with Practice

Two federal courts granted injunctions last week against interference with the practice of "bank nights" in theatres, one state court declared the practice in violation of the state law, and in a third case, an injunction was sought to prevent interference. These court actions were the week's highlights in the widespread controversy which has developed over the "bank night" and similar practices designed to stimulate theatre business.

Federal Judge Charles A. Dewey in Des Moines temporarily enjoined the local grievance board from ordering Midwest Film Distributors of Kansas City to cease film service to two Don Thornburg houses in Marshalltown, Ia. Hearing was set for May 17.

In San Antonio, United States District Judge McMillan granted a temporary injunction to S. & C. Amusement Company, operating the Palace, restraining the Interstate Circuit and the local grievance board from interfering further with bank nights. The action affects all houses.

Northern States Amusement Company, operating the Grand and Lyric theatres at Crookstown, Minn., last week sought an injunction to prevent distributors from stopping film service, following a decision of the Code Authority. The complaint was brought originally by J. F. Fournet, operating the Royal theatre locally.

Called Violation of State Law

The district court in Brady, Texas, last week ruled that bank nights are a violation of the state lottery law. The court granted the Ritz theatre, operated by H. Ford Taylor, an injunction against the use of bank nights by the Brady Amusement Company, operating the Palace theatre. Previously the Brady interests had obtained a temporary injunction against major distributors, to prevent them from stopping film service, as ordered by the Code Authority. The state court decision ends the injunction.

National allocation of film rentals for independents along the lines on which the large circuits buy is the only way exhibitors can make money without resorting to giveaways and "bank nights," Walter Reade declared this week at a meeting called by George F. Thompson, permanent chairman of the New York grievance board.

David Loew said the Loew circuit will adopt giveaways on a wholesale scale unless independents drop the practice.

While Kansas City, Mo., is in the midst of controversy over bank nights, and the local code office is being flooded with complaints, the practice has been begun by all but two of the 11 theatres in Kansas City, Kan., neighboring town. Giveaways of some sort thus cover all of Greater Kansas City, with the exception of about half a dozen theatres. Kansas exhibitors expect no opposition, the attorney general having declared the practice "not illegal." "Jack Pot" and "auction night," two new devices, have made their appearance in Kansas City.

Premiums also have hit Kansas City, with the Dubinsky circuit tying up with the Katz drug stores to give 10-cent coupons with each 20-cent admission and 5-cent coupons with 15-cent tickets. Exhibitors protest the practice as actually reduced admission, and contrary to the code. The Code Authority's determination of the Belmont and Prospect theatres cases, which the local board dismissed because Mrs. A. Baier, complainant, failed to establish competition with her Lindbergh theatre, will be influential in the possible spread of bank nights in the territory, it is indicated. The appeal will be heard this week.

Bank nights broke out in Cleveland last week, when M. B. Horwitz, operating the Haltnorth, playing largely to colored people, instituted the practice. He will begin the policy at his Falls theatre, Cayahoga Falls, next week. He contends he was forced into it by double-feature competition. Premiums, giveaways and dual bills have been out of Cleveland since last July 8, when members of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors Association signed an elimination agreement.

Lou Bard, member of the board of the ITO of Southern California, and president of the Corbar Theatre Corporation, has contracted with Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., for the use of bank nights at his Colorado theatre, Pasadena, Cal.

The Milwaukee grievance board, following two orders to discontinue Screeno and country store nights, has ordered film exchanges to discontinue film service to the Strand Theatres Company, after a bank night charge. The circuit was ordered to cease bank nights at its Kenosha theatre in Kenosha, Wis.

Leo Doc Britton, owner of the Amity Film Exchange, Boston, has acquired the New England franchise to "Jack Pot."

The Associated Theatre Owners of Indiana, in its bulletin last week, scored the use of premiums, calling it a short sighted policy. The bulletin said in part: "Maybe some day we shall get back to making good pictures, exploiting them energetically, and leave the disposal of cheap merchandise to the 5 and 10 cent stores."

The Code Authority in New York last week announced determination of 32 appeals, in virtually all cases ordering the elimination of bank nights and similar policies which have the effect of reducing theatre admissions, thus violating the code.

Bank nights are spreading rapidly in Southern California pending a federal court decision to determine whether the local grievance board can enforce its rulings against them by stopping film service. Local exhibitors are said to be signing bank night contracts at the rate of one a day. The local board in San Francisco has until May 25 to file an answer in federal court.

Pathe to Continue Financial Support Of First Division

Pathe Exchange will continue its financial support of First Division, Frank J. Kolbe, president, said this week in New York, thus ending rumors current since the unexpected resignation from the Pathe presidency of Stuart W. Webb early last month. Mr. Kolbe indicated, however, that First Division will receive new financing with some outside interest participating jointly with Pathe.

Mr. Kolbe said he will remain with Pathe permanently, taking an active part in that company's affairs and the affairs of First Division.

Expressing confidence in First Division's future and in its president, Harry Thomas, and the company management, Mr. Kolbe said:

"Pathe believes that First Division has a real place in the industry and it will be given our continued support in strengthening and maintaining that place. Its recent difficulties have been adjusted and we feel that under its present management it will continue to grow and realize its original objectives."

It is understood that First Division and Captain A. C. N. Dixey, acting chairman of Anglo-American, are negotiating for an exchange of product and talent.

The annual meeting of stockholders of First Division was held last week and Mr. Kolbe was elected chairman of the board, a post held formerly by Mr. Webb. Other directors elected were Mr. Thomas, Mr. Webb, Jules K. Chapman, Charles L. Stillman, Theodore Streibert and Robert W. Atkins. Mr. Webb and Mr. Chapman are representatives of the Ludington-Fiske-Curtis interests. Mr. Stillman represents "March of Time," and the others Pathe.

"March of Time" is retaining its stock interest in First Division which was taken as indicating that the reel might continue its distribution arrangement with First Division. However, "Time" is now at liberty to discontinue the releasing deal and officials this week said that a renewal is highly improbable.

Pathe will continue to restrict its activities to laboratory work and production financing, and there is little likelihood of the company engaging in active production itself, at least until its agreement with RKO expires early next year. Samuel Spring, attorney recently made a special representative of Pathe, said that the company will continue its working agreements with DuPont Film Manufacturing Corporation. Mr. Kolbe has been elected to the DuPont board, also replacing Mr. Webb, which, with Mr. Atkins and Paul Fuller, gives Pathe three representatives.

A meeting of the First Division board on Monday adjourned until Thursday to complete a discussion of new season plans and to elect officers to fill vacancies. Posts to be filled are those of secretary and treasurer.

In Hollywood this week E. B. Derr, former Pathe production head, said, "I certainly do want to buy Pathe," when asked about a report that he had submitted a bid to Mr. Kolbe.

"Assuming that Pathe would liquidate I submitted my proposal to Mr. Kolbe, who refused it, asserting that Pathe was not liquidating," Mr. Derr explained.

Officials of Pathe declined to comment Tuesday beyond saying that the Derr bid is receiving no consideration.

Twentieth Anniversary As Showmen In 50-Year-Old Theatre Is Observed

HALF a century ago, when Pardeeville, Wisconsin, was a hamlet still struggling with the sandburs that lined its wheel-tracked Main Street, there was dedicated to the service of entertainment a framewood, single-storied Music Hall, built with the same courage and faith in showbusiness that conceived its namesake, the Music Hall in Radio City.

With the years the medium changed to the motion picture but the objective held steadfast, and today in the many-times remodeled theatre Mr. and Mrs. B. Lovell are celebrating two decades of continued operation. Mrs. Lovell, proud of that record, asks whether any other exhibitor in the state of Wisconsin "has operated one theatre in the same place and building for twenty years."

The original structure was controlled for years by the stock company organized to build it. Then came the day of the nickelodeon, and in 1908 the Music Hall was sold to J. S. Falconer, who reopened it as the Electric Theatre. When the feature "Nero and the Burning of Rome" opened, it was red-letter day for the village, too.

In 1909 Miss Edna P. Woodward became the bride of Mr. Lovell, both of them always residents of Pardeeville or environs. In 1915 the Lovells took over the theatre and opened with a three-reel five-cent show, supplementing the programs with dances, roadshows, basketball games, roller skating. One after another, refinements were added to the theatre—ventilation system, dimmed lights, opera chairs, velvet drop curtain, sound equipment, and improved sound apparatus. In 1920 a new name, Lovell Theatre, went up in the lights. A second theatre had started in 1916, but the Lovells bought it out ten years later. In 1930 the first sound reproducer was installed.

THE LOVELLS AND THEIR THEATRE

Today the latest color and sound product is on the screen in the Lovell theatre's anniversary program.

Distributors Halt Double Bill Plan

Major distributors in Kansas City this week blocked a plan of local exhibitors to obtain release of selected features for double featuring, the plan contemplating the twin billing of inferior product.

The distributors, in rejecting the exhibitor proposal, refused to alter individual policies and each named a different reason. Paramount referred to the potentialities of collusion inherent in the plan.

Among replies received by Jay Means, head of the Independent Theatre Owners, was one from RKO Radio which said that it was the sole judge in determining the product that could be double billed. United Artists said that since it sells each feature individually, the playing arrangement is a matter for individual determination between the exhibitor and the company.

Mr. Means wrote to the sales heads himself when, he said, they delayed replies to exchange managers, who had submitted the plan to their home offices at the exhibitors' request.

The plan, prior to its submission to the distributors, was agreed upon as a compromise between independents and Fox Midwest. The ITO originally demanded the privilege to double all product without limitation, but with a clearance setback of 28 days. Fox Midwest rejected this and countered with a proposal that a release committee be appointed to select double feature bills.

In Milwaukee this week the Independent Theatres' Protective Association's plan to eliminate duals in Milwaukee county hit a snag when H. J. Fitzgerald, general manager of Wisconsin Amusement Enterprises, Inc., refused to agree. As a result, Milwaukee county exhibitors plan another meeting this week to review a substitute plan for barring double bills. The present plan calls for an agreement by 90 per cent of the theatres to withdraw all double features by June 2.

Name Golf Committee

The committee for the 23rd Film Daily Golf Tournament, to be held June 12 at the Progress Country Club, Purchase, N. Y., has been named, as follows: Jack Alicoate, chairman; Al Lichtman, Bruce Gallup, Herbert R. Ebenstein, Felix Feist, Louis Nizer, Harry Brandt, Charles R. Rogers and Don M. Mersereau, secretary.

Columbia System Institutes Plan To Improve Radio

A three-phase plan, designed to improve radio programs, will be put into effect by the Columbia Broadcasting System on June 30. The plan includes restriction of the amount of advertising in programs, a new standard of children's programs and banning of programs advertising laxatives as such or laxative properties in any product. The plan will be made effective, considering the June 30 date, as rapidly as permitted by fair consideration of the advertisers now holding contracts, according to William S. Paley, president of the company.

The plan provides that a maximum of 10 per cent of broadcasting time may be devoted to the sponsor's commercial announcements on programs after 6 P.M. During the day the maximum will be 15 per cent of the time. The single exception is on quarter-hour programs, where additional time will be allowed.

The children's program standard will prohibit certain types of broadcast under eight different headings. An eminent child-psychologist will be employed in addition to an advisory board. The aim is to devise programs which will meet the approval of parents, educators and children. The restriction relative to laxatives is effected by the announcement that no broadcast would be permitted which describes "graphically or repellantly any internal bodily functions, symptomatic results of internal disturbances, or matters which are generally not considered acceptable topics in social groups."

Unpleasantly rapid delivery to crowd a lengthy sales message into a short space of time will not be permitted. The eight themes which will be forbidden in children's programs are:

"The exalting, as modern heroes, of gangsters, criminals and racketeers.

"Disrespect for either parental or other proper authority, glorified or encouraged.

"Cruelty, greed and selfishness as worthy motivations.

"Programs that arouse harmful nervous reactions in the child.

"Conceit, smugness or an unwarranted sense of superiority over others less fortunate.

"Recklessness and abandon falsely identified with a healthy spirit of adventure.

"Unfair exploitation of others for personal gain.

"Dishonesty and deceit made appealing or attractive to the child."

PROTEST ONTARIO'S NEW TAX FOR RELIEF

Exhibitor Charges Agent of Performing Rights Society Threatened to Close His Theatre

by J. A. COWAN
Toronto Correspondent

Whatever may be the result of their efforts, Ontario's independent exhibitors are experiencing no lack of publicity but have taken up semi-permanent positions on the front pages of Canadian newspapers.

With the Toronto hearings of the Royal Commission inquiry into charges of the Canadian Performing Rights Society now at end and the final sessions devoted to radio fees rather than the theatre situations, a Hamilton exhibitor produced fireworks by giving evidence that a representative of the Society had threatened to close his theatre.

Refused to Pay $166 Fee

Anthony Patzalek, owner of the Playhouse, Hamilton, Ont., told the Commissioner he had received a letter from the Society asking for a fee of $166.60 a year and thrown it into the wastepaper basket. He got a second letter and again did nothing.

"Then a man from the Society came to see me," Mr. Patzalek testified, "and said he'd lock my theatre and sue me. I said: 'This is highway robbery. Go ahead and try and get the money.' He said: 'You can't say that to me.' I wouldn't pay. I was going to fight."

When asked why he had finally given in, the exhibitor explained that "nobody else would fight so I had to quit."

Business was described by the witness as "as bad this year as last and a little bit worse without dishes." He listed his gross for 1931 at $39,000 and at $26,000 for 1934. According to the evidence his house had failed to show a profit the past five years.

Protest Relief Tax

Interest among theatre men, however, switched abruptly from music levies to taxes, with Oliver Scott, manager of the Weston theatre and secretary of the Independent Theatre Owners of Canada, leading a movement to stage mass meetings of protest and circulate petitions in opposition to Ontario's new amusement tax for relief purposes.

Operators were cooperating with owners to circulate petitions among patrons of 125 theatres, Mr. Scott reported. They hoped to get a million signatures.

Oscar Hanson, for Allied Exhibitors and Associated Theatres, said these organizations were not sponsoring the petitions but would do nothing to prevent member theatres displaying petitions in their lobbies. He declared the new taxes discriminated against the buyer of low-price tickets and thus bore most heavily on those least able to pay. He thought a number of small houses might close for July and August as a result. Exhibitors of Ontario were considering a retaliatory move to close during June, July and August if the new tax is not rescinded.

Heads of Famous-Players, on the other hand, have taken no such action to enlist public opinion against the taxes, though making plain-spoken comments.

"Last year on an investment of $9,000,000 in Ontario, Famous Players paid twice as much in taxes as it earned in profits," said N. L. Nathanson, Canadian FP executive. "It is a question whether the motion picture industry in Ontario can survive under the new taxes."

FROM READERS

AS TO THE FIRST SCENIC RAILWAY

To the Editor of the Herald:

It isn't often that Motion Picture Herald makes an erroneous statement but that is just what has happened on page 8 (May 11th issue), in the item headed: "Schenck Purchases."

According to that item: "In 1910, with his brother, Joseph M., now president of United Artists and 20th Century, Mr. Schenck took over the Palisades Amusement Park and there erected the first scenic railway."

In 1904 I worked for Vitagraph. As a motion picture operator, I was assigned to Econoupoly's on the Bowery at Coney Island. Over on Surf Avenue, a block away, L. A. Thompson had a scenic railway which had been running successfully for at least three years, while two or three blocks away on the Bowery, Jackman's Scenic Railway and County Fair had also been in operation for a number of years.

Mr. Schenck's scenic railway was not even the tenth built. That type of resort amusement had been popular long before Mr. Schenck created Palisades Park.

I sometimes believe it would be a good idea if old-timers were shot the moment they started remembering things that happened further back than two years ago. It would be a good thing for news writers because in that case those pernickety old-timers would not dare to remember details.—Hal Hode, Executive Assistant to Mr. Jack Cohn, Columbia Pictures Corporation, New York City.

'CANCELING PICTURES', A ONE-ACT 'SKETCH'

To the Editor of the Herald:

The Merry Go Round. A one-act sketch from the scenario, "Canceling Pictures."

"My dear Mr. Manager:

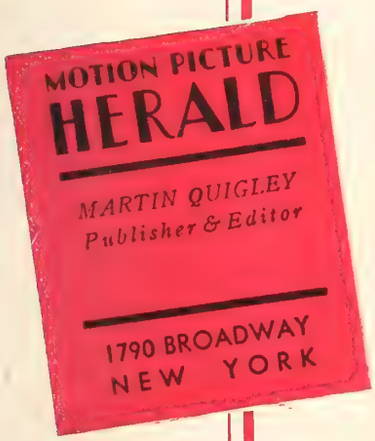
"I wish to cancel out 'Manessa,' due to the fact that it is from the old block and also that I do not think that it is suitable for our clientele."

"Dear Mr. Exhibitor, we cannot consider your cancellation at this time, the national release being some sixty days away.

"Please advise in the near future if you wish to cancel the picture.

"Re the picture 'What Is It,' sorry to say that we cannot accept your cancellation, as the eighteen days have expired since national release.

"I am aware that you state in your letter that the picture was not made available to you until the eighteen days were past. But the reason was that the key city had not cleared the picture."



And the bare facts: the first picture had been confirmed in. And that is the tale of this double-crossing business.

Cancellations? Try and get 'em.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Screen Magazine Chartered

Fashion Magazine of the Screen, Inc., has been chartered at Albany with capital stock listed at 100 shares. Incorporators are Ethel Davis, Rose Brodsky and Joseph Billik.

'Ceiling' Circulation*

It is a fact to be remarked that the circulation of Motion Picture Herald, among all classes engaged in motion picture activities, is consistently above 15,000 copies weekly. This is nearly twice the figure ever attained by any motion picture business paper. It represents "ceiling" circulation—the top.

This bespeaks, of course, a lively renewal rate—and since that figure has been mantained through depression years, it can be credited only to the many services—all in terms of the box office—which Motion Picture Herald renders all factors within the nation-wide industry.

For all highly organized publications circulation figures are proportionate to their value within their industry. By such value Motion Picture Herald "sells itself".

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

EXHIBITORS, DISTRIBUTORS BLAME ONE ANOTHER ON RADIO AD RECORDS

But Gene Curtis Finds F - P Canadian Houses Would Use Transcriptions If Assured of Material for Weekly Program

Electrical transcription broadcasting as a motion picture theatre advertising medium is deserving of greater consideration than is accorded it by both exhibitors and the sales departments of distributors in New York, according to Gene Curtis, sales promotion manager of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, who recently conducted a survey among that circuit's 187 theatres to ascertain the reactions of managers to transcription broadcasts as a definite adjunct of the theatre's advertising program. Mr. Curtis, prior to becoming sales promotion manager of Famous, was manager of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, and was co-winner of the Quigley award for May last year.

Although some interest has been evidenced in the past, use of transcriptions in theatre advertising has been attempted on a large scale by only one large circuit, Evergreen State Amusement Corporation, in the Far Northwest (described in the March 9th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD) and by a few individual theatres.

Call Demand Insufficient

New York publicity offices say there is not sufficient demand from exhibitors for transcriptions which depict, in dialogue and music, scenes from films playing at specified theatres, and as a result they have stopped or limited issuance, saying theatres would not support their end of the charge.

The only large distributor regularly sponsoring these programs is Paramount.

"The answer to the objection of distributors that theatres will not support their end of the transcription charges appears to lie in the fact that theatres cannot count on getting these records regularly, and therefore more or less forget this angle on merchandising," said Mr. Curtis this week.

"To test whether my own opinion was correct I sent a questionnaire to all our theatres from coast to coast and found that while very few are using transcription records at present, 90 per cent of our first-run houses in cities where there are radio stations would use these records if they could be sure of getting enough to give them a 15 minute program once a week on pictures they are playing." Likewise, practically all second-runs in towns with radio facilities available said they could use the records to advantage.

Evergreen State Amusement, with the cooperation of World Broadcasting System and Paramount, last summer started regularly utilizing transcription programs, made in the Hollywood studios of WBS under the direction of P. W. Campbell, resident manager and formerly connected with Pathe and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. These transcriptions have now been made available to radio stations for sustaining purposes without payment either to WBS or to Paramount but they may be used as sponsored programs only if sponsored by an exhibitor, the station paying a small amount for use of the transcription.

According to Mr. Curtis, one of the most important objections of distributors' advertising departments to transcription broadcasting revolves about radio rights to motion pictures. In many instances, he said, radio rights are reserved, and various restrictions sometimes prevent the broadcasting of even short excerpts from the story. However, he added, there are ways of overcoming this and it is entirely possible to prepare an interesting radio transcription without violating any rights.

"As I see it," Mr. Curtis explained, "there are five possible types of programs that could be made and which would cover all problems regarding rights. These are the straight dramatic program, the drama and musical program, musical, interview and Hollywood news.

"The first, or straight dramatic, would be a recording of dialogue excerpts from the picture with explanatory remarks by a commentator who would introduce the various scenes and tie them together. This type of record should present highlights from the picture without telling too much of the story or the ending, so as to intrigue the curiosity of radio listeners to a point where they will come into the theatre to see the rest of the picture."

The drama and musical program would be for cases where it might not be advisable or permissible to use a full 15-minutes of straight dramatization. The music would be anything appropriate or entertaining. This form might also be used, Mr. Curtis pointed out, when radio rights to the music or actual dialogue of the picture are not available.

The straight musical program would be interspersed with announcements concerning the picture and, in situations where the stations lack radio rights to the story, the transcription could be composed of appropriate songs coupled with permissible publicity announcements.

"Interviews, as our fourth type of recording, would again permit good radio publicity without violating any copyrights," he said. "In this case, the star or stars, and possibly the director, could be interviewed on any subject and, of course, the picture would be worked into the interview. A variation of this would be a straight monologue recording such as Frank Buck made on his last picture."

Mr. Curtis believes that the fifth type of program, Hollywood news, again offers many interesting possibilities.

13 Minutes of Advertising

"Hollywood news is of universal interest, as evidenced by the number of newspaper columns and radio programs devoted to this idea. In such a recording the activities of Hollywood stars would be included, particularly of the stars in the picture, with news about the current picture and new pictures they are making, their hobbies and other similar subjects. In addition, this program could include a dramatization of some human interest incident on the lot during the making of the picture."

Actual advertising within the records should be kept to an absolute minimum, with the recording to run 13 minutes, allowing one minute at either end for local and commercial announcements, Mr. Curtis added. Theatres and radio stations should be able to sell these recordings to commercial advertisers. In this way the advertiser could get a well presented program at a much lower cost than he could possibly engage local talent. If the advertiser did not want to pay the entire cost, the theatre might pay for the record, with the advertiser paying for the station time.

"Many theatres are regularly using radio that are not using transcriptions, although they are using local talent which costs as much and more than a record would cost," he said. "Obviously, regardless of cost, the local talent probably could not do justice to the subject as well as would be done by one of these suggested recordings."

Distribution, Mr. Curtis suggested, would be best handled through the established film exchanges, with the exchange managers and accessory salesmen following up to see that the theatres use the records, or arrange for a commercial sponsor. The exchanges, he said, could arrange a purchase or rental system whereby the theatres, for example, could buy the record outright for $5 or rent it for $3, the actual prices to be based on production cost.

TRANSCRIPTIONS ON HOLLYWOOD STATIONS

Warner Brothers is using 35-second electrical transcriptions on Hollywood radio stations to advertise the shows at the Hollywood and Downtown houses. Troy Orr of the Warner exploitation forces found no difficulty in lining up all but the major chain stations to play the discs at intervals in return for passes. The announcers put the discs on whenever half a minute is available, some stations five or six times a day.

Mr. Orr, who makes the transcriptions personally, has figured out that a radio listener takes at least half a minute to leave a chair and reach the dial if he wants to tune out. In half a minute a listener has heard what picture is playing at both theatres.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

Dear Herald:

We are just in receipt of a letter from Harry Huffman, president and general manager of Central Theatres, Inc., of Denver, Colorado. These theatres include such showhouses as the Aladdin, Denver, Broadway, Paramount, Rialto and Tabor, six of Denver's largest theatres.

Harry advised us that he and Mrs. Huffman had just returned from a visit to New York and Bermuda and that before going they had received a crate of fruit from Texas and he was assuming that we were responsible for this, in some way, and he desired to thank us for remembering them in this manner.

Harry is a good guesser, but it wasn't at all necessary to thank us because it was but a trifle compared with the many courtesies shown us by these two very estimable folks.

He addressed us "Dear Colonel" and said that he did not know just where and when we received the title of Colonel, whether it was in the war of the Revolution or the Civil war or possibly the war of 1812, but most likely we had been commissioned a Colonel by the Governor of Kentucky just the way Mr. Ramsaye and other celebrities had been commissioned.

Just How It Came About

For his information, and for the information of the inquiring public, we desire to state that we were commissioned a Colonel when we were in command of the forces of the Quillayute on the western slope of the Olympic mountains, west of Seattle, and when the army was encamped at the confluence of the Bogesheill and Solduc rivers, which rivers formed the Quillayute which emptied into the Pacific at Mora (an Indian town on the Quillayute Indian Reservation). The army at that time consisted (outside of the commanding officer) of Captain L. C. Allison and Lieutenant Charles Allison and our camp equipment consisted of a tent, a canoe, three trout rods, beds, kittles, pots, pans, dishes and other culinary articles, including a cocktail shaker. Our name appeared on the army roster as "Colonel of the cocktail shaker." And that's how we became a Colonel. There is a fish story connected with this army of occupation but it would be no use to tell Harry because he lives in a country where they catch fish, at least he promises us a trout dinner if we will come out and see him again. We would be delighted to do that.

Harry said he liked Bermuda very much but that Colorado still appealed to him. We are not surprised at that because Colorado always appealed to everybody. Every time we go there we dislike to go away. There is something about Colorado that no other state has (except Nebraska). Colorado, you know, borders on Nebraska and so does Kansas, and that's why Kansas is such a great state, although Sam Blair of Belleville, Mr. and Mrs. George Moore of Plainwell, Ray and Mayme Musselman of Lincoln and Ernie Sprague of Goodland, Kansas might have had something to do with it. Anyhow, we hope to go out and see Mr. and Mrs. Huffman again sometime.

"Blue Book" Almost Ready

NOTE. Before we forget about it we would like to call the attention of the projectionists to a very important matter that concerns them very vitally. Listen, you boys who want to learn how to project a picture properly. The HERALD's book department has the new edition of F. H. Richardson's "Bluebook" on projection almost ready, and in this book you will find everything you will want to know about projection. If you will address the book department of the HERALD the boys will give you all details. You will find them a swell bunch of boys and they are all sane too, in fact they have to be sane to be with the HERALD. Just address the Book Department of the HERALD at 1790 Broadway and tell the boys what you want.

Last night we went down to the Moon theatre to see "Roberta" and it is our belief that the women will fall for this in a big way because it is largely a style show. Then after that they had a Mickey Mouse and we are giving it as our opinion that Walt Disney has furnished the youth of the land more real enjoyment with his Mickey Mouse than they have ever had at picnics, including ice cream 'n everything.

Abdulla Fazalbhoy, director of the Bombay Radio Company, Ltd., and the Sound Studios (India), Ltd., and one of the most prominent figures in India, died recently at the Fitzroy Nursing Home, London, following an operation. He was a leader in the development of the motion picture and radio in India, and was associated with the introduction of Neon Sign lighting to the country. About a year and one-half ago he opened "Film City," one of the largest sound studios in India. His other companies were Sound Equipment Company, Ltd., Sub Standard Films and Equipment, Mercantile Finance Company, Ltd., and A. Fazalbhoy & Sons.

Walt will likely never be president unless he should get in the right party, but we will venture the conviction that more kids of the United States will know who he is than will know who the president is.

Then there's another thing, as Andy said to Min. It is our belief also that the "shorts" they are giving us today are what are holding up many a program. The newsreels are instructive; the cartoons are funny; the travelogues are interesting, and the scenics often remind us of trout fishing in the Rockies.

Harold Dunn and Mrs. Dunn, who operate the theatre at Valentine, Nebraska, passed through town a few days ago on their way to Omaha, and Harold didn't pay any attention to traffic lights when he went through town, which is probably the reason why he ran over an old sow and her pigs that were running loose in the streets.

Harold stopped and told us that he was going to send us a check for the HERALD for two years. We told him that was the most sensible remark he had ever made. Mrs. Dunn said that she questioned that last remark because she had heard him say a year ago that he was going to take a bath in the spring.

Loud Background Music

We may not know very much about it, in fact we will admit that we are pretty dumb, but we never could understand why it was necessary for an orchestra to play so loud in the wings as to drown out the dialogue in a picture. If we can't understand the dialogue in a picture it becomes pantomine to us. Some directors probably will say that we are crazy and others may go far enough to prove it, but in spite of that we still insist that an understanding of the dialogue is essential to enjoyment of the picture.

And then there is another thing that you boys ought to know. Some of you are regular contributors to "What the Picture Did for Me" and some of you are like a girl we had one time back in Indiana. We gave her a stick of gum and she wouldn't chew it because she was too doggone lazy. Laziness is not a sufficient excuse, in fact it is a bad excuse. To say that you don't have time to report on pictures is to assume the attitude of our Hoosier girl. You find time to read the other fellow's reports because you are benefited by them. Why not show the other fellow a little courtesy too? Think this over and if you find that we are crazy we will admit it, but in the meantime just remember that the outlook for the coming season is a good one, provided the blue pelican can roost in that "shelterbelt" and the crooners can wear an eye glass and part their hair in the middle.

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 266 (one of a special group on sound).—(A) What are the main requirements of proper storage battery maintenance which should receive the constant attention of the projectionist? (B) What are the two most important things to be remembered about lubrication?

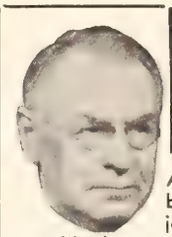
Answer to Question No. 260

Bluebook School Question No. 260 was: (A) Suppose your employer to be building a new theatre. He orders you to supervise the building of the projection room, saying you may use any material you like. There will be a space of five feet between the ceiling of the room and the ceiling of the auditorium. Just what would you do? The room is to house two motion picture projectors, an effect projector and a spot. (B) Where would you locate the vent flue?

Concerning Section A, G. Thompson says, "First, I would consult local authorities regarding the selection of materials, using only those approved by them. If they permitted I would select hollow tile six inches thick, for if it is well laid in cement-tempered lime, it offers these advantages: It is light in weight and quite soundproof when coated inside and out with sound-absorbing material. It stores a minimum of both heat and cold. It does not store and retain moisture. It permits embedding of conduit. It makes a strong thoroughly fireproof wall.

"The 'five feet between ceilings' does not stipulate the height of the projection room ceiling, therefore I cannot say this space could or could not be used to best advantage by raising the ceiling or extending the walls to the auditorium ceiling. If the five-foot space is based upon not less than eight feet from floor to ceiling of the projection room, and a rheostat room or storage space were needed, I would, if other conditions permitted, run the walls up to the auditorium ceiling and utilize the five-foot space for one of the purposes suggested.

"If such space were not needed for use, or if the walls could not for some reason be extended up, then I would construct a ceiling of three-inch hollow tile, supported by I-beams of depth and stiffness suitable to the distance they must span. The tile would be laid in cement mortar tempered with lime, and both its under and top surfaces coated with sound absorbing material of substantial thickness.



"There are many ways of constructing a flat ceiling, but after having examined most of them I have concluded this to be as good as any, if not better, for the reason that it provides a solid construction, a substantial ceiling that cannot possibly be affected by any fire that would occur in a projection room, and gives a perfectly smooth surface below. Also, it permits the laying of conduit on the upper surface without necessity for embedding it.

"As to the floor, it would depend, of course, somewhat upon what the supporting base might be. However, assuming the proper base for it (which would vary with varying conditions) I would install at least six inches of rich concrete and overlay it with not less than three-quarters of an inch of cement mixed with sharp sand in proportions of two of sand to one of cement, with equipment anchor bolts properly embedded.

"I would have all conduit properly embedded in walls, floor and ceiling, with flush type outlets properly located. I would so illuminate the room that a minimum of light would reach the front wall, and with no light fixture (lamps or indirect) in sight of the projectionist's eyes as he is in working position beside the projector. I would paint the front wall either black (non-gloss) or a very dark green or brown, the ceiling a cream color, and the walls dark green or brown. I would overlay the floor with heavy battleship linoleum, dark in color. I would have the observation ports at least 14 inches wide and twelve inches high, located at proper height and covered with plate glass held in a movable frame. I would reduce the lens ports as much as possible without interference with the light beam, and would not glass-cover them unless it was found to be necessary to retain sound. I would add six feet to the width required for the equipments named, to allow for possible future expansion. I would have the room depth sufficient to allow for at least 30 inches clear back of the projectors (A little more would be better. Say at least 36 inches.—F. H. R.). I would have the door self-closing, with one at either end in a room of the size indicated, and would not have the doors open directly into the auditorium if it could be avoided.

"In fact, Brother Richardson, I would pretty much follow the rules laid down in my Bluebook. I have followed the S.M.P.E. doings and everything else I could get hold of, but to date none of them seem to have given us anything much better than the good old Bluebook. More power to you and to it."

(B) I think D. L. Sinklow has a bit the best of it on this one. He says, "That would depend on the depth and width of the room. My idea is that fresh air should reach the whole room without creating any objectionable draughts. In a room of a size to accommodate the equipment named, I would have the air enter near the floor line at each end and leave through a vent approximately in the ceiling center."

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Ambassador

WILDERNESS MAIL: Kermit Maynard—With opening music the same as Universal's "Red Rider" serial which the producers evidently borrowed and with dialogue written by some grade school student and slow action, these do not go over. Running time, 55 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

I'LL FIX IT: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—Satisfactory performance pleased the Holt fans. Business normal. Played April 20.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

I'LL LOVE YOU ALWAYS: Nancy Carroll, George Murphy—Just so-so. May get by on bargain or cash nights. Running time, seven reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—A marvelous picture with beautiful singing, but has no appeal for the country people, cowboys, sheep herders and the like who compose most of our patrons. We were compelled to pay so much for this picture that we could hardly appreciate it at its full value feeling that we were losing plenty of money because of it.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

WESTERNER, THE: Tim McCoy, Marian Shilling—McCoy well received here. Business normal. Played April 6.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

First National

BABBITT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—This is a good show with more comedy in it than the original story. The cast is ideal and the picture will please people. Above the average show.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN: Franchot Tone, Jean Muir—This is a swell show—not a big cast nor a well-known story but a close to the heart theme that will get everyone interested and give them an evening of pleasant entertainment to take home and talk about. Story deals with the trials and troubles of a bunch of college boys who get out of college and think the world is theirs and find out it is—just around the corner.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—Another swell show. Only one will ever be the old "Diggers," but this is one of the best musicals to come to the screen this year and everyone liked it. Better plot than usual and nice music, cast and dancing. You can recommend it highly. It's a great show. —Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

LIVING ON VELVET: Kay Francis, George Brent—A very very good picture that pleased. Kay Francis is always good and in this one she is better than usual. Warren William and George Brent are good and the story is interesting. Just an excellent picture. Running time, 80 minutes. Played April 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

MARY JANE'S PA: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Any picture with Guy Kibbee seems to please here. While not as good as some it has an unusual twist that seems to get over. Very good for weekend or family night. Played April 26.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot—Standard auto race picture and they go as good as the next one. I don't say it is a big show but will pass.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Mary Astor, Lyle Talbot—Auto races, murder, a prison break and romance combined in a fast moving picture that seemed to please my family night patrons. Mary Astor is always good and Frankie Darro gives an excellent performance. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

RED HOT TIRES: Lyle Talbot, Mary Astor—If you are looking for action, spills and thrills together with a darn good story grab this and you'll be more than satisfied. Played April 27.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

SIX DAY BIKE RIDER: Joe. E. Brown—This Joe E. Brown works well in all kinds of harness. He is as big all over as his mammoth mouth. I consider him a worthwhile star and he has never failed to make my box office look healthy.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WOMEN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—Just another picture. Won't hurt at all to run it or to miss it. I still think Barbara could be a "sweet young thing" and back Janet off the screen, but then I am not picking stories for her.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

Fox

CARAVAN: Jean Parker, Loretta Young, Charles Boyer—Here is a fine picture but the box office did not think so. For some reason people just do not care for this type of picture. I myself thought that it was the best musical that has been produced for a long while. The recording was fine and the plot and acting were good. People liked it who came but it just did not seem to go. I am very sorry because I like to see pictures liked. Running time, 101 minutes. Played May 3-4.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—Seemed to hold the attention of our patrons and was well received. Fairly good mystery picture, but not outstanding.—Played April 13.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—A good picture but for some reason or other it did not do much business.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—I consider this picture as one of the best of the Will Rogers films. There was a great deal of variety in it and it was good indepenedent of Rogers. Our patrons greatly pleased. Good for any town. Played May 4. —George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—I think it was made to please every man, woman and child. All I can say give Will Rogers a big place in your theatre and he will get them in for you. He has never failed me yet. I am depending on him and I know he will never fail me. He knows how to please them all. —Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—Pulled better than "Bright Eyes."—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple—Opening night worst storm of the season yet quite a few braved it to see Shirley. Second day rain and muddy roads cut attendance to normal. If weather conditions had been anything like favorable my report would have been "turned them away." The picture will please anybody. Played April 18-19.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Tex. Small town and rural patronage.

MARIE GALANTE: Spencer Tracy, Ketti Gallian—This title doesn't help a picture any. It is a fast moving melodrama, a spy story with its locale around the Panama canal. It holds attention all the way, with a bangup thrilling ending. The drawing power of this combined with "In Old Sante Fe" was good, but I would be afraid of this alone, although it is plenty good enough where single bills are the rule. It is hard to predict what the future holds for Ketti Gallian, she acquits herself with credit in this. —J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Suffered the greatest disappointment at the box office on this of any picture I've shown in many moons. Not near as good picture as this pair is capable of producing. Too slow and draggy and they talked so much about being hungry all through the picture that it must have aroused the appetities of quite a few of the patrons as they walked out presumably looking for a cafe. Played April 28-29.—Henry Sparks, rand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Mascot

IN OLD SANTE FE: Ken Maynard, Evalyn Knapp—Ran this on a double bill with "Marie Galante" and did better business than expected. I don't know exactly which picture to give the credit but I should give the major portion of the credit to "In Old Sante Fe."—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MGM

AFTER OFFICE HOURS: Clark Gable, Constance Bennett—Not up to the Gable standard but pleased fairly well. Stuart Erwin gives the best performance of the show. Constance Bennett is dead here. The inevitable murder with Stuart Erwin furnishing the comedy. Another dust storm took all the profits. Running time, 73 minutes. Played April 20-21.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

BAND PLAYS ON, THE: Robert Young, Betty Furness—Slightly above average football story which is more concerned with the lives and characters of the players than the actual winning of games. Slightly under average business. Played April 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL: Ann Harding, Robert Montgomery—Although both Harding and Montgomery are good drawing cards for me, this took a terrible nose dive. Pleased less than 50 per cent of those who came to see it. More unfavorable comments on this than any picture in a long time. People expected to see something with this popular pair teamed together but were sorely disappointed. Might go over in larger towns but to my way of thinking it will flop in any small town. Played April 21-22.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DAVID COPPERFIELD: Frank Lawton, Freddie Bartholomew, W. C. Fields—This is undoubtedly one of the best pictures ever filmed. A wonderful cast and accuracy of detail brings to life the story with a realism seldom seen on the screen. The story is long but so interesting it does not become tiresome. While it does not appeal to some it brought out the class of people who very seldom go to a show and I think it pleased 95 per cent. I struck one of the series of dust storms Sunday night, which is usually my best night, so did not make anything on the picture but it is the kind of show I am proud to exhibit. It is certainly the answer to the Legion of Decency's plea for better pictures and deserves the support of everyone interested in better pictures. Freddie Bartholomew is especially good and Lionel Barrymore gives his best performance. The storm at sea is a highlight of the picture.—Running time, 133 minutes. Played April 12-13-14.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—This is one of the finest pictures I have every played. Screen it before you show it to a cross section of your town. Running time, 105 minutes.—D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn. Family patronage.

NIGHT IS YOUNG, THE: Ramon Novarro, Evelyn Laye—Was agreeably surprised in this one. Novarro's pictures have been so poor lately that I was afraid of this one, but it is excellent and pleased. Wonderful music, some good song hits, good dancing and comedy make this much better than some of the specials. Running time, 62 minutes. Played April 24-25.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SEQUOIA: Jean Parker, Russell Hardie—Nothing

but the best of compliments on this. It should please everyone and do business. Running time, 73 minutes. —D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn. Family patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Ricardo Cortez, Virginia Bruce—Another murder and am I tired of them? Went over just fairly well. No bouquets and no bricks. Just another picture. Running time, 75 minutes. Played April 17-18.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

WHILE THE PATIENT SLEPT: Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee—Guy Kibbee and Aline MacMahon make this murder too funny to be tragic. This team is popular with my patrons and as usual they pleased. Running time, 61 minutes. Played April 10-11.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Monogram

HOOSIER SCHOOLMASTER, THE: Charlotte Henry, Norman Foster—This is a swell show. In my opinion much better acting and direction than "Girl of the Limberlost." The story is very close to the hearts of a lot of our Legion men and it would make a swell tieup with them. I sold the officers of the local Legion on it and allowed the 1935 Legion card to admit all members and their families and almost paid film rental on that one group.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MILLION DOLLAR BABY: Arline Judge, Ray Walker, Jimmy Fay—This is a fair Monogram picture. Will please and people will enjoy seeing Hollywood make a little fun of Shirley Temple. With another year's work the little boy will be good. Now he looks like a poor imitation and as that is what he is supposed to be the story and picture go over O. K.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

TOMORROW'S YOUTH: John Miljan, Martha Sleeper, Dickie Moore—Above average program offering and pleased a majority of our patrons. The boy Dickie Moore is very good. Played April 27.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

ALL THE KING'S HORSES: Mary Ellis, Carl Brisson—Some big interesting parts in this picture. All in all call it O. K.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CAR 99: Fred MacMurray, Ann Sheridan—Racing automobiles running wild trying to catch a bank robber. Do you think you can make a dollar out of such bunk as this? If so go ahead and book it and starve your wife and kids. Nuf said.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—A dandy picture that should please anywhere. As clean as you would wish yet business was off. On check up I found it was the title, as folks were afraid it would be too risque. Played April 7-8.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby—My folks must have grown tired of Bing's crooning as they don't come out to hear him any more. This was a Sunday-Monday flop for me. Played April 14-15.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

KISS AND MAKE UP: Cary Grant, Genevieve Tobin—Ran this rather old but title seemed to draw younger set in and to please them. Played April 4-5. —Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—Pass the orchids to all who had part in making this. For a red-blooded adventure drama it will be hard to surpass this. There is no romance in this at all but that will not be missed in the sweep of drama that this unfolds. Franchot Tone delivers a likeable performance that is a triumph. Sir Guy Standing is superb as the Colonel. Douglas Dumbrille, who is listed ninth in the cast delivers a fine role as the villain. Of course, all do good work. Gary Cooper does all that is expected of him and that can be said of the entire cast. Business the first day rather disappointing, the second day considerably better than the first, which is a rare occurrence.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—This is another picture of family appeal that my folks liked a lot. It was a good show back in the Cohen and Kelly days and it is still good entertainment. With W. C. Fields it would have been a riot.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MENACE: Paul Cavanagh—Just a fair mystery picture that failed to draw. Played April 6.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields—Booth Tarkington's "Magnolia" made by the producers of "The River of Romance" into one of the real entertainments of the season. Gail Patrick tries to fill the shoes of June Collyer. Joan Bennett makes more admirers. Bing breaks down a lot of prejudice and W. C. Fields entertains everyone so they will go home humming Bing's songs and thinking of Joan and with a smile for the Captain. It was 100 per cent entertainment.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

OLD-FASHIONED WAY, THE: W. C. Fields—My patrons must have decided that this would be so old fashioned they wouldn't care for it and stayed at home and played bridge. Played April 16-17.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ONE HOUR LATE: Joe Morrison, Helen Twelvetrees—Good programmer. Morrison has a pleasant voice. Ordinary business. Played April 13.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—A pretty fair picture for those who do not care.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

READY FOR LOVE: Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino—Just an average program picture that will get by when your patrons are not expecting much. Played April 23-24.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland—Here is a picture that pleases all and creates word of mouth advertising. Splendidly produced with excellent cast. Deserves best playing time. The Gettysburg speech by Laughton deserves a cheer. Can't go too strong on this one. Played April 19.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zazu Pitts—This is high class comedy and will be appreciated by all. It has fine direction, great story, nice cast and real entertainment. Not an action western but a clever satire.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Some have reported unfavorably on this one but I place it way out in front. Do not see how a picture of this kind could be any better. There are a lot of real performers in the cast and Raft is 100 per cent. Up to this time I would not admit Carole Lombard was up to the class she was set up in, but in this she does a performance that cannot be equaled by anyone. Business good three days last part of week.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant —Good program picture. Did average business. Played April 20.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant —This pleased 100 per cent and though the weather was bad, business was about normal. Played April 27.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

RKO

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley—I call it a slow moving picture. Audience sitting still looking for something to turn up that might be different. But it continues on and on with this Anne Shirley as the whole cheese, with enough of gab to wreck the nerves of Frankenstein.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

CHASING YESTERDAY: Anne Shirley—This is a followup for "Anne of Green Gables" and as is usually the case not nearly as good. The story, of course, is well known, but not by motion picture fans. Needs a tieup to "sell" or at least needs more pep than most pictures as the cast is not box office yet.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GIGOLETTE: Adrienne Ames, Ralph Bellamy—Nothin' to write home about but nothin' to fear either. It is just another show to run in on that Bank Nite or two-for-one nite or whatever "nite" you may be using trying to kill the rest of the week. —Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson, Hale Hamilton —This is one of the family type pictures that will please and make friends among the Parent Teachers' organization. Ideal for tieup with such organization. —Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey, "Spanky" McFarland—One of the funniest pictures we have shown for many a day. Lots of comedy and acting and the fun making of two principal comedians is less exaggerated than usual. The small boy almost steals the show. The comedy is good and clean. Played April 27.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—As good and by far the cleanest comedy this pair has produced. Did not draw as well as expected. Played April 9-10.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—Made to order for small towns, but scarlet fever epidemic kept everybody away. I'm going into the chain letter business until this blows over. Running time, seven reels.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—This picture goes to town. It is as near a perfect picture as can be made. It has plenty of box office and the kind of entertainment that pleases all classes. Business better than average four days first part of week. This little Weidler girl looks like a natural to me.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart—Great story, fine direction and fine performance, but the public seemed to think it a kid show. I did a nice matinee business, but the rest of the run fell down. Found that everyone liked it. Talk it up to the Parent Teachers. It will please them all.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—This was very good entertainment and had a lot of favorable comment. The plot was simple enough that the crowd could follow it and that helps. The mystery story that is so well hidden in Hollywood trickery that the crowd is surprised doesn't have the appeal.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD, THE: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—I am personally a great admirer of Miriam Hopkins, but this picture did not please so well as it should. Rather slow, lots of conversation, and too much drinking. Our local priest walked out in disgust at the drinking. We can't see what entertainment there is in seeing our screen actors take a drink every time they turn around. It makes the drunk go out to get a real one and the nice people go out for good.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Irene Dunne, Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—The best to date of the musical shows. Ginger Rogers is "in." This show holds my house record for the best third day business I have ever done and "ever" is a long time.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson—This is another picture along the family type that the "Grand Old Girl" and "Laddie" crowd will enjoy. It is well directed and a fairly interesting story of modern family life.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

United Artists

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young —This gave me less profit than the chain letters. We played the picture and sent out our dimes on chain letters, but no returns from either.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebold, Iowa. General patronage.

CLIVE OF INDIA: Ronald Colman, Loretta Young —This is a great show and if it had come out ahead of the "Bengal Lancers" it would have gone down in history. "Lancers" stole a lot of its thunder, but "Clive" is fine entertainment and will do business.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

FOLIES BERGERE: Maurice Chevalier, Merle Oberon—By all odds the best Chevalier picture for some time, very elaborate and has some very beautiful and splendidly done dance numbers. Will appeal to women but not so good for the stronger sex. Better than average business. Played April 24.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

KID MILLIONS: Eddie Cantor, Ann Sothern—I got behind this and also gave prominent place to the single reel, "The Dionne Quintuplets" which I had on the same program and did much better than average business. It moves fast and lively and the finish in Technicolor puts it over with a bang. All in all a good Eddie Cantor picture, which should more than please his following.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

WEDDING NIGHT, THE: Anna Sten, Gary Cooper —This picture has a splendid cast and star value to get them out. Story good and down to earth and especially good for rural patronage. You can't go wrong on this one. Played April 28.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

WE LIVE AGAIN: Anna Sten, Fredric March—But Anna Sten will if they give her another picture like her next one. She will fall down stairs and break her neck and the exhibitors of my town will breath easier when the high pressure boys come out from the big city with their United Artists-Goldwyn pictures. For them what likes drama this is almost as good as the "Resurrection" of some years ago. I am not sour. I think the most completely satisfying picture I have played this year was "Count of Monte Cristo," but Anna Sten, Marlene Dietrich, Garbo and a couple of others are out.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Universal

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—I do not know why they make pictures like this one. Tiresome, silly and a big way to disgust theatre-going people. One girl and three middle aged men constitute the works and they keep busy from start to finish gabbing at each other till near the hour of midnight.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

IMITATION OF LIFE: Claudette Colbert, Warren William—This production has the reputation of being a wonderful picture. I was a little skeptical about its drawing power. Played April 20.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

LET'S BE RITZY: Lew Ayres—Old and a last minute substitution but pleased fairly well. Played April 20.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Esther Ralston—Here is a fast moving picture with plenty of comedy and wit. Good cast and story. Will please most everyone. Played April 24.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

PRINCESS O'HARA: Jean Parker, Chester Morris —A pleasing picture but no special star value to draw them in. Story value lacking and drags in spots. Played April 14.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

ROCKY RHODES: Buck Jones—I did not think so much of this picture.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Well, I can say nothing big for this one. The only big sensation I got out of it was the checker Warners sent here to stand over us like we were a set of crooks. It seems we theatre owners have our every day ups and downs with the producers. When we get a picture they think will make us a little cash they boost us with a checker.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

WHEELS OF DESTINY: Ken Maynard—A very good western but our service from Denver spoiled the picture for us, by shipping it as a substitute, giving us no time at all to advertise it properly. The best picture in the world is unacceptable to the public if they come to see a different picture and feel that they have been fooled.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni, Bette Davis—Nothing so wonderful, but it will please.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons,, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

BORDERTOWN: Paul Muni—I will never quite understand why it is that Paul Muni, the best actor on the screen, doesn't draw better. In "Bordertown," neither he nor Bette Davis could have been excelled in their roles. Played April 13.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—One of the best of action pictures. Has plot, cast, direction, thrills and comedy. Will please the crowd.—Chas. Lee Hyyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

DEVIL DOGS OF THE AIR: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—A fast moving, thrill packed romance of the air with the background of the San Nicho marine base. Some excellent airplane shots and the more or less good natured rivalry of Pat O'Brien and James Cagney furnishes plenty of comedy. A good picture that will please any audience. Running time, 86 minutes. Played April 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

O'Brien—Well, it is truly an airplane picture. When I say airplane I mean airplanes and I do believe pictures like this have seen their last days. For me they do not draw at my theatre.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

FLORENTINE DAGGER, THE: Donald Woods, Margaret Lindsay—Another good Warner Bros. mystery show and not "terrorizing." Interesting with some comedy to break the spell.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

HAROLD TEEN: Hal LeRoy, Rochelle Hudson, Patricia Ellis—A great little picture for the young folks. We used it for the Junior-Senior celebration after their banquet and many extras came in just to see the sweet girl graduates.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

RIGHT TO LIVE: George Brent, Josephine Hutchinson—Just another picture, well directed, well acted and will satisfy those who like heavy stuff as it is well done. Ending is not oppressive and the crowd liked it, but I just can't fit heavy drama into my programs without having it depress my box office.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. C. General patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Warren Williams—A court house picture where the Judge uses the hammer for order. How do you think you can make a dollar for your theatre on a picture like this? I have exhibited more than one hundred of this class of pictures and I have got enough.—Walter Odom, Sr., and Sons, Dixie Theatre, Durant, Miss. General patronage.

SECRET BRIDE, THE: Barbara Stanwyck is a good drawing card for us most especially with the woman and this picture will please her admirers and any others you can get in to see it. Played April 11-12.—Henry Sparks, Grand Theatre, Cooper, Texas. Small town and rural patronage.

ST. LOUIS KID: James Cagney, Patricia Ellis—Here is one that they all liked. Jimmie gets slapped good and plenty in this and the little lady got a hand every time she handed him one. People like him and by making him take it a little they made him even more popular by this picture. I held it until after "Devil Dogs" and believe that helped do business.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—Excellent comedy and the best Rudy Vallee production we have played. Drew only average business and did not pay for the checking. Played April 7.—Russell Anderson, Casino Theatre, Gunnison, Utah. Small town patronage.

SWEET MUSIC: Rudy Vallee, Ann Dvorak—This is swell entertainment but didn't do the business I expected of it. People just don't like our radio stars and that is that. The show is one that pleased those who came and you can heartily recommend it.—Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

EIMER STEPS OUT: Broadway Comedies—Pretty fair comedy but not outstanding enough to suit a special occasion where we had it booked with "One Night of Love."—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SCRAPPY'S TOY SHOP: Scrappy Cartoon—Just a fair cartoon. The kids seemed to like it but it would have gone over better for us in the Christmas season. —F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

SLOW POKE: Song Hit Stories—Very poor and recording not good. Acting simple and not even funny. Running time, 10 minutes.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

THREE BEARS: Terry-Toons—Here is a short one can play up and get the child patronage out to see. The life story of the famous three bears which every child knows or should know about. Several children came just for the comedy when they heard that it was the Three Bears. Recording very well done.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Special patronage.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH: Terry Toons—very good short and liked by all. Recording very good.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, rand Rapids, Mich. Special ANNIVERSARY TROUBLE: Our Gang—An Our Gang comedy that pleased old and young at my "family night" show. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

CHASES OF PIMPLE STREET: Charley Chase—I thought this one very poor, but it seems to please. Guess I am prejudiced against Charley. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

FAT'S FATHEAD: Charley Chase—An unusually good Charley Chase short. Running time, two reels. —Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

HARK YE, HARK: Headliners—The novelty dance was the best part of it. Running time, 10 minutes.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

RKO

SINISTER STUFF: Cubby the Bear Cartoons—A fair cartoon with the big bad wolf.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

WELL CURED HAMS: Headliner Series—A good actor who visits a place where every one is crazy. Just a fair two-reel.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Universal

STRANGER THAN FICTION: Some interesting scenes in this picture and a nice variety, but the sound was very poor. Explanations seemed to be made with poor enunciation and voice.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

TIDBITS: Universal Comedies—Very good variety of musical numbers, but the supposed-to-be-funny little skit at the end about a dentist spoiled the general effect for me.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

Vitaphone

ALONG FLIRTATION WALK: Merrie Melodies—A funny "Merrie Melody" in color. Pleased the kiddies. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

GOOD MORNING EVE: Broadway Brevities—Was disappointed in this colored two-reeler. Thought it would be an attraction and now we are afraid the Legion of Decency will be banning our shows. Has suggestive lines that we were ashamed of.—F. Rayburn, Arcade Theatre, Newell, S. D. Small town patronage.

HAIL COLUMBIA: E. M. Newman—An especially good "See America First" short. Running time, one reel.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

SYNCOPATED CITY: Broadway Brevities—Good music, good singing, good dancing make this an all around good short. Running time, two reels.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kan. Small town patronage.

Serial

Universal

RED RIDER, THE: Buck Jones—On our eleventh chapter and going strong. Was never sold very strong on serials but this baby is doing its stuff. Running time, two reels each chapter.—E. C. Arehart, Princess Theatre, Odebolt, Iowa. General patronage.

Frank K. Speidell, director of Audio Productions' industrial division in charge of the sales, creative and production departments, presented a paper on "The New Medium," at the final spring meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held Wednesday night at the Hotel Pennsylvania in New York.

Predicts Ad Films in Sound Will Revolutionize Selling

The sound motion picture as an advertising medium sponsored by a national manufacturer on behalf of his products "will undoubtedly do more to revolutionize advertising and selling technique within the next decade than any other medium ever has done since advertising and selling became a major activity in our commercial structure," declared A. J. Wilson, of Audio Productions, an Erpi affiliate, at the Advertising Affiliation convention, last Saturday, at the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh.

Mr. Wilson observed that sound motion pictures increase the power of sales and buying suggestion tenfold, but added that they should be used not as a substitute for regular advertising mediums, but as a supplement, and should be recommended to advertisers only in this way.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

STOP GIVING IT AWAY

Some time back this department ran an excellent analysis on the pass evil written by Fred Larkin, of the Paramount, St. Cloud, Minnesota, in which was set forth a number of excellent reasons why the unrestricted giving of "skulls" should be checked summarily.

Today, to judge from many reports that reach this desk, guest ticket distribution is taking on proportions of the dime chain letter gag. Managers who should know better are offering ducats freely to build up and publicize contests, previews and special matinees with the abandon of a sailor on a spree. It's time for a halt.

Larkin's specific criticisms of the pass industry (for that's what it seems to have become) are sound enough to bear repeating. He says, in part:

The majority of the people do not appreciate something for nothing. This lowers the appraisal of the business institution which can afford to give away its merchandise or its services.

When people have enjoyed special dispensation, they become like the boy who has taken the jam from the cupboard; when he is stopped, he makes a terrible fuss. . . .

Friends brought with passes are not substantial friends; in fact, they have very little in common with our business except to see how much they can get out of it. . . .

Business on a giveaway basis will create more criticism than one where there is a definite charge. . . .

Many of our passes have been given by department heads in consummating a deal. I do not believe this is necessary, and the intrinsic worth of a pass is not large enough to overcome much money or principle. It really is a confession of the weakness in many cases of our position. . . .

These potent findings may now well be extended to the prevalent and lamentable procedure of throwing preview parties to which are invited city officials, heads of women's clubs, school superintendents and teachers, society leaders, and others supposedly influential. Especially does this apply to the schools, what with the increase in quality pictures and the eagerness of managers to obtain classroom endorsement.

Discreet use of passes and invitations for contests and previews are not to be condemned unconditionally, but the danger of almost indiscriminate giving can no longer be discounted under the guise of exploitation.

Courses in the principles of economics are suggested for theatremen unacquainted with the primary fundamentals of profit and loss which, need it be said, apply equally and inevitably to the theatre as well. One pass, essentially, means a loss of one potential admission at the box office.

Entertainment is made to be sold—let's stop giving it away.

WE TELL A STORY

Again home office generals shout war agin' the star rating system. The Paul Reveres are riding. Signal fires flame from mountain top to mountain top. Bugles blow. The major advertising men are combining, sez Red Kann, to lay off stars in newspaper copy and on marquees.

Okay, if it works, but agreement or no, the temptation to blazon a four-star rating may again prove too powerful to resist. It reminds us of a story.

A bit player in Hollywood got himself a break and as his fortunes advanced, began to ritz and finally snubbed old cronies who had been of help in the lean days. But it seems the lad could not stand success and eventually landed back at the ladder's bottom. The old pals of course kept away but after admitting to all his sins and promising faithfully to act the man, the bad boy was forgiven by his friends.

He behaved well for quite a stretch until his luck again turned for the better. Chosen for a fat part in a major production, the friends feted his good fortune and at the crest of the evening the lad was called upon for a speech. There were tears in his eyes as he responded.

"Pals," he wept, "I know this is a terrible thing to say, but I feel that heel feeling coming on again."

This week's Take-A-Bow department features Colonel Howard Waugh of Warner Kentucky division for being the first district chief to have his boys bring in two consecutive Quigley Silver plaques, Bill Reilly of Henderson, Ky., finishing first in March and Bill Hendricks of Memphis, Tenn., doing likewise in April. Tie that, gents.

Headline in the N. Y. Tribune: "Custard Pastry Ban To Be Asked in Westchester." But not, let us hope, in Hollywood.

A-Mike Rogge

Hendricks Thinks Up 'Baboona' Nudist Club

No doubt Colonel Bill Hendricks, of the Warner, Memphis, Tenn., decided that with the tropical atmosphere of "Baboona" a nudist stunt would be in order, and he figured one out as follows: Starting a week ahead, Bill ran a series of teaser display ads that announced formation of a nudist colony, each day's copy building up the suspense. Toward the last, he advertised a Ford would be at a certain corner on a specified evening, and those interested in joining were asked to follow the car to "club-headquarters."

Newspapers reporting the story stated crowds of pedestrians and autos joined in and formed a parade which of course wound up at the theatre, in the lobby of which was a cage full of live monkeys, the cage labeled "Baboona Nudist Colony."

Duplicate Number Gag Clicks

Unique variations of the duplicate ticket gag was put on at local Better Homes exhibition, where tiein was made with one of the firms represented to distribute numbered slips carrying picture copy. Slips were attached to lapels and persons locating others with duplicate numbers of those they were wearing received tickets to the show. Amount of duplicates of course were limited and quite a bit of extra publicity was obtained.

Lobby and marquee stunts of course were numerous, starting with a leopard from the zoo and the above mentioned monks. Front was very tropical with a flock of local negroes adorned and dressed as African natives who also paraded round town on bannered float. Patrons were invited to imitate jungle roars over lobby dictaphone, records given those making them.

Marquee gag that drew attention, a black-magic stunt (see photo), in which men garbed in white spelled out picture name with white letters assisted by man in solid black who, against black background, appeared invisible, making letters as he moved appear to do so magically. Worked even better at night.

Bill even went for a "Baboona" dance at prominent night club, girl doing number and club making up newsreel shot which was included in the regular theatre newsreel. Night club took space to plug stunt and plugged it otherwise.

And of course there were girls and girls. One worked giant jigsaw puzzle in window, another worked streets with water-stencil, trio tossed lettered swim-balls at indoor pools, and a group from Bill's stage show, after each performance, week before, closed in one with lettered cards, carrying advance copy.

Promotes Special Excursion

Transportation angles also were worked. "Baboona" excursion train was plugged within a wide area by the railroad, and a tiein with airline was made by screen picture on a regular run. Both stunts broke stories and picture in the dailies air preview being a first-timer locally.

Papers also cooperated splendidly on the pressbook free Africa trip, various radio tieups were made, and Hendricks even thought up the gag of planting a six sheet on the ceiling of a popular barber shop for the observation of patrons while being shaved.

Hendricks' Black Magic Stunt

Phone Company Goes For 'Ruggles' Tiein

Working with his promotionally inclined telephone company, Sid Holland of the Elco, Elkhart, Ind., planted ace operators in best window of town for a week ahead of "Ruggles," making hundreds of calls daily plugging the date. Girls worked in shifts, copy in window tying in the advantages of the telephone in spreading a message.

Variation of the country-nite party was put across with local grocery chain furnishing all the prizes, advertising it heavily and putting on a street bally with boys dressed as Ruggles and Laughton carrying poster announcing the stunt. Other ballys were old fashioned bannered hack, butler on horseback, and the "deaf-man" gag, pulled in cars and buses.

Girls Work House-to-House

Sid followed up his phone gag with a team of girls working house-to-house having residents sign their acknowledgment of picture and date. Easter egg hunt was also productive, park officials obligingly changing the name of a monument temporarily to "Red Gap Rock," from which hunt started.

Contests, too, proved their worth. The caricature Laughton drawing idea in the form of heralds was worked through a number of stores, and with cooperation of boys' club Sid sent out programs to all homes, boys working in districts. Programs contained space of back page, and contest was on how many times entrants could fill in the name of the picture. Contest heralds were also stuffed in Sunday papers.

Lobby idea included the stunt of filling the card-flush, with dealer an usher in Ruggles outfit. Funniest gag lines contest was also worked with stills on poster in lobby.

Numerous ace windows were secured for tiein displays, and Sid hooked up with little theatre group to broadcast the radio script. Stage topper was resemblance contest, entrants doing star impersonations.

First Aid Booth in Lobby

Emotion Test Hits On "Frankenstein"

Featured in the newspaper publicity campaign on "Bride of Frankenstein" at the Palace, Chicago, was what the RKO showmen termed an emotion test, successfully engineered with local Institute of Juvenile Research. Test was made with behavior research photopolygraph, a machine somewhat like the "lie-detector," and subjects were two girls, of five and 25 years of age, stunt put on while they watched picture. Daily carried photos and stories.

Newspaper drawing contest, from the press book, was also put across, entrants required to fill-in the face of Frankenstein's bride. Much space was promoted on this angle.

Also clicking was the press book lobby thrill stunt, a first aid booth (see photo) with two registered nurses in attendance. Reported were three legitimate scare casualties on opening day deemed good enough for another break in the dailies. Thrill chart lobby poster with flasher lights also commanded attention.

High spot of front was animated hanging sign with cutout figures of monster and bride, and as monster's arm was raised body of woman rose from a coffin. Other chill arousers were a series of trailers used four weeks ahead.

And just to vary the pace evidently, window in leading Loop department store was promoted, with a professional mannikin modeling evening gowns, surrounded by colored enlargements from the picture.

Manager Frank Smith worked the campaign with Johnny Joseph, RKO division publicity chief, and Duke Hickey, Universal exploiteer.

Walton League Ties In With Spaeth on "Sequoia"

G. F. Spaeth, Lyric, Duluth held a special children's "Sequoia" matinee, with officer of Isaak Walton League contacting junior chapters to attend in body. Officer also talked informally about the picture at Medical Arts luncheon, plugging the date.

Through arrangement with local chief of foresters, all rangers were notified of playdates. Minister endorsed picture from pulpit and endorsement was run in church bulletin. Announcements were sent to boy and girl scout headquarters urging attendance and advance screening was held for various civic groups, leading citizens and otherwise.

HENDRICKS, HOLLAND TAKE APRIL AWARDS

Memphis Warner Manager Second Winner to Repeat; Indianan Is Chosen for Bronze

by A-MIKE VOGEL

Crashing through with one of those sock campaigns, for which he is noted, Colonel Bill Hendricks, 1934 Grand Award winner, takes the spot in the Quigley April competitions. By majority vote of the judges, George Schaefer, Paramount Pictures; J. R. Vogel, Loew Theatres, and Bruce Gallup, Columbia Pictures, Bill's campaign on Fox's "Baboona" at the Warner Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., was chosen for the Silver plaque.

Not a newcomer to the Award competitions, but a first-time winner, is Sid Holland, who, representing the independently operated Elco Theatre, of Elkhart, Ind., was voted the Bronze plaque, for second place. His entry was on Paramount's "Ruggles of Red Gap."

Finishing up front in April makes Hendricks the second winner to repeat, he tying for his inaugural honors in December of last year. Fuzzy Knight is the other Round Tabler with two notches in his gun.

Two campaigns were judged strong enough for the April First Mentions. These certificates go to Bernard W. Simon, manager, Loew's Metropolitan Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., on MGM's "Reckless," and to Marvin Stiver, manager, and Al Zimbalist, publicity director, West End Lyric Theatre, St. Louis, Mo.. on Paramount's "Ruggles of Red Gap." Simon shares the honor with publicist Eddie Dowden.

Simon made a nice race of it for his first Award win, as did both Zimbalist and Stiver, whose entry also took them out of this year's maiden class, their current classification being the highest the St. Louis Warnerites have yet reached.

The Honorables as to be expected took a lot of time before those listed in column to left were finally selected. It so happens that the number of campaigns so designated equalled last month's number.

Independents and subsequent situations are included in the Honorables which represents entrants who are new to the competition and also those who have clicked after previous tries.

The judging committee called attention this month to the tendency by entrants to get away from elaboration in preparing campaigns, this being regarded favorably rather than otherwise. As one judge pointed out, what the campaign contained and not how it was gotten up counted most, which thought is passed along for general consideration.

An attractive lobby display was constructed in the form of a whole town with large wooden houses, autos, lake, ducks, small boats, people, animals, etc., etc., and Wade reports the layout quite a success.

Professor of aeronautics classes at high school cooperated with Bill Crull at the Majestic, Evansville, Ind., on "Devil Dogs," recommending picture to pupils and discoursing on aviation scenes. For his lobby Bill promoted use of real plane and bannered machines at airport with "Devil Dog" copy.

For "Little Colonel" baby shop tied in, using special Temple hangers throughout store, distributed Shirley autographed photos and pins and plugged date over daily broadcast and in newspaper advertising.

CRULL'S LETTER TO HOUSE STAFF

The proper conduct of personnel is of course too important to be taken for granted. Theatremen appreciative of the benefits to be obtained by keeping their service on a high plane use many favorable devices, a most recent instance being the following open letter from W. L. Crull, manager, Loew Majestic Theatre, Evansville, Ind., to his house staff.

Do you know that you do more to sell house personality and good will than anyone else about the theatre? You do. Do you know that a bright and easy smile for every patron is going to help make each one feel the more at home? It is! Do you know that an honest effort to serve the public reflects itself creditably on the entire house staff? No matter what the service, no matter how trivial, it is well worth while because it wins another friend for the theatre. Let your service be unassuming rather than oppressively formal. Never lose patience, no matter how unreasonable the patron may be.

Neatness and a gracious manner are the requisites of a good usher; if you are an usher be a good one, make your manager proud of you and of the smooth manner with which you handle the crowds. Don't go at your work laggardly—snap into it and keep it snappy every minute you are on the job. The same applies to the cashier—neatness and graciousness of manner are also the requisites of a good cashier! Do not entertain friends while on duty or carry on personal telephone conversations, eat, chew gum, read or anything that leaves the impression that you are not on the job. Remember that the first impression is usually the deciding one, Whether it be good or bad and it is a fact that poor service, (which might be thoughtlessness on our part) will mar a patron's entertainment, regardless of how good the picture is, or how perfect the appointment or balance of the service, some trivial act will leave a bad taste in the patron's mouth, so to speak, and you have lost a fan.

The entire industry when summed up means three things, or depends upon three things—getting a patron in—out—and last but not least, getting him back again. And since you are the contact for the entire industry you can readily realize the importance of real service.. Remember, some of the country's greatest showmen started as ushers and rose steadily to the top.

"I DO NOT LIKE THE TERM BALLY"

—R. M. THOMASON, CRYSTAL THEATRE, ELLIS, KANSAS

SAYS EXPLOITATION IS FITTING TITLE

DEAR MIKE:

After reading the ideas of the two managers who differed on the use of "ballyhoo" in the small community, may I state my opinions?

First, I do not like the term "ballyhoo"—it seems to belittle and cheapen the theatre by its use—why not call it "exploitation?" Here, in this small community, with a drawing trade of about 2,500, we naturally set a low budget for advertising.

Our routine here consists of the regular theatre front paper and usually five one sheets, some in special frames at the main entrances of the town, others in vacant windows, window cards in the store windows, and our weekly program in the local and neighboring newspapers.

We advertise that point which we think will appeal mostly to the patrons—if we have a bargain program, we advertise the price over the picture—if the star is known to pull, we use the name over the title of the picture. During these dust storms we use a catchline in our ads that the air in the theatre is free from dust, water-washed and clean.

We have five changes of program weekly, which lessen considerably the amount of exploitation that we would use on less changes per week. In other words the duration of the picture would have bearing on the amount of exploitation I could give it, as the budget would not have to cover so many changes. We deliver our heralds inside of the local and out of town newspapers that are delivered here. In this way we are sure of getting them into the homes, and get surer distribution. The newsboys do this for us gladly. Besides our monthly calendar covering all rural and city routes in this trade area, we carry weekly programs in the neighboring cities' newspapers as all the newspapers in this vicinity are small and are weeklies.

Puts on Campaigns Weekly

Our exploitation, with normal conditions, consists of getting behind of at least one picture a week, and advertising it in some novel way—sometimes we work out novelty heralds, printed locally—sometimes window displays in store windows—other times street stunts for the Saturday shoppers. I am a firm believer in tie-ups, for they can do no harm, cost nothing but the time to organize them, and we're paid for that by our employer. Tie-ups, if worked out properly, will help strengthen good feeling between the theatre and those who co-operate with the tie-ups. I have made many friends here that I would have hardly known if we hadn't worked together on some tie-up. The schools, especially, I work with and tie-up with frequently. They sell tickets, announce the attraction at their assemblies, and really bring business that would otherwise be lost. Of course, the proper picture must be used with these tie-ups. If of an educational nature, the schools are contacted; if religious, the churches; if sophisticated and stylish, the apparel stores, etc.

The goal that we strive for in exploitation is to get the people talking and thinking about the picture, and to get the nature of the picture and its most outstanding points in their mind. It takes some change, or some novel idea to accomplish this. Animation in any display, lobby, marquee or store, seems to be an excellent attention-getter. Occasionally we play up some local event into our exploitation, and find that this gets excellent results.

Advocates Advertising Change

It seems to me, in this constantly changing business, where we sell entirely different types of merchandise—in my case, five times a week—that there should be used canstantly changing methods of advertising. Change, to me, is the keynote of success, for everything in the world is judged by comparison. In other words, if we used the same well-planned exploitation that on being used the first time was highly successful, successively over a period of time, it would be little better than the ordinary routine—it would merely raise the standard of advertising. But if we varied it with each change, to fit the picture at hand, it would be more effective—and again if we discontinued exploitation altogether for a short time, and then brought on a new style completely different from the other, it would be still more effective—as the degree of contrast from less exploitation to great exploitation would be more.

Another element to be taken into consideration is that the picture selected for extra publicity be chosen as one that the particular patrons of the particular theatre will enjoy. We try to watch reactions on different stars and pictures here, to form an opinion as to which are the best liked. These type pictures and stars are given extra publicity.

In short, I believe in exploitation for the small town and think that this theatre is an excellent example, as we survive quite well, despite no wheat crop this year and constant dust storms. Since the dust storms we have not had normal conditions so I have not attempted to plan any campaign ahead, but I do insert novelties and use tieups at every available opportunity.

Hoping this letter will create new food for thought among the "small town" managers.—R. M. THOMASON, Manager, Crystal Theatre, Ellis, Kansas.

Stevens' Nine-Dollar "Roberta" Front

FAVORS ADDED EFFORT EVEN IN SMALLER SPOTS

DEAR MIKE:

In your HERALD you invited the small town exhibitor to express his viewpoints on exploitation.

I am a firm believer of exploitation, even though I am located in a small town, Hillsboro, Ill., with a population of 4,850. I agree with Frank Goldquist (Goldie) to a certain extent and employ practically the same ideas and methods of putting over my shows. Every Sunday sees a big picture starting a three-day run and am playing them plenty "hot." It is impossible in the small towns to have an artist on the staff, but like myself some small town managers can handle the brush.

I was fortunate in getting "Roberta" set for an Illinois premiere, which meant that I was going to really have to sell it to my patrons. Two weeks before play date most of the towns people had never heard of it. I mapped out a campaign, good and effective, but inexpensive, and three days before play date I put up a front which I built at a cost of $9.00. Had picture set for three days but HAD to hold it over for the fourth day and broke all house records.

Flash Obtains Results

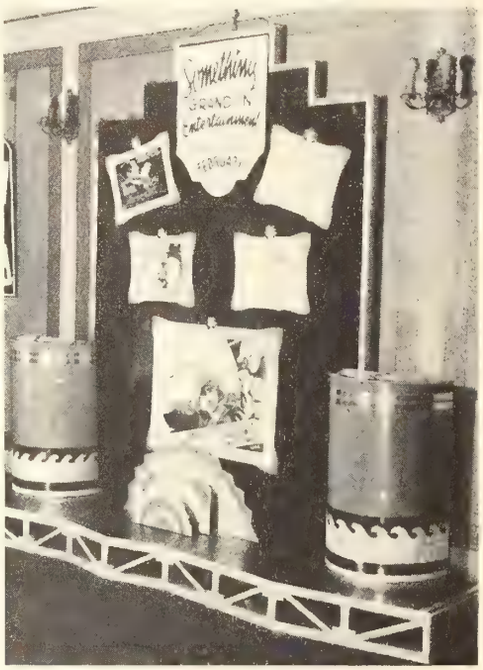
We small towners can not have a front with flash and color on all pictures, but I can say this, that I notice whenever I do put up a front or some other unusual form of exploitation that I never fail to get results at the box office. I build my flash fronts in a way that they can be repainted and altered somewhat and used on several other pictures, which reduces the cost. Compo board is cheap and all it takes is a little effort.

In my opinion, the average small town exhibitor just takes for granted that the public knows the theatre is there and they will come in; it is true they will, but when one puts a little added effort into it and gets people into his theatre that are not the regulars, then it looks like even in the smaller spots exploitation pays.

Most of my big Sunday pictures are so "hot" that it is necessary for me to sell them to my patrons, but I try to employ different methods in doing so. Window cards if used every week get monotonous as well as other forms of advertising, so I maintain that a good flash front at different times not only wakes the public up but arouses their interest and makes them eager to come in.—H. E. STEVENS, Manager, Grand Theatre, Hillsboro, Ill.

WHAT POSTER ARTISTS ARE DOING

Austin Northcutt, artist, Strand Theatre, Laurel, Miss., is responsible for this Rogers poster. Color scheme: black for the eyebrows, eyes and shadows; reflected highlight on right side of face was done in lavender, with hair a combination of all colors. The best part of this poster is that title can be changed for new pictures.



This attractive poster of Carole Lombard in "Rumba" is the art work of C. M. Griefenburg at the Elks Theatre in Rapid City, S. D. "Grief" is no newcomer to this page and has submitted some excellent samples of art work.

Another display from Andy Beiter, Tampa Theatre, Tampa, Fla., on "Here Comes the Navy". Andy used bright blue colors for sea effect with three-layer depth.

WILD WAVES

THE increasing use by radio concerns of short wave portable transmitters, obviating the use of wires from location to studio, promises to generate a heated controversy with the newsreels. It is found in practise that it is impossible for the sound recording mechanisms to tune out the adjacent radio chatter covering the same event. Demonstration of this destructive interference was afforded Sunday last when the news reels and radios set up their microphones to cover the frog jumping contest in New York Central Park, one of the events of the Mark Twain anniversary. The newsreel got no sound until the radio coverage was done. This cost the screen the appearance of Miss May Irwin, who came to sing the "Frog Song," a hit number from "The Widow Jones" in which she appeared in 1895. Incidentally Miss Irwin, pictured in a bit from that same play, in a fifty foot film entitled "The Kiss," with John C. Rice playing immediately opposite, became thereby the star of the first hit picture of the screen. The Irwin Kiss was the motion picture sensation of 1896. She is now seventy-three, and her song of Sunday last would have made a treasure of the screen history of tomorrow.

THE United Press solemnly cables from Moscow that the Soviet controlled Russian motion picture industry has just discovered the box office value of sex appeal and "has sent scouts scouring the big cities and even the country for pretty girls." MR. BUDDY ROGERS, discoursing to the Los Angeles Times on his single state, is quoted as saying: "Marriage and movies don't mix." The young man is not much of an observer. The fact is we've never seen them mixed more completely than in Hollywood.

A COUPLE of years ago there was a White House roar over a baby's salary in Hollywood. And now, in spite of codes and blue eagles, they are daring to pay Jiggs, a mere chimpanzee, $350 a week to work in pictures. There has been plenty of monkey business about the code, but not one word on chimps.

THE EDUCATORS' JOB

RECOGNITION of the sound film as an instrument for education is urged by Mr. John Marshall of the Board of Education of New York in a report made public this week, with the assertion that investigation has found the use of films has given increased efficiencies of as high as 60 per cent in science lessons and 20 per cent in music. Fortunately Mr. Marshall pointed out that film production for education was "radically different from that in the theatrical field." When it becomes sufficiently clear to all educators that the problem of educational films and their production is all theirs, the pressures upon the theatre screen and the amusement industry to be something besides entertaining will be less acute.

KIND WORDS

FOR some months now the motion picture has fared rather pleasantly at the hands of the editorial writers of the daily public press, with the general impression across the land that the Production Code has indeed brought new high standards to the screen, and improved moral tone and better entertainment. In sequence now comes a considerable tide of favorable editorial comment on Warner's "G-Men" as a service of the cause of law and order, and this from many of the same newspapers which not so long ago were deploring "the gangster cycle."

IT is to be noted with approbation that the New Orleans Council for Better Films has voted to change its name to the Louisiana Council for Motion Pictures. The frequent use of "Better Films" in organization titles has been rather a standing indictment of the industry. The change made in Louisiana is in the same constructive pattern which ordered the change from the National Board of Censorship to the National Board of Review.

TEACHING FILMS

Films should be used in schools, not because they are interesting or new, but because they provide a technique which may greatly facilitate teaching, according to Professor Kirtley Mather of Harvard, at the "Parents and their Children" conference in Boston last week. "Films are not a substitute for something else," he said, "but there are certain things that can be done better with pictures." . . .

BRITISH CODE MEETINGS BRING NATIONS CLOSER

Visit to London of Quigley and Milliken to Explain How Our Production Code Affects Their Exports to U. S. Draws Agreement to Aim for Full Compliance and Request for Machinery for Handling

An understanding of international import to remove the difficulties encountered by British producers in marketing their product in the United States because of unfamiliarity with the American Production Code, and which brings the world's two largest film industries in accord on the common principles of morality and decency in motion picture production, has crystallized out of the visit to London of Martin Quigley and Carl E. Milliken, who had been invited to explain the Production Code and its effects upon British films intended for distribution in this market.

Hailing the Americans' visit as a medium for strengthening and developing international trade relations, the British producers as a whole agreed that in their product for the American market they will aim for full compliance with the Production Code as it now governs the American product.

Too, they requested the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America to establish Production Code machinery in New York in order to facilitate the handling of British scripts and pictures intended for American consumption.

LONDON PRODUCERS STUDY DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CODE AND BRITISH CENSOR RULES

Will H. Hays, president of the MPPDA, had been invited by the Film Producers Group of the Federation of British Industries to explain how their producers seeking distribution in the United States might conform with the production standards of control in this country. Mr. Hays was unable to make the trip and so asked Mr. Quigley to represent him and assigned Mr. Milliken to attend the conferences as secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America. Both returned to New York on Tuesday afternoon on the Majestic. [On page 31 is reprinted an article written by Mr. Quigley for Kinematograph Weekly.]

The proceedings and the results are set forth in a letter received this week by Mr. Hays from Charles Tennyson, chairman of the Federation of British Industries Film Group in London. Mr. Tennyson's letter in full appears elsewhere in this issue.

Admitting that the same basic principles of morality and decency animate both Hollywood's Production Code and the British Board of Censorship regulations, the London producers set out to determine, for application, the nature of those of our methods which differed with their own in arriving at the identical ends. Both systems of control were brought into being by the voluntary action of the respective industries.

Mr. Tennyson explained that our code gives in considerable detail the reasons for the conditions with which producers of motion pictures are required to comply, while the British Board of Censors' regulations lay down similar principles but do not fully explain their detailed application.

ASKS CODE BRANCH BE SET UP IN NEW YORK FOR ADVICE TO BRITONS REGARDING SCRIPTS

Indicative of the extent of the seriousness with which the British producers intend continuing their bid for business in the American market is Mr. Tennyson's request in the letter to Mr. Hays for the establishment of a Production Code branch in New York so that British companies "may obtain, without undue delay, the advice of your Code authorities on the scripts of the pictures they contemplate making for distribution in the United States before these have actually been put into production."

Owing to the fact that this service is now carried out on the West Coast, the British

Procedure and Results Explained in Letter

The proceedings and the results of the conferences in London between Martin Quigley, representing Will H. Hays, and Carl E. Milliken, representing the M.P.P.D.A., with British producers who had asked for an explanation of America's Production Code, are set forth in a letter to Mr. Hays from Charles Tennyson, as chairman of the Film Producers Group of the Federated British Industries. Text of the letter follows:

Dear Mr. Hays:

I need scarcely tell you how greatly the Film Producers of this country appreciate your friendly and courteous action in deputing Mr. Martin Quigley and Governor Carl Milliken to represent you and your Association in the Conversations which have just concluded with regard to the application of the American Production Code, and its effect upon the distribution of British films in the United States.

Some misunderstanding seems to have arisen in certain quarters here as to the purpose of the visit and it has been found desirable to emphasize the fact that, as originally announced, Mr. Quigley and Governor Milliken came over to London in response to the invitation addressed to you by the Film Producers' Group of this Federation, on behalf of British Film Producers, with the sole object of facilitating the distribution of British Films in the United States by explaining personally the application of the American Production Code.

The purpose and scope of your Code have been most carefully and meticulously explained to Producers here, and we are much indebted both to your representatives and to you for the information so willingly furnished.

Arising out of the discussions that have taken place certain definite points emerge, and it is upon these that I am writing to you.

The system of control operated under your Code and by the British Board of Film Censors respectively have both of them been brought into being by the voluntary action of the Film Trade, in the sense that neither has been brought about by legislative action and neither has any statutory sanction.

A comparison of your Code with the regulations issued by the British Board of Film Censors for the guidance of producers shows that the principles animating both systems are identical, and that both are founded upon the necessity for avoiding in motion pictures any element calculated to debase public morals.

While, however, both systems are directed towards an identical end, the methods of achieving this differ slightly in the two countries. Your Code explains in considerable detail the

Many Points of U. S. Procedure Are Cleared Up by Conferences

Industries Federation, through Mr. Tennyson, complained that "considerable expense and loss of time are involved in submitting of scripts and explanations by British producers who wish to secure advice as to whether their contemplated productions are likely to meet with approval."

A similar service is now rendered to American producers by the British censor board, but in neither case does the advice given ensure that a completed picture will be accepted in whole or in part, even if the recommendations are carried out. It is intended merely as a means of saving the expense and trouble of making scenes or sequences which would almost certainly be disallowed. Under both systems certificates of approval are given when the production meets the standards set down.

"In our opinion no censorship can be satisfactorily worked out from the point of view of the producer unless some facility of this kind is readily available," Mr. Tennyson declared, in behalf of the F. B. I., in urging Code machinery for the east.

In any event, Mr. Tennyson told Mr. Hays, there have been cleared up "many points of American procedure that might have remained obscure had not the visit of Mr. Quigley and Governor Milliken taken place."

As explained in MOTION PICTURE HERALD on May 18th, page 13, the British news press evidenced considerable interest in their pages to the conferences, although they gave voice to something less than unanimous enthusiasm, viewing with considerable skepticism any suggestion that America may tell Britain anything on issues pertaining to taste, morals or social values, most especially concerning the screen. Their comments, however, were generally of a tenor welcoming the visit as a definitely helpful gesture to the British production industry. On the other hand, the British trade press was most friendly and the producers themselves exhibited keen interest.

Speedy Advice on Scripts Is Asked

reasons for the conditions with which producers of motion pictures are required to comply, while the British Board of Film Censors' regulations lay down similar principles but do not so fully explain their detailed application.

The British censorship regulations have been in operation for a considerable number of years and the American Industry has found it useful to develop a system of sending scripts to the British Board for advice before starting production of pictures intended for distribution in this country. This practice is admittedly of considerable advantage to American producers as it enables them to ascertain in advance the subjects or treatments to which exception would probably be taken, and although the advice given naturally does not ensure that a completed picture will be accepted in whole or in part, even if the recommendations are carried out, it certainly saves producers the expense of making scenes or sequences which would almost certainly be disallowed, and might have to be remade at heavy cost. In our opinion no censorship can be satisfactorily worked from the point of view of the producer of films unless some facility of this kind is readily available.

Although it is true that the American Code goes into considerably more detailed explanation than do the regulations of the British Board of Film Censors, it is clear that such detailed explanation cannot in any circumstances be exhaustive and that a very great deal must always depend upon the treatment of individual incidents. Incidents which are not specifically mentioned in either your Code or the B.B.F.C. regulations as being objectionable might easily become objectionable if unsuitably treated, while on the other hand incidents which are mentioned as to be avoided might be unobjectionable if treated in a proper manner. There are also differences in National taste in different countries, an understanding of which it is almost impossible for a foreigner to ascertain except by special reference in each case.

While therefore, we appreciate very much the thought which has been given to the development of the American Production Code and have learned much from the explanations which Mr. Quigley and Governor Milliken have been good enough to give us, we feel that the point of view which we both have in mind (namely, the facilitating of the distribution of British pictures in the United States) will be further advanced if some arrangement can be made whereby British Film Producers may obtain, without undue delay, the advice of your Code authorities on the scripts of the pictures they contemplate making for distribution in the United States before these have actually been put into production.

We are well aware that your Code administration offers to all producers a service similar to that rendered by the British Board of Film Censors in this country in the examination of scripts before production commences, but, owing to the fact that this service is carried out on the West Coast of the United States, considerable expense and loss of time are involved in the submitting of scripts and explanations by British Producers who wish to secure advice as to whether their contemplated productions are likely to meet with approval.

We think that this difficulty arises chiefly from the fact that the Overseas representatives of producers carry on their work in the principal distribution centers. It so happens that, as regards this country, London is both the principal production and principal distribution center, whereas in the United States the chief production center is California and the chief distribution center New York. The representatives of American producing companies being located in London can readily discuss with the British Board of Film Censors the scripts sent over to them by their principals from America, whereas the representatives of British producers being located in New York (i. e., the distribution center) have not the same advantage of personal contact with the Code authorities dealing with the practical application of your Code.

We feel, therefore, that if it were possible to establish in New York an organization (or branch organization) of your Code administration similar to that established in the West of the United States, the difficulties which our producers have recently encountered in America, and fear they may encounter in the future, should be substantially reduced. It is obvious that personal contact and explanation are much more likely to be effective in matters involving questions of taste and treatment than written communications can be. This has indeed been proved by the recent conversations with your representatives, which have cleared up many points of American procedure that might have remained obscure had not the visit of Mr. Quigley and Governor Milliken taken place.

I venture to call attention to this important point in the confident hope that, if it is deemed practicable, effect will be given by your Organization to the suggestion put forward above.

In conclusion may I express once again the greatest appreciation of the personal contact that has been brought about between representatives of your organization and British producers as a result of the visit. I feel sure that if other points of difficulty arise in the future you will permit me to bring them to your notice.

(Signed) CHARLES TENNYSON,
Chairman—F.B.I. Film Group.

Transradio Sues Wire Services

A suit for $1,700,000 damages was filed in U. S. district court, New York, this week, by Transradio Press Service, Inc., and Radio News Association, Inc., an affiliate, against the three major press associations—the Associated Press, United Press and International News Service—and Columbia Broadcasting and National Broadcasting companies, charging them with conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman and Clayton anti-trust laws and violation of the Federal communications act.

The complaint charged the defendants with acts of unfair competition, and asked an injunction. The action purportedly involves the news broadcasting agreement.

FIRST 3-COLOR FEATURE AWAITS PUBLIC VERDICT

Industry Agrees That "As Becky Sharp Goes, So Goes Color"; 21 Years of History Behind New Technicolor Production

The destiny of color as a medium for enhancing the entertainment value of the motion picture and adding realism to the screen is about to be placed in the hands of the theatregoing public, and whether color eventually can make black-and-white film as obsolete as sound has made the silent picture will be decided solely by that public.

Just as in 1927, when the industry and public heard the first revolutionary gasps of talking pictures, so today the industry and the same public await the debut of an improved color in feature pictures which will cost the production branch at least three times as much in negative expenditure as ordinary black-and-white film, but which, its sponsors hope, will prove to be the last word in technical and artistic development of the sound motion picture.

As the time approaches for release of the first feature to be made in the new three-color-component Technicolor, the consensus of the film industry is that "as 'Becky Sharp' goes, so goes color."

The history of "Becky Sharp," which makes its appearance early in June through RKO, is 21 years old. In 1904, Herbert Thomas Kalmus and Daniel Frost Comstock were graduated from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on the banks of the Charles river in Cambridge. In 1914, with W. Burton Wescott, they started their first work on subtractive color in motion pictures. Mr. Wescott, who was not a college graduate, left the organization of Kalmus, Comstock & Wescott in 1921 and later his brother Ernest, who still is connected with Technicolor, joined them.

Shortly after graduation from Tech, Mr. Kalmus and Mr. Comstock went to Europe for their degrees, Kalmus taking his from Zurich and Comstock from Basel. Dr. Comstock went to Cambridge University in England where he taught for one year, after which he returned to this country and both he and Dr. Kalmus held teaching jobs at Tech.

Turned to Color in Pictures

During this time the firm of Kalmus, Comstock & Wescott, industrial research and development counsel, was formed. Many valuable contacts were made, including an important one with the Carborundum Company, leading abrasive manufacturer. In 1912, William Coolidge, a Boston corporation lawyer who had had much to do with formation of United Shoe Machinery Corporation, and other companies, brought to Dr. Kalmus and his associates a new invention called the Vanoscope, a machine designed to take the "flicker" out of motion pictures. Although the firm of Kalmus, Comstock & Wescott refused to have anything to do with the Vanoscope, through the research they became vitally interested in motion pictures. Their main objective from that time on was to put satisfactory color into films.

They went to Mr. Coolidge and asked him to back them in their color venture to the extent of $1,000,000, and Technicolor was the result. In 1915 Technicolor, which took the first half of its name from M.I.T., was incorporated. Not long thereafter, Mr. Coolidge decided he had expended as much money as he could and new financing was obtained, among those contributing being the late William Travers Jerome, the late William Hamlin Childs, A. W. Erickson and Eversly Childs. Mr. Erickson, who today is one-half of the advertising firm of McCann-Erickson, also is one of the largest individual stockholders in Technicolor, Inc., Mr. Erickson and Dr. Kalmus between them holding approximately 50 per cent of the outstanding 656,000 shares. The remaining 50 per cent is held by the public, that public including John Hay "Jock" Whitney, head of Pioneer Pictures and producer of "Becky Sharp." Mr. Whitney's present holdings in Technicolor are reputed to be around 15 per cent, though at one time it was reported he owned nearly as much stock as Dr. Kalmus and Mr. Erickson combined.

J. A. Ball Heads Technics

In 1925, Dr. Comstock left Technicolor, but shortly after this, Dr. Kalmus, casting about for some one who could head the technical phases of Technicolor, selected Joseph Arthur Ball, who is considered now to have been more responsible for the new three-component process of Technicolor than any other individual.

This process was not developed until after 1925 and the efforts of the associates' labors in perfecting it did not begin to bear fruit until sometime after 1932. Prior to that all Technicolor was a two-component in which only two colors were registered, red and green. Until 1932, it was not possible to get an accurate reproduction of all colors in the spectrum using only red and green and a certain shade of blue could not be captured. Blue today is the third color in the three-component process. Other than the name, the new color has very little in common with the original two-color Technicolor.

How It Operates

As explained by medical experts, the human eye receives its color impressions through three primary nerve centers, each of which transmits to the brain one primary-color impression, the three colors thus received—red, yellow and blue—being termed the primary colors of the subtractive process. All other color impressions are made up of varying combinations of these three—green, for example, being an overlapping of blue and yellow impressions.

If three black and white negatives of a scene are made, recording on one plate all the red elements, on another all the yellows and on a third all the blues, the selective action of the three-color sensory nerve centers of the eye is duplicated. If, then, positive transparencies from the three superimposed are made, the resynthetizing brain action is duplicated and the image of the scene in natural colors is accomplished.

The earlier two-color process was generally conceded to be more or less color-blind, giving a fair suggestion of actual color. It could not, however, give natural color because it omitted one-third of the primary color components. In an effort to use colors which in some measure partook of the missing third, most colors were rendered with more or less distortion, while others were impossible to reproduce. In addition, the two primaries generally were exaggerated.

In the three-color process, three separate films are used, exposed through a single lens, at standard speed. All three are standard Eastman black and white stock and are hypersensitized in the Technicolor laboratories.

Production Use of Film Tripled But Technicians Say the Chief Theatre Change Will Be in Projector Focus; Small Costs

The laboratories' manipulation of trichrome Technicolor functions as follows:

1. The three negatives are developed by a machine to a rigidly fixed time. A very considerable degree of control is possible in printing, however, not alone over density, but also over the color balance.

2. The prints are made by the inhibition process. In this a matrix is made from each of three color separation negatives by printing onto a special film coated with di-chromated gelatin instead of the conventional emulsion.

3. The matrices are developed in warm water, causing portions to expand, forming a relief image. Each matrix is then dyed in the complementary color of its negative, the red's negative matrix being dyed cyanide blue-green; the green matrix, magenta, and the blue matrix, yellow. The three matrices are then successively printed in register onto clear film.

As each matrix has absorbed its dye only in the relief portions of its image—that is, in the shadows—it prints only where the original negative has recorded little or no color, while its complementary colored matrix prints in the color actually recorded by the first separation negative. When the positive has been so printed and dried, it is complete and ready for use.

First Three-Color Feature

"Becky Sharp" is the first three-color Technicolor feature, its three-color predecessor having been "La Cucaracha," also produced by Mr. Whitney. In addition, Technicolor's new process has been receiving considerable attention from Walt Disney the past two years. The creator of Mickey Mouse and other cartoon characters was given a two-year contract for exclusive use of the trichrome Technicolor in cartoons. This agreement expires in September, and Dr. Kalmus and his associates are busy lining up contracts with other producers for the 1935-36 season.

Dr. Kalmus said in New York this week that at least 52 cartoons will be produced in the new Technicolor next season, 13 by MGM, 13 by Warner Bros., 13 by Columbia and 13 by Paramount, with the possibility that RKO Radio, in addition, may produce 13. Beside these cartoons, Warner has contracted to do seven two-reel shorts, MGM six, and the 10 Traveltalks, released by MGM, also will be done in the new color.

Six features at least will be produced in the new Technicolor next season, but Dr. Kalmus declined to name the producers. These six are in addition to those pictures which will be produced by Pioneer.

To production and distribution the new Technicolor means added costs. To the exhibitor it means little, if any, increase in operating expenditure.

Film Consumption Tripled

For the producer, the first item of increased expense lies in the amount of film shot. The average amount of footage shot on a 7,000-foot picture is 66,000 feet on the ordinary black-and-white feature. In Technicolor, this immediately is multiplied by three, or a total of 198,000 feet. For this negative, Technicolor gets seven and one-half cents a foot and takes in, therefore, $14,850. These 198,000 feet are developed at a cost of two cents a foot, which brings in an additional $3,960. Out of the 198,000 feet of negative shot, possibly 99,000 feet would survive the first process of elimination and Technicolor would rush-print these 99,000 feet at 12 cents a foot for an additional $11,880. From the 200 prints usually made—and 7,000 feet multiplied by 200 prints makes a footage total of 1,400,000 —Technicolor's return is $77,000.

Thus Technicolor's photographic income amounts to:

$14,850 from negative
3,960 from developing
11,880 from rush prints
77,000 from all other prints for a

$107,690 grand total

In addition to these charges, Technicolor supplies cameras, rented at $90 a week; a part-time color director at $125 a week, and one, two or three cameramen, according to requirements, at salaries ranging from $200 down to $50 a week.

Beside all these detailed items of additional expenditure by the producer, preparatory work on a Technicolor feature may be twice as long as that on an ordinary production, although actual shooting time is said to be practically the same. More care and experience must be exercised in the painting of sets, in lighting and in costume designing, all of which swells the production cost.

An example of the production outlay is seen in the fact that "Becky Sharp" cost well in excess of $1,000,000 in negative cost alone, and the short subject, "La Cucaracha," amounted to $81,000 negative cost.

The Theatre Phase

As far as Technicolor in the theatre is concerned, the only changes, as far as can be determined, which the theatre man must make are in the focus of his projector because of the difference in the size of Technicolor film, the possible change from incandescent lamps to carbon lamps, to bring out the blues, purples, lavenders and other colors, and installation of a pure-white screen for accurate reflection of colors. In many theatres the screen is of a bluish tint. In addition, the exhibitor must be sure the Technicolor picture is thrown on a normal-size screen.

Of primary importance, however, is the factor of focus. Dr. Ball, head of Technicolor's various "technicalities" departments, said that if black and white prints from two different laboratories were joined together and projected, it would be discovered that to maintain equal sharpness of focus, at the splice between the two a slight shift in the projection lens would be necessary.

Splices and Focus

"This is in part due to the difference in the way the two films will lie in the aperture," Dr. Ball said, "either because of humidity or the manner in which the two films were handled at the laboratories. This effect is particularly in evidence where Technicolor film is spliced to black and white. True, the difference is slight, but it is of just sufficient amount to be of very real importance. The really able, conscientious projectionist will therefore check his focus at all such splices. After the first projection he will know which way to move his lens, and approximately how much."

Of lamps, Dr. Ball said:

"We balance our prints for, and inspect them by a high-intensity light. However, from actual tests we know our prints will give satisfactory results when projected by any arc light source, high or low intensity.

"If, however, our prints are projected with an incandescent light source there is a considerable loss in values, particularly at the blue end of the spectrum. This does not necessarily mean that the result is ruined, but it does mean that it will be inferior as compared with results from arc light projection.

"My third point has to do with brightness of the screen itself, usually stated in terms of foot candles. In a great many theatres, especially the smaller ones, the screen brightness is inadequate for best results, either black-and-white or color. Technicolor does not require any more illumination on the screen than does black-and-white, but it has an added value to the screen when properly projected, and by the same token, when projected with inadequate brilliancy the 'failure to deliver' is more noticeable."

Dr. Kalmus said that while Technicolor is far past the experimental stage it still is not at a point where the prices involved will be satisfactory to all concerned, a situation that can be corrected only by more consistent use of the process.

As was stated in the October issue of Fortune Magazine, Technicolor technicians had at least visualized a three-color future even as far back as 1924.

"The mystery," Fortune said, "is not why three components came, it is why they came so late. The difference between the three and two-component results is truly extraordinary. There are now rich, deep blues and it is no longer necessary to avoid or to regret the existence of blue skies, blue water, and blue costumes. The old process presented blurred outlines which were even harder on the eyes than its imperfect colors. No color process will ever duplicate the sharp outline of black and white, any more than a three-color magazine illustration will ever have the perfect registration of a black and white page.

"Color producers today may again mishandle their medium. But at least they will have good colors, well focused, to abuse."

Up to Public, Says Jones

In the background of the newest of color developments is Robert Edmond Jones, former ace scenic designer of the Broadway stage, now under contract to Mr. Whitney and Pioneer Pictures.

"The business of introducing colors to the screen simply opens incalculable vistas of possibilities," said Mr. Jones, currently in New York. "And I don't think it is merely a costly technical device for the production of shorts and novelties, either.

"Just as soon as the public gets a taste for color, it will no more consider going to a black-and-white film than it would now think of paying money to see an oldtime silent film with printed captions.

"The technique of color is mechanically perfect now. Mark you, I'm not saying that it is artistically perfect. That may be a long way in the future, but it is ready and available as a new medium of artistry the implications of which are really tremendous.

"Color in films will not be confined to the Easter-egg effect of makeup and costume for which it has hitherto been used. The whole emotional effect of a drama may be heightened by its judicious use, just as by the introduction of music, although almost more legitimately. It is more valid in some ways than mere form and outline, although to me pure color without form has very little meaning.

"But you can see for yourself the uses to which subtle, almost understated lighting lends itself, the chances it holds in ghostly greys, tragic violets, eerie greens and romantic pinks. The whole emotional effect of a given scene may be stepped up, subdued, altered and controlled by the composition of lighting. Scene lighting will, as I say, be very subdued, just a suggestion of color part of the time, and harmony, not volume, will be the objective of the color director. The best paintings in the world are not the gaudiest.

"The executives in Hollywood expect color photography to be in universal practice within four years."

Briskin Sees General Use

Typical of the reaction of Hollywood producers is the comment of Samuel J. Briskin, general production manager for Columbia, who said that "color may not come into general use in feature length films for six months or for three years, but when the first really good color picture is made it will antiquate black and white on the screen, and all producers will have to use it."

"When color films can be made as cheaply as black and white, when they become less artificial looking, when they approximate real life more closely than monotone film, then color will be used in all feature length films," is the opinion of Ernst Lubitsch, in charge of Paramount production.

"Color photography is a splendid addition to

WHAT PRESS SAYS OF COLOR PICTURES

The lay press apparently does not share the enthusiasm of some motion picture industry quarters over the possibilities of all-color features.

Here are a few comments:

"Unless backed by a worthwhile story, color photography will not attract. As a means to an artistic end it has merit; as the end itself it has no appeal" . . . Maurice Carter Tull, Kokomo (Ind.) Tribune-Dispatch.

"Color should be used judiciously, with a view to pictorial values. Black-and-white will always be the best story-telling medium" . . . Lecta Rider, Houston Chronicle.

"I doubt it. Ask me after 'Becky Sharp' has been shown" . . . Mildred Martin, Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Any element that adds to the realism and believability of a film play aids it. Life is not lived in grey tones" . . . Nelson B. Bell, Washington Post.

"The story is the most important factor, and until they get educated to the beauty of color they couldn't appreciate its values" . . . Mona J. Pape, manager WHBL, Sheboygan (Wis.) Press Radio.

"If you mean general use under a director with a sense of color values, yes. I think color is the next big step" . . . Pettersen Marzoni, Birmingham News-Age-Herald.

OTHER DEVELOPMENTS IN COLOR

cinema progress, particularly in subjects which adapt themselves to chromatic effects," said Darryl F. Zanuck, vice-president in charge of 20th Century Pictures' production. "We were the first to use the new three-color Technicolor process for dramatic spectacle in our production, 'The House of Rothschild.' The present uses to which it is being put will demonstrate its further utility, and I look forward confidently to the time when it will be a big factor in film production."

All in Color, Wanger Predicts

Walter Wanger, producer of "Gabriel Over the White House," "The President Vanishes," and others, believes that within five years all feature films will be made in color.

"The innovation of color," he said, "is just like the innovation of sound. The first experiments were very unsatisfactory. Color is excellent now, so far as the mechanical processes are concerned, but the producers' great problem now lies in exercising choice of color, in not using so much of vivid contrast that the eye becomes wearied.

"Feature length films with only one reel of color are absurd. They are not good show business. They are not good entertainment. Films should be all black-and-white, or all color."

Laboratories Abroad Planned

Meantime, in New York, Dr. Kalmus is busy making final plans to leave for Europe on May 29, where, he hopes, he will negotiate contracts for immediate erection of laboratories in London, Paris and, possibly, Berlin. Accompanying him will be his wife, Natalie Kalmus, who is in charge of color control for Technicolor.

Sir Adrian Baillie M. P., cousin by marriage to "Jock" Whitney, recently went to Hollywood from England to negotiate with Dr. Kalmus for the British rights to Technicolor and Dr. Kalmus is about to make Sir Adrian a reciprocal visit to conclude negotiations.

Refusing to divulge the identity of admittedly existing French interests seeking to obtain rights to the Technicolor patents, Dr. Kalmus said that Sir Adrian, who founded Film City in Bombay, India, and who represents British capital, has connections with major British producers which will assure wider use of Technicolor facilities in England.

Technicolor to Retain Control

Technicolor will retain control of all prospective foreign resources, Dr. Kalmus said, "to the extent of assuring world wide consistency of all factors considered fundamental, such as patents, quality and prices."

English companies, he said, for some time have been desirous of making use of natural color and are now ready for the new Technicolor process after experimenting with other methods.

Dr. Kalmus said that, for the present, Technicolor will continue to insist upon doing the laboratory work on all pictures made by its process, that regular black-and-white laboratories are not yet equipped to handle the medium. Eventually the company may license established laboratories.

There are several other new developments in the field of color, one of the most important of which is the new Eastman Kodachrome process, which has no relation to a process of the same name used years ago. The new process is the invention of two young musicians, both of whom turned to color photography experimentation as a hobby a few years ago. They are Leopold Mannes, son of David Mannes, head of the Mannes School of Music in New York, and a nephew of Walter Damrosch, and Leo Godowsky, Jr., son of Leopold Godowsky, pianist, composer and conductor, and brother-in-law of George Gershwin, composer.

The process invented by these two is designed primarily for use by amateur photographers in 16 mm., but may, according to Dr. Kalmus, develop into the basis of commercial Technicolor if it overtakes what Technicolor has at present. Although the actual invention of Kodachrome may be credited to Mannes and Godowsky, the basic principles involved are those of Technicolor and Eastman.

The Kodachrome process centers around the film, coated with five layers of color emulsion so thin that the total thickness is no more than the ordinary 16 mm. motion picture film. Each of these layers is particularly sensitive to one of three color components, red, green and blue. Pictures are taken by these three components, the two remaining layers of the emulsion being dividing layers, and are dissolved during the developing process, leaving them yellow, blue and red, the pigmentary primary colors. It may be used in an ordinary 16 mm. motion picture camera and there are no filters necessary for either reproduction or projection.

Paramount Active

Paramount is reported to be planning a color expansion of its own and is working secretly both in Hollywood and in New York on what is thought to be the Keller-Dorian process, or Eastman Kodacolor. It is known that J. G. Capstaff of Eastman is spending considerable time at the Paramount studios in Hollywood, while Dr. N. M. LaPorte of Paramount is studying the color situation in New York.

Eastman put the Keller-Dorian process on the market in 1928 and it has been in widespread use on 16 mm. film, but so far has not been used by the studios.

One side of the film in this process is embossed with myriad tiny lenses. The other side carries the light sensitive emulsion. Light, entering the camera lens, passes through a filter having three stripes of color on it, these being the light primaries, or red, blue and green. In passing through the little lenses on the film itself, varying intensities of these three colors are registered on the emulsion. It is the presence of the color that is registered, however, not the color itself, the film remaining at this point black and white. After development, that same film is placed in the projector which also has a filter with red, blue and green stripes on it.

This film is reported to be selling for about one-third more than the ordinary 16 mm. film.

There are several other color processes, but the only one which has had enough commercial experience to date to establish itself publicly as unquestionably practical appears to be Technicolor. The Keller-Dorian process has been brought to the point of commercial use, but has not appeared before the motion picture audience. Dufaycolor, based on the Spicer-Dufay patents, has just been seen in this country as part of British Movietone News, in pictures of King George V's Silver Jubilee.

Technicolor and its wholly-owned subsidiaries reflected losses in 1934 totaling $282,607.96, according to earning figures issued last week. the net loss after interest, depreciation, amortization of patents and other charges and after capitalization expenditures of $30,806. The 1933 loss was $249,396, after capitalizing expenditures of $36,830, representing research, development and patents cost.

Footage Doubled

On the other hand, Dr. Kalmus pointed out this week, the amount of footage handled by Technicolor's West Coast laboratory last year was 1,000,000, while to date for the 1934-35 season it has been in excess of 2,000,000 feet.

Shortly after the flurry of color pictures utilizing the Technicolor process which came in with Warner's "Gold Diggers of Broadway," the company again was participating in little else but short subject production. In 1932 its sales were $500,000—one-tenth of the 1929 top. The deficit was $235,000. In 1933, sales climbed to $630,000, but expenditures also increased and the deficit was $249,396.

Then came Walt Disney with his Silly Symphonies. Other short subject producers looked longingly at the color pictures being turned out by Disney in the three-color-component Technicolor. But Disney had a monopoly on Technicolor shorts for two years. At last, as a gesture to those producers who had turned their backs on the new Technicolor, "La Cucaracha" made its appearance. It was hailed as the forerunner of all-color features, and Mr. Whitney immediately determined to be the first in the field. Hence "Becky Sharp."

CHILD MEMORY AND THE SCREEN

A child of eight retains three-fifths of the essentials of a film as compared to the adult, and a child of 15 retains 90 per cent, according to Dr. Edgar Dale, Ohio State University, reporting, after a lengthy survey, to a conference on film appreciation under the auspices of the department of public instruction at Harrisburg, Pa., last week.

General Theatres Plan Due Shortly

The tentative plan for the reorganization of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., which is to be submitted to the federal court at Wilmington, Del., shortly, provides that the Chase National Bank turn back to General Theatres 170,000 shares of common stock of Fox Film Corporation. In addition the bank will give General Theatres options for two years to acquire an additional 320,000 shares of Fox at $15 the first year and $17 the second year.

The Chase Bank also will turn back to General 19,769 shares of National Theatre Supply preferred stock and 24,640 shares of International Projector preferred stock.

The plan provides further that bondholders are to receive ten shares of stock for each $1,000 bond and that the bank creditors shall share on the same basis. Additionally, bondholders and bank creditors will receive options to acquire six shares of additional stock at between $10 and $12 per share. According to report the Chase Bank may lend General Theatres $1,800,000 at five per cent as working capital. The management is expected to remain as at present.

A SYMPHONY OF THE EMOTIONS

Music in "Break of Hearts", Says O'Sullivan, Never Crosses Line but Speaks in Own Idiom

by JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

THE musical movie is growing up. Vocally, it has demonstrated its power to lift the prosaic into the stratosphere of exalted emotion, and the result has been gratifying alike to the public and to the exhibitor.

Now, it seems that the producers are beginning to comprehend what scientists and physicists, as well as musicians, mean by the dictum that music is in closer rapport with the emotions than any other media. And this also is encouraging, for the heart-throb in drama is not to be despised—from any viewpoint.

This preamble is prompted by the very effective musical treatment given to the RKO Radio picture, "Break of Hearts," a treatment that accords with fundamental principles governing emotional reactions, and one that marks a distinct advancement in methods of film production in vehicles with musical themes and tonal backgrounds.

"Break of Hearts" is not a "musical" in the ordinary significance associated with that term. It might be aptly called a Symphony of Emotions. While the two characters around whom the romantic drama is built are musicians, they never cross the barrier that separates the natural spoken word from the lyrical. The music they create and interpret—that dominates their lives and is the motivating force of their every action—speaks in its own idiom, telling its own story while revealing the inner life, the experiences, the heartbreak of two kindred spirits in quest of love and understanding.

It is the manner in which the abstract terms of the music interpret and reinforce the action and situations—the development and reiteration of musical motifs with the varying moods and human conflicts—that transforms a rather obvious story into a screen drama of profound emotional appeal, sincere and convincing.

Eclectic and Flexible Score

The score, created and arranged by Max Steiner, general musical director for RKO Studios, is eclectic and flexible and adapted with a fine sense of values. A symphony orchestra of 85 interprets the score and, in the concert scenes around which several of the dramatic scenes are developed, is both seen and heard in the great Bach Toccato and Fugue and in a movement from a Tschaikowsky symphony.

More important, however, from a musical-dramatic viewpoint is the handling of the music that is an integral part of the story. The principal motif is that composed (in the story) by Constance Dane (Miss Hepburn), ambitious young creator of music. This theme is introduced in the very beginning when Franz Roberti (Mr. Boyer), famous orchestra leader, surprises Constance in the throes of composition and immediately falls in love with the aspiring young genius.

Not to become technical, but taking it off the record, there was a certain illustrious physicist named Helmholtz who was one of the first to make an exhaustive research into sound vibration, its phenomena and effect on the human specie, and who came to the conclusion that "music stands in a much closer connection with pure sensation than any of the other arts," and that the direct relation of music is not to ideas, but emotions. J. O'S.

This composition (which might be termed the Constance Theme) is a haunting melody that is subsequently amplified and intensified in keeping with the dramatic progress of the romance. For Franz marries Constance, and although deeply in love with her, relapses into his pre-nuptial habit of philandering. When Constance discovers an affair that seems serious, she leaves him, with no clue to her whereabouts.

From the heights of Parnassus to Tin Pan Alley is the descent of Constance, whose urge for musical creation has taken wings with her blasted romance. At this crisis Johnny Lawrence, who has always been in love with her—whose ways are the ways of the flesh and to whom music is something to dance to—appears on the scene and proposes, and Constance, who has made the trip to Reno, accepts.

Musical Irony

It is in this Tin Pan Alley sequence that an ironic bit of musical significance is introduced. Constance, heartsick at the realization that her love, her ideals, her music, are but things of the past, is called upon to play a "hot" number for a customer while a song plugger bawls out the lyrics of "I'm Happy Go Lucky." She plays it "cold" like an automaton, then collapses.

Utterly disillusioned, Constance steps out on the primrose path with Johnny, and King Jazz blares the way with raucous rhythm. Roberti returns from Europe, encounters her in a cocktail bar and seeks a reconciliation—in vain. Shocked at her attitude, he seeks solace in liquor. At his next concert he is so overcome that he doesn't realize what he is doing, and falls unconscious from the podium while directing the Bach Toccato and Fugue.

Here is a poignantly dramatic sequence unsurpassed in musical treatment. Bach's masterpiece is tragic and foreboding and delivers its message of impending catastrophe with overpowering intensity. This liaison of music and action approaches genius.

The Symphony of Emotion reaches its climax in a scene of reclamation that reiterates and develops the musical motif dominating the romance of Constance and Franz. Roberti has fallen to the depths. Constance seeks him out and attempts to recall him to himself—to his career. Words are unavailing, but when she plays the composition that had its inception with their romance and had developed into an ecstatic rhapsody during their love life, something within the man whose soul has apparently died stirs into being—and the Symphony called Life is renewed.

"Break of Hearts" is a significant contribution to the cause of screen music-drama—a real achievement in the art of fusing action, dialogue and music into an inspiring vehicle.

Selwyn Moving Office to Coast

Unqualified concession that Hollywood has superseded Broadway as the hub of the of the world's amusement empire was contained in a statement issued this week by Arch Selwyn, who, in a more prosperous era of the legitimate stage, was one of the dominant figures of the Broadway scene, in announcing the removal of his interests from New York to Hollywood.

In association with Major John Zanft and Jules G. Evens but in no sense an integral part of that partnership, Mr. Selwyn—one-time producer of "This Year of Grace," "Bitter Sweet," "Private Lives" and other plays on the stage of Broadway—henceforth will spend his time counselling artists and producers identified with the kindred arts, under the own corporate title of Arch Selwyn, Ltd.

"The American theatre is disintegrating rapidly," he said, "and will reach new levels of despair unless the motion picture comes to its rescue. This can come about only through a more sympathetic understanding of the relative requirements of the two arts. The stage needs the talent and genius that the screen has wrested from it. With pictures no longer an infantile entertainment, it has lured from the footlights most of the artisanship that made the theatre an amusing as well as a profitable institution."

On the other hand, Mr. Selwyn pointed out, the screen can utilize the stage with equal benefit in that it provides an invaluable outlet for expression for player and playwright that the studio set cannot afford.

Legitimate "art theatres," socalled, are flourishing throughout the Middlewest, particularly in Chicago and environs. Chicago is just concluding what generally is considered its worst stage season. Five legitimate houses were open the past season as compared with 12 in 1933-34 and up to 40 in pre-depression days.

Now, however, in Chicago and suburbs, there are 150 art theatres in competition with legitimate and motion picture houses, and in seven middlewestern states the estimated number is between 450 and 500.

ALLIED ARMED WITH RESOLVERS AT LARGEST NATIONAL MEETING

Cole Proposes Boycott on "Racketeering" by Combines To Withhold Product and Lay Tribute Upon Independents

by TERRY RAMSAYE
Attending Atlanta Convention of Allied States Association

All the nation's economic problems and the issues of all industry, symbolized and epitomized in terms of motion pictures, are before the sessions of the 200-odd exhibitor members of Allied States Association at the Hotel Piedmont in Atlanta this week. The picture is triangular, with the causes of the independent exhibitor on the long side, with the producer-distributor-affiliate and circuit theatres on the second side, and the federal government in its current invasions of business on the third side.

The most positive word of the convention, most convincing of ultimate action, was "Boycott," brought to the floor of the convention by Colonel H. A. Cole, of Dallas, down in Texas, voicing complaint in behalf of his and other regions, mainly southern, against "racketeering" by way of booking associations, combines and related methods of withholding product and laying of tribute upon independents by sundry groups of exhibitors affiliated with and in the favor of distributors. There appeared promise of considerable promulgation of the plan of action by boycott discussed by Colonel Cole.

Winning Without Success

"A boycott does not have to be successful to win," whimsically suggested the Colonel, white-haired and linen-suited in Texan dignity, discussing the situation informally at the Piedmont. "The cost of defeating such a movement is often enough to gain a practical victory in subsequent avoidance of a fight. We made precedent and proved the method ten years ago in Texas in bringing Paramount to abandoning the service of nontheatrical competition."

What action the convention might take with reference to "boycott" programs, meanwhile, appears less material at this time than the fact that the boycott weapon should be under serious general consideration by Allied.

Other outstanding aspects of the docket of the convention are:

1. Alarm at distributor aggression as a part of sales pressures, as typified and made immediately apparent by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer-Loew Theatres invasion projected in Chicago—a subject on which Aaron Saperstein, president of the Allied of Illinois is chief spokesman. (Allied in Chicago was taking tangible action against the "invasion." See page 38.)

2. Disapproval of the NRA code as applied to the motion picture industry, with the charge that it is a controlled bureaucracy working against the interests of the independent exhibitor — a subject on which Abram Myers, counsel and chairman of the board of Allied, is the speaking authority, with anticipation of relief and escape from United States code domination by declaration and establishment of exhibition as strictly intrastate activity, therefore not within the domain of national regulation.

3. Hope of national legislation regulative of picture distribution practices in directions calculated to improve the status of the independent exhibitor, for the time centering this hope on the Pettengill Bill against compulsory block booking and related matters. Sidney E. Samuelson, national president of Allied, forecasts as inevitable the ultimate enactment into law of such a measure.

Conventions being what they are, the immediate results of these discussions can be at most an array of resolutions intended to crystallize opinion, point up issues, and encourage continuing attention. This, like all other conventions, is well armed with resolvers. The heavy resolving was to begin Thursday.

Businesslike Convention

The Atlanta convention reveals a considerably strengthened and a somewhat steadied, sobered business-like Allied Association, geared to a considerably less noisy, but more effective tempo, than formerly. The violent table-thumping and hysteria that colored the presentations of speakers at a reckless white heat characterizing some prior conventions is not in evidence at Atlanta, with a resulting atmosphere of heightened effectiveness.

Within the year Allied has acquired considerable strength in membership, both in numbers and personnel. The elimination of pyrotechnics and of hell-roaring for personal showmanship purposes gives the Atlanta meeting added significance.

A set of contradictions as intricate as any on the worried map of American industry is presented by some of the contentions and projects before the convention and in the councils of the leaders. Here is presented the picture of the association condemning federal interferences with the conduct of the industry in terms of NRA and at precisely the same moment asking for more federal interference in an anti-blocking law.

To this Mr. Myers makes answer that the NRA code sets up a man or men to control the industry, while the Pettengill Bill, or its equivalent, would be a statute precisely defining conduct. That however, leaves yet the fact that national legislation regulative of the motion picture would be none the less more government-in-business, which is admittedly a general source of nationwide discontent, and one which is particularized acutely in the shortcomings of the NRA code affecting motion pictures. It is perhaps fitting that the first raising of the ancient issue of states rights as applied to the motion picture in contentions of interstate versus intrastate should be made a text of discussion at a convention in the heart of Dixieland.

Also along with that comes the interesting reflection that the federal drive at the demolition of state boundaries in commerce should be a movement of the alleged Democratic party's administration.

BULLETIN

Allied's Atlanta convention, proceeding quietly, took an abrupt turn late Wednesday when fighting Al (W. A.) Steffes appeared from almost complete retirement, and brought to the floor wholesale charges that distributor tactics were crowding the independents out of existence.

The convention then voted unanimously to send a committee to Will H. Hays and the "powers that be" in New York demanding an end to distributor "aggression" in the theatre field, and, if the committee failed to get "justice" for "injured" exhibitors, to ask the Department of Justice to prosecute under the antitrust laws.

"This is a lousy convention," was Mr. Steffes' opening bon mot, referring to its orderliness.

Resolutions Committees Plan Action on NRA Code, Loew Situation, Newsreel 'Payoffs', Block Booking, Sales Policies

26 States Represented At Allied Convention

The convention was by far the largest national Allied meeting in years, and the most widely represented, delegates converging from some 26 states, as follows:

ALA.	LA.	MINN.	PENN.
ARK.	ME.	N. H.	R. I.
D. OF C.	MD.	N. J.	S. D.
FLA.	MASS.	N. Y.	VT.
GA.	MICH.	N. C.	TENN.
ILL.	MO.	N. D.	TEX.
KAN.		OHIO

Representatives and executives of equipment companies, film distributors and of premium manufacturers were on hand in large numbers.

The Allied generals on Wednesday night and Thursday morning were bustling about building the machinery for resolution drafting, through which the organization's stand and manner of meeting the issues were to be determined on Thursday.

NRA Code Committee

The attitude toward the motion picture code and the NRA was to be shaped by Colonel H. A. Cole, Texas; M. B. Horwitz, Cleveland; L. Neuberry, New Jersey; C. Wilson, Troy, N. Y.; Bob Higgins, Grove City, Pa.; I. A. Roth, Morristown, N. J.; Frank Roach, Tennessee, and Fletcher Thornton.

Loew-Chicago Issue

The Chicago situation involving the independents' fight against the Loew-Metro invasion was in the hands of H. M. Richey, Detroit; Morris Wax, Philadelphia; Harry Hecht, Passaic, N. J.; Benny Berger, Minneapolis; L. Bach, Atlanta; M. M. Osman, Covington, Ga., and Nate Ginsberg, of Alabama.

Mr. Wax told the convention MGM realizes it cannot have its own way but does not dare admit defeat, and is willing to compromise. He said if MGM persists in the invasion, the issue will become national.

Newsreel "Payoffs"

A committee, headed by S. S. Stevenson and Frank Lydon, was appointed to investigate "payoffs" in the newsreels for political favors, and was named the "Committee on Political Activities."

Block Booking

Important was the anti-compulsory block booking committee, composed of Walter B. Littlefield, Boston; Roy Branch, Michigan; Nate Wolf, Illinois; Ike Katz, Atlanta; John Pillar, North Dakota; H. Fried, Pennsylvania; H. C. Wales, Florida; M. Batterson, Pittsburgh; C W. Neth, North Carolina.

Sales Policies

Of equal importance was a committee to investigate distributors' sales policies for the new season. Heading this group were: Aaron Saperstein, Chicago; Sam Borisky, Tennessee; Fred McWilliams, Wisconsin; Glen Dickenson, Kansas; Al Yeomans, Mississippi; Henry Lazarus, New Orleans; W. G. Browning, Georgia; Charles Olive, Washington, D. C.; Henry Greenberger, Ohio; David Barrist, Philadelphia.

Nontheatricals

The committee appointed to act on nontheatricals included: H. M. Ritchey, Detroit; C. E. Herman, western Pennsylvania; F. Weiss, Savannah, Ga.; Columbus Stamper, eastern Pennsylvania; A. Kramer, Ohio; Richard Rubin, Saugus, Mass.; J. Gardner, New York, and C. L. Strozier, North Carolina.

Individual Grievances

Individual grievances were in the hands of a committee consisting of Burt McWilliams, Wisconsin; R. Wilkins, New Jersey; Fred Harrington, western Pennsylvania; F. Snyder, Michigan; Hascom Block, New Jersey; Rubin Frels, Texas, and Paul Scott.

Miscellaneous

Other resolutions that might be advisable as a result of the development of any new issues were to be drafted by a "Committee on Miscellaneous Resolutions," composed of Martin Smith, Ohio; Herman Blum, Baltimore; C. W. Moss, Pennsylvania; Arthur Howard, Boston; W. J. Ray, Florida; Oscar Neufeld, Philadelphia; C. Walter, Florida, and James Ritter, Detroit.

Monday was given over to informal gatherings, although in the evening Allied's board appointed working convention committees. Policy was relegated to Walter B. Littlefield, Massachusetts; Aaron Saperstein, Illinois; Morris Wax, eastern Pennsylvania, and Sam Borisky, Tennessee. A convention committee, named to advise the president on committees, was composed of H. M. Richey, Michigan; Martin Smith, Ohio; Fred Herrington, western Pennsylvania; Abe Stone, Upper New York, and Ike Katz, Georgia.

A third committee, created, it was believed, to discuss a cooperative insurance plan submitted to Allied, was comprised of Martin Smith, Henry Lazarus, and C. H. Olive.

The committee on convention policy set the program for actual business sessions, with discussions taking place as follows: NRA code, Abram F. Myers; distributor practices, David Barrist; affiliated theatre practices, H. A. Cole; film carriers, James Clark; block booking, Walter Littlefield, and the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers, Mr. Myers.

Mr. Myers sharply attacked the code as having failed to give independents the conditions they want, because it presumably added to the advantages of major companies, because it did nothing about ending alleged evils of compulsory block booking and for other reasons.

David Barrist spoke of increasingly higher rentals, despite lower negative costs, of a distributor practice of failing to provide old accounts with product in favor of new ones, and of a three-point program, including a buyers' strike for bringing to independents a better break.

Colonel Cole told about aggressions of circuits in his territory, intimating that what was going on there was part of an organized movement either to eliminate the independents or to make them "bend the knee in tribute to a potential national booking combine."

Lauds Pettengill Bill

Mr. Littlefield, regional vice-president representing New England, deplored the evils of compulsory block booking and blind buying. He, too sounded a war cry for the Pettengill Bill, which, he declared, would eliminate both practices and pave the way toward a better day for independent theatre operation.

Mr. Myers returned to the dais and characterized both the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers and the Copyright Protection Bureau as "racketeers." He indicated that Allied was favorable to Senator Duffy's bill, to revise the copyright laws. While not representative of all Allied wanted, Mr. Myers said, it was better than the present.

The Copyright Protection Bureau Mr. Myers called "an extorter of money" from theatre men. He charged that efforts to collect on unauthorized holdovers were unjust, with no attempt to ascertain whether the exhibitor had committed a violation unintentionally.

Mr. Littlefield hit block booking on three counts: that it is economically unsound, compels the exhibitor to run product which he knows is not suited to his clientele, and is the greatest monopoly weapon. He added that the practice hurts theatre business, robs customers and deprives other producers of playing time.

One direct result of the current system, he said, is continued public resentment and encouragement to movements like the Legion of Decency.

"All troubles are traceable to insufficient product supply," he said. If 350 more pictures were thrown into the market, there could be no forcing of short sales with features, no troubles on preferred playing time or protection, he declared.

A government representative was to explain the method of obtaining loans and their advantages under the Federal Housing Act and their relation to the modernization of theatres.

Governor Talmadge on Wednesday evening was to address a special convention program at the Atlanta Athletic Club, at which "Heaven Bound," a play featuring the Big Bethel Negro Choir, was to be presented.

RCA Photophone, which is paying particular attention to independent theatre business, sent eight sales executives and seven engineers, in addition to a complete equipment display, to the convention.

Among RCA executives from New York were E. N. Hartley, sales manager; Lawrence B. Morris, vice-president and general counsel; J. D. Cook, treasurer; Ed Auger, assistant to Mr. Hartley.

Neil Blount, New Orleans district sales manager, and J. W. Sims, Charlotte district sales manager, also were present, as were Jack Dumestre, Atlanta district sales manager, and Harry Leighlery, Atlanta district service manager.

The engineering crew from New York included Mike Yahr, Charles Herbst, Charles Swinney, Jack Faulstick, David Gould, P. Reed and Al Ramsey.

Photophone displayed PG32 High Fidelity equipment as well as a public address system for small houses and a Sonotone hard-of-hearing device which it sells but does not manufacture, and also a portable 16 mm. projector.

Other Equipment Displays

Other equipment displays at the convention included those by National Screen, National Theatre Supply, Conger Printing, Southern Fan, Claude Neon Sign, Triangle Poster, Amity Film Exchange, Theatre Service Company, N. Emile Savini, Visugraphic Film, Wil-Kin Theatre Supply, American Seating, Selig, and National Film Carriers.

Among executives of National Film Carriers scheduled to speak at the convention was James P. Clarke, president. Other executives attending were Clint Weyer, secretary of the organization; Harold Robinson, Detroit; E. E. Jameson, Kansas City; John Vickers, Charlotte; George Blackman, Syracuse, and L. M. Miller, New Orleans.

Edward Finney, director of publicity for Republic Pictures, addressed civic and school groups in New Haven, Conn., last week on "The Motion Picture in Transit from Studio to Theatre." Other speakers were Frank Vreeland, story department, Paramount; Burt Gillett, Van Beuren and Harold Hendee, research department, RKO.

4 Tourneys Keep Film Golfers Busy

The golfers of the film industry in New York are in the throes of combat on the greens and fairways as no less than four tournaments have been held, are to be held this week, or are scheduled for next month. The four, and their times and places are: Saturday, Electrical Research, Briarcliff Lodge, Westchester; Tuesday, Code Authority, at the Lakeville Country Club, Great Neck, L. I.; Thursday, RKO, Fenimore Country Club, Westchester; June 12, Film Daily, Progress Country Club, Purchase, N. Y.

About 45 teed off in the Erpi tournament. Representatives from Washington, Philadelphia and Newark were on hand to compete for the grand prize, the Otterson Trophy.

Members of the Code Authority and of the local New York code boards met at Great Neck for their battle of the links. The program was golf, lunch, golf, dinner, and prizes.

At the RKO meeting, a qualifying round was scheduled for the morning session, with the championship 18 holes to be played off after luncheon.

Universal Promotes Boylan

Malcolm Stuart Boylan has been named to succeed Leonard Spiegelgass as scenario editor for Universal on the Coast. Jerry Sackheim remains as story editor. Mr. Boylan was formerly studio publicity head. Henry McRae has succeeded Milton Gaetzert as serial producer.

Dr. Wilbur Heads Research Council

Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University and former Secretary of the Interior, has become the new national president of the Motion Picture Research Council. Mrs. James Roosevelt and Mrs. Calvin Coolidge have consented to continue as honorary vice-presidents of the organization after the transfer has been made on June 1 to the Pacific Coast.

The decision to make this transfer of national headquarters has been unanimously approved, it was said both by the executive committee, of which Mr. Stephen Perkins Cabot of Boston is chairman and Mrs. Walter McNab Miller, secretary, and the national board of the Council of which Dr. Edwin R. A. Seligman of Columbia University is vice-president and acting chairman.

Herbert S. Houston, chairman of the Council's committee on information, in explaining the plan, said in part:

"Under Dr. Wilbur, it is confidently believed, the Motion Picture Research Council can go forward to carry out its two primary purposes. Its first purpose, as its name indicates, has always been that of research. That was completed under the direction of Dr. W. W. Charters of Ohio State University and an able scientific board after five years of work and an expenditure of over $200,000. The findings have been published in nine volumes.

"With these findings published, the Council at once took up its second objective under the presidency of the late John Grier Hibben of Princeton University—that of applying the findings to the improvement of motion pictures. To this end all of our studies and data were made available at once to the Catholic Legion of Decency, the various Protestant, Hebrew and other organizations that sought to improve the character of pictures—and much has been accomplished.

"But the Council has seen that the work of improving the motion picture is a continuous job and that it can be most effectively carried on close to the motion picture producing center, which of course is California. It was pointed out that this proximity to the industry gave much greater opportunity for successfully realizing the second objective of the Council.

"Another important activity with which the Council has been associated from the beginning, the formation of a National Film Institute along the lines of the British Film Institute, is now well under way."

Grainger Signs New Universal Contract

James R. Grainger this week signed a new long term contract with Carl Laemmle, president, to continue as general manager in charge of distribution, a post he has held for two years. The contract was transmitted and signed via the teletype, Mr. Laemmle being in Hollywood and Mr. Grainger in New York.

TELEVISION WILL HAVE OWN FIELD, GOLDSMITH TELLS SMPE MEETING

But Producers and Exhibitors Must Maintain Improvement If They Are to Hold Leadership, Convention Hears

The motion picture theatre need not feel any undue apprehension over the advent of television, but producers and exhibitors must maintain steady improvement, with the aid of frequent experimentation, if they are to hold leadership in their fields, Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, consulting engineer and past president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, told the SMPE Monday at the Spring Meeting in Hollywood. Mr. Goldsmith's paper, which was read to the convention when business required his presence in New York, was a highlight of the 75 technical papers presented to the five-day gathering at the Hotel Roosevelt, which was to close Friday night.

Each Successful in Own Domain

The industry should be quick to adapt any good ideas or methods that may develop out of television, Dr. Goldsmith said, and should make use of any advice obtainable from the "relatively few" experts acquainted with both the theatre and broadcasting. He predicted that television-telephone broadcasting and the theatre will have separate domains, each successful.

Dr. Goldsmith scouted the thought that television broadcasting may keep patrons away from the theatre, citing these "controlling principles":

1. "Intrinsically the home is certainly not so good a showplace as the theatre;

2. "Conversely, the theatre has a number of definite and inherent advantages as a showplace;

3. "People are interested in change."

"Home manners," he declared, "tend to be more 'free and easy' than is desirable for showmanlike presentations. The problem of setting up the theatre in the home is far from simple when furniture must be moved to get a good view of the screen and the home folks and guests gotten into the corresponding convenient viewing positions, and home lighting is rarely as controllable or suitable for picture presentation as is the case for the theatre. Indeed, the customary surroundings of the home are not especially favorable for the creation of a world of illusion which has always been the successful function of the theatre."

The Theatre's Advantages

The theatre, on the contrary, "arouses the interest of the audience by heavy theatre advertising in the press, by the play-up of the 'fan-magazine,' and by other exploitation methods known to skilful managers, thus creating the proper mood of pleasurable anticipation in the prospective audience." He pointed to the marquee and lobby as factors, the discipline maintained by ushers, and the price of admission itself —"it takes a poor picture indeed to force the audience to cheat itself by inattention." The theatre program, he said, is a "well-planned arrangement of elements" whereas in broadcasting, with its 15 to 30 minute "slices," the elements are coordinated only with the utmost difficulty, if at all. He cited the fact that the theatre screen, "with the occasional obnoxious exception of excessively prolonged or unduly fulsome blurbs relative to approaching attractions," is practically free from advertising. He added the benefits of air conditioning in theatres, comfortable seating and lighting.

As for the desire of man for change, Dr. Goldsmith pointed to the individual's desire to seek entertainment elsewhere than in the home, to the fact that folk are gregarious, that they are distinctly conservative in their pleasures.

Dr. Goldsmith said home television-telephone reception will be accomplished by the use of

1. An electronic pick-up rather than by a mechanico-optical pick-up;

2. An ultra-short wave transmitter or transmitters for the television and telephone portions of the program;

3. A coaxial-conductor cable or its equivalent, or an ultra-short-wave radio relay system, for the syndication of the program material for network operation, and

4. An electronic receiver of the cathode-ray type, with a fluorescent image screen, rather than a mechanico-optical receiving system.

Comparing likely results of television broadcasts with those from motion picture theatre presentation, Mr. Goldsmith drew these observations:

1. Television depends even more on persistence of vision than the theatre picture, "being in fact nothing more than a flickering and flying dot";

2. The theatre picture has 5,000,000 picture elements, the good home television picture will have 150,000, though entertainment value is not in direct proportion to the number of picture elements;

3. Theatre pictures show negligible grain and no line structure; high-detail television pictures show no grain structure and practically no line structure.

4. A practically neutral white probably will become common to television.

5. Television in full colors seems almost impracticable.

6. The area of the theatre pictures is about 150 times that of home television.

7. Dark shades will be required by television for daylight hours.

8. By interlaced scanning, a substantially flickerless television picture may be obtained.

9. Theatre pictures may be most conveniently viewed at from 45 to 135 feet from the screen, television at 4 to 11 feet.

10. Audience ratio is 200 to 1 in favor of the theatre.

11. Synchronism in home television is "entirely correct and automatic."

Sees Close Connection Possible

There can be close connection between motion pictures and television if it is desired, Dr. Goldsmith said. The technique of producing a program will be closely similar, with the definite difference that in television only one "take" will be possible. "Sound motion picture films may be excellent subject matter for programs from some stations," he explained, and might afford a medium for syndicating programs, though he doubted syndication would be successful "unless there are also actual interconnecting wire or radio networks between the outlet stations."

Television broadcasting, he said, in the opinion of many will serve to arouse interest in the theatre. "It is also clear," he added, "that the theatre can, to a considerable extent, utilize radio advertising by television-telephony, for example, by the sponsored transmission of trailers."

In another paper on "Technical Aspects of the Motion Picture," Dr. Goldsmith touched upon the interrelationships between the motion picture and science in general, in the field of mechanics, in acoustic principles and practice, light or optics, heat, electrical theory and practice, and finally in the science of chemistry.

New Color Process Described; Two Sound Tracks Proposed for Musicals; IATSE Head Urges Society Cooperation

Color Session with Academy

Color was another special interest of the convention. A session devoted exclusively to color photography was held Tuesday night under the sponsorship of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences at the Carthay Circle. Several Technicolor short subjects were screened and the new three-color process was demonstrated.

Natalie Kalmus, director of color control for Technicolor, discussed the psychology of color, while J. A. Ball, head of Technicolor's technical department, explained the new process. Rouben Mamoulian, director of "Becky Sharp," the first three-color Technicolor feature, spoke.

At the Monday session at which Dr. Goldsmith's paper on Television was read, H. R. Lubcke of the Don Lee Broadcasting System of Hollywood declared:

"We shall look to television as a source of news and timely presentations and to the theatre for highly artistic productions of the classics. The great need of television is to bring sight to radio just as sound was brought to the films."

Realism in Sound

Max C. Bastel, RCA Photophone engineering chief, traced the history of the development of sound film principles in the research laboratories and pointed out that these pioneers were actuated by fundamental ideals which many studio technicians now neglect because they are absorbed in production problems.

Insufficient attention has thus far been paid to the creation of ideal recording acoustics, he said, in addition to ideal reproducing acoustics in the theatres. For reproduction of speech in the theatre the auditorium should be free of resonant conditions and appreciable reverberation through the use of absorbing materials.

On the other hand, he pointed out, these conditions are not desirable for musical productions. The most desirable arrangement, Mr. Bastel suggested, might be to use two sound tracks and an entirely different loudspeaker arrangement.

The importance of a closer tie between the SMPE and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, and a "common understanding of the aims of each other," was stressed by George E. Browne, IATSE head, in an address read by Thad C. Barrows, president of Local 182, IATSE, Boston.

Other speakers Monday session were Howard Green, Paramount writer; Kenneth Macgowan, RKO producer of "Becky Sharp" for Pioneer Pictures; and others. The delegates were welcomed at the luncheon by Major Levinson and Emery Huse, executive vice-president of the SMPE, with Homer G. Tasker, SMPE president, responding.

More than 350 delegates—from India, the Netherlands, Italy, Canada, Germany and Japan, as well as the United States—attended the convention, which voted Tuesday to hold the annual convention in Hollywood every other year.

SCHWALBE DEATH TAKES FIGURE IN STANLEY, FIRST NATIONAL, GENERAL

Signed Mary Pickford for First National Exhibitors' Circuit at $250,000 a Picture; Was Secretary-Treasurer Eight Years

Harry O. Schwalbe of Philadelphia, who came upon the scene that is the motion picture business before the General Film Company, died Monday in Atlantic City hospital to which he had been taken a fortnight ago, after more than two years of ill health. He was 60 years old. His illness had been accentuated by the death of his wife. Two married daughters survive him.

For 30 years Mr. Schwalbe had been a factor in both exhibition and distribution, and at his death still retained an interest in the Stanley Company of America, which he had organized.

Mr. Schwalbe was known before that memorable day of February 10, 1910, when, under the guidance of the late Jeremiah Kennedy, General Film Company of New Jersey was incorporated at Trenton with a capitalization of $2,500,000, an unheard of figure in the business of that early film period.

Mr. Schwalbe had formed the Electric Theatre Supply Company at Philadelphia. Between April, 1910, and the first day of January, 1912, General Film Company purchased the 57 varieties of principal exchanges in America for $2,243,089 in cash, and preferred stock with a face value of $794,000. Schwalbe became Philadelphia manager for General Film.

The name Schwalbe played an integral role also in the field of exhibition in the organization of the Stanley Company, earliest of the important theatre circuits and born of the purchase of the houses owned by Sigmund Lubin. Stanley V. Mastbaum became head of the Stanley Company, after which later theatre combinations were patterned. Jules Mastbaum carried on, and with his death was removed another of the figures with whom Mr. Schwalbe's earlier activities were linked.

Then came another development of significance. J. D. Williams, who had been the assistant treasurer of the Opera House in Parkersburg, W. Va., had taken in a wider territory in 1902 when he went on the road with a black tent and a one-reel film of President McKinley's funeral. Eventually he had landed in Australia.

Late in 1916, Mr. Williams, home from the Antipodes and having disposed of his theatres, set about a film theatre project in Los Angeles. Thomas L. Tally, a California leading showman who had been an early venturer with peep shows, opposed the Williams idea. Tally had another one. Distribution policies which forced him to purchase a complete program in order to get a Mary Pickford picture prompted the thought that exhibitors should pool buying power and deal with the stars themselves. Into that project with Tally went Williams as active organizer and in the middle of April, 1917, was announced in New York the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. Schwalbe became interested in the First National idea, Stanley Company became a part of First National, and Schwalbe went to New York as representative of the Stanley theatres.

HARRY O. SCHWALBE at the time that he was secretary and treasurer of First National, which he had helped organize in association with the late J. D. Williams.

First National signed Charlie Chaplin as its first master stroke. The next objective was Mary Pickford. Mr. Schwalbe was given the job. In Los Angeles he met the star and her business counselor, her mother. The backing of the large theatre organization finally brought him victory in the bidding and he agreed to give her a contract for three productions at $250,000 each—and her mother $50,000—if the star would leave Artcraft. Miss Pickford accepted, and later the total reached $1,050,000 through an arrangement which added $100,000 to her salary for each picture.

For eight years Mr. Schwalbe was secretary and treasurer of First National.

The association with "Jaydee" Williams later appeared in another enterprise, this time in First Choice Pictures, as treasurer and member of the board of directors. In 1933 he resigned. Mr. Williams died late in August, 1934.

Mr. Schwalbe had many other interests, largely in the theatre field. He was treasurer of Novelty Amusement Company, president of the Lyndhurst Company of Baltimore, president of the Grand Company, also of Baltimore, and all three theatre operating companies. He was treasurer of the Sign Animation Corporation of Easton, Pa., and a director of other amusement enterprises.

The Masonic funeral services were set for Thursday at 2 p. m. at 27 City Line avenue, Bala, Pa., with burial at West Laurel Hill Cemetery, Philadelphia. He was trustee of Lulu Temple of Philadelphia.

Columbia Profit For Nine Months Is $1,572,720

Columbia Pictures Corporation has reported net profit for the nine months ended March 30, 1935, of $1,572,720.50, equal, after all charges and provisions for federal taxes, to approximately $8.62 per share on 177,933 shares of common stock outstanding on that date, after deducting preferred dividends. This compares with net profit of $739,338.94, or $4.17 per share, for the corresponding period of 1934, on 167,885 shares outstanding on March 31, last year.

The net for the third quarter of 1935 was equal to more than $650,000, or $3.47 per share. The consolidated balance sheet as of March 30, 1935, shows current assets of $7,620,760.48, and total current liabilities of $6,128,135.76. The earned surplus of the company increased to $4,499,595.20.

The board of directors has declared a quarterly dividend of 25 cents per share on the common stock and voting trust certificates for common stock, payable July 2, 1935 to stockholders of record June 12. A semi-annual dividend has also been declared on the common of 2½ per cent payable in common stock on August 2, 1935, to common stockholders and voting trust certificate holders of record June 12.

Actions on Duals Await Sales Plans

Exhibitors in Kansas City have discarded any plans to obtain an increased number of features for double featuring, and are awaiting developments to come with the announcement of new season sales policies.

According to Jay Means, president of Independent Theatre Owners, "nothing further will be done" in view of the distributors' rejection of the plan for a "release board" to designate product for duals. The plan was agreed upon as an answer to indiscriminate double billing.

Following the expiration on July 8 of the ban by Cleveland exhibitors on double billing, the local Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association is understood considering a plan whereby its members will play a restricted number of duals weekly. A general meeting June 4 will determine the action to be taken.

Members of the Independent Theatres' Protective Association in Milwaukee County last week decided temporarily to drop efforts to ban duals, chiefly because of the lack of support from Fox.

Despite opposition from producers and distributors, Fox West Coast began dual bills last week in Los Angeles. Double features have been announced as the new summer policy of the circuit.

CONFERENCES FORTIFY GOODWILL, QUIGLEY TELLS BRITISH TRADE

Facetious Attitude of Some Appears Ridiculous in Light of Results, Publisher Says in Kinematograph Weekly

by MARTIN QUIGLEY

At the suggestion of Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., I have been happy to respond in his behalf to the invitation extended by the Film Producers Group of the Federation of British Industries to come to London for the purpose of submitting to British producers an explanation of the American Production Code and the method under which this code is now being applied in the American market.

It has been my good fortune to have associated with me in my visit to London, Governor Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the American association, who has attended the conferences as the association's representative.

Our visit to London, which seems to have given rise to much amazing speculation in the general press, has been animated simply and wholly for the purpose of the organized industry in the United States to supply the British producer complete and detailed information relative to the Production Code.

It has been thought in the United States—and I think quite fairly and rightly—that in view of the fact that certain definite policies governing the subject matter of motion pictures have been adopted in America, the British producer is entitled to be advised specifically of these policies so that the Production Code shall amount to neither hindrance nor handicap to the British producer in his efforts to obtain representation in the American market.

To Eliminate Minor Difficulties

In the absence in England of definite knowledge as to the prevailing requirements in the American market certain minor difficulties have occurred. It has been with a view to eliminating for the future grounds for any such difficulties that Governor Milliken and myself came to London and entered into discussions with British producers.

I wish to take this opportunity on behalf of Governor Milliken and myself to express hearty appreciation of the kindness and consideration which uniformly has been shown to us by all of the important factors in British production during our visit in London. To have met in conference with the Film Producers Group has been both an enjoyable and interesting experience. For many extraordinary courtesies we are especially indebted to Charles Tennyson, chairman, and M. Neville Kearney, secretary.

Anything, of course, which becomes associated in the public mind with a process of censorship is likely to be considered an item of inviting news to the general press.

The article herewith, reprinted from the current issue of Kinematograph Weekly, London, was written expressly for that publication by Martin Quigley, editor-in-chief of Motion Picture Herald and Motion Picture Daily. The article provides an outline of the proceedings and results of the recent London conferences attended by Mr. Quigley and by Carl E. Milliken.

These conferences have not escaped such attentions. If during the happy days of the Jubilee these attentions—however aside from the facts they have been—have afforded the reading public some merriment then, indeed, your visitors are gratified that their presence here has been the means of giving rise to these amusing and fanciful flights.

But to us, of course, and to the producing industry in Great Britain, the matter of facilitating the distribution of British pictures in the American market—an objective upon which the growth and development of the British film depends—is no matter for idle jest.

The American industry has always been committed to a policy providing for the free circulation of motion pictures everywhere, this circulation in its scope and extent being limited only by the entertainment quality of the films irrespective of their place of origin.

The American industry also is mindful of the enthusiastic reception which always has been accorded to its films in all the English-speaking markets outside the United States.

Finds Censor Regulations Coincide

It has been our privilege to detail to the Film Producers Group the American Production Code and the methods under which it is being applied. In the course of the conferences the interesting but, of course, assumed fact has developed that the regulations of the British Board of Film Censors coincide in viewpoint, spirit and essence with the regulations embodied in the American Code.

That there should be this coincidence is naturally inevitable, because among right-thinking, civilized peoples the world over there is an unanimity upon matters of common decency and morality. Especially were this to be assumed with respect to the Anglo-Saxon peoples of Great Britain and the United States.

While the pardonable ignorance of some sections of the general press on various of these matters is understandable, especially in the light of the ever-present temptations to poke fun at anything resembling censorship, it is unfortunate that some persons associated with the trade press, who might well be expected to seek to aid rather than to obstruct efforts put forth to assist British production in the international market, have seen fit to strike a facetious and destructive attitude. In the face, of course, of what these conferences have meant to British production, these obstructionists now appear sadly ridiculous. It is to be hoped that out of magnanimity the London trade will excuse the disservice.

I am grateful to Kinematograph Weekly for this opportunity to address a word to the British trade just prior to my return to America. I leave England with the thought uppermost in my mind that these conferences I have been privileged to attend have been an added strengthening of the spirit of cooperation and good will between the English-speaking peoples in whose hands to a very great extent lies the custody of the motion picture—that great influence in modern life.

Rightly directed, within the capabilities of its present custodians, this may not only amuse and entertain the world but may also assist importantly in directing world opinion along the lines of mutual understanding, good will and peace.

Harris Reelected Head of National Variety Clubs

John H. Harris of Pittsburgh was reelected national chief barker of the Variety Clubs of America last week at the two-day first annual convention in Pittsburgh. Delegates from each of the national organization's 14 local units attended. Two additional units were named, when Des Moines and Omaha were voted charters. Next year's convention will be held in April in Columbus.

New officers, in addition to Mr. Harris, are: Duke Clark, Columbus, first assistant chief barker; John J. Maloney, Pittsburgh, second assistant chief barker; James G. Balmer, Pittsburgh, national dough guy; Frank Drew, Cleveland, national property master, and six canvas men including Allan Mortiz of Cincinnati, Eddie Ruben of St. Paul, Louis Rome of Washington, E. E. Kirchner of Detroit, Marc Wolf of Indianapolis and Earl Sweigert of Philadelphia.

Among the chapters which, during the course of the year, handled milk funds, distributed toys to needy children and food and cash to needy families, presented annual shows at penitentiaries and hospitals, paid medical and hospital bills of people formerly employed in the amusement field, arranged for the care and adoption of orphans, held Christmas parties for poor children, and in general gave freely and generously of time and money, were Pittsburgh, Columbus, Detroit and Kansas City.

PARAMOUNT TO CHANGE NAME, BY-LAWS, CHARTER

Becomes Paramount Pictures; Stockholders to Vote June 3rd; To Reduce Directorate

Conclusion of formalities prior to Paramount's emergence from bankruptcy June 3 was at hand this week when Federal Judge Alfred Coxe approved a request of the management to change the name to Paramount Pictures, Inc., from Paramount Publix Corporation, and subsequently the directors voted changes in the corporate by-laws and then adopted the new charter of incorporation and the form for new debentures. Application was made to discharge Irving Trust Company as bankruptcy trustee of Publix Enterprises, as the bank filed its final report with the court.

The adoption of Paramount Pictures, Inc., as the name of the rehabilitated corporation, evolves from the Famous Players Film Company as organized by Adolph Zukor in 1912; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in which Jesse Lasky joined Mr. Zukor in 1916; Paramount Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, adopted in 1927, and Paramount Publix Corporation, the last previous change, made in 1930.

When the stockholders meet at the home office on June 3 to ratify the reorganization, they will formally vote on the new name, the new charter and debenture forms and on the revised by-laws.

Officers will not be elected until the next directors' meeting, about June 12th when, it is indicated, one of the first matters discussed will be a new contract for Ernst Lubitsch, production executive, whose present contract expires June 15th.

Directors under the new by-laws will be reduced in number from 20 to "not less than 16 and not more than 18," and the re-classification of the board will divide it into three groups of not more than six directors each. These subdivisions will serve one, two and three-year terms each until 1938, when annual elections of directors will be held. The board will retain all administrative powers and no finance committee will be created. A subcommittee was named to classify the directors as to terms.

Oscar W. Ehrhorn, referee in bankruptcy in New York, took under advisement the application to discharge Irving Trust as Publix trustee, and allowance of the application will mark the formal close of the bankruptcy of that former Paramount holding company.

Final Dividend Available

With claims aggregating $5,061,894, the trustee reported that a final dividend of 30 per cent on the allowable claims is available and will be paid upon court approval, the bulk of the dividends going to Famous Theatres Corporation, Paramount's new theatre holding subsidiary, which acquired assets of Publix Enterprises in 1933, these assets consisting of numerous theatre properties and partnership rights in others.

Operations of Publix were transferred to Famous Theatres some time ago, and it is expected that the old unit will be dissolved. Publix became a bankrupt at the same time that the Paramount consented to an equity receivership, in January, 1933.

Toronto reports, described by Paramount officials in New York as "ridiculous," said that there still is a possibility that control of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Paramount theatre affiliate, would go to Canada at the instigation of N. L. Nathanson, president. Linked with this is the rumor that the company may yet be tied in with British film interests. In 1929, Famous Players Canadian shareholders were offered $75 per share by Gaumont British Pictures Corporation, but instead they exchanged their holdings for stock of Paramount Publix, despite Mr. Nathanson's protests. Mr. Nathanson withdrew from the company as a result, but has since become its president.

Paramount interests in New York pointed out that control of Famous Players could only pass from Paramount through sale of Paramount's Famous holdings, and that if Paramount had any intention of disposing of its stock in the circuit it would not now be subscribing to an additional 18,256 shares of the 18,940 additional common shares recently authorized by the Famous Players board for issuance on June 1.

Special Master J. A. Joyce in New York received an agreement for the settlement for $381,389 of a $503,827 claim against Paramount held by Commercial Investment Trust and United States and Foreign Securities Corporation for royalty agreements made with Paramount's purchase of Southern Enterprises circuit, from S. A. Lynch. The royalty contracts were made originally between Paramount and Mr. Lynch in 1919 as part of the circuit deal. They were revised in 1922 and in 1927 Mr. Lynch sold them to the two banking houses. Additional claims held by the two bankers against Publix were sold to Paramount in 1933 for $130,000.

Request of counsel for Paramount trustees to postpone until June 3 a hearing on an application of William Yoost, bondholder, appealing from a court order approving Erpi's $1,200,000 claim settlement against Paramount, was granted on Monday and the hearing was set for the United States circuit court of appeals. Mr. Yoost, taking exception to Judge Coxe's approval order, specifically opposes the new recording agreements between Paramount and Erpi provided for in the settlement.

Federal Judge Hulbert referred to Judge Coxe motions by Chase National Bank for leave to file new claims against Paramount for services as trustee under the Famous Players Lasky indenture of 1927 and the Paramount Publix indenture of 1930 and to liquidate claims already filed by the bank.

On Thursday a hearing will be held in New York before Special Master Joyce on petition of Paramount trustees to settle for $3,548 the $6,375 salary claim of A. John Michel, former Paramount general auditor.

Publix-Salt Lake, Inc., operating theatres in Utah and Idaho, reduced its capital from $455,000 to $50,999.

Paramount Properties, Inc., studio holding company, through counsel, told Federal Judge Paul McCormick in Los Angeles that approximately 46 per cent of the creditors have agreed to its own reorganization plan. The attorneys also gained postponement of a hearing until June 17 to obtain the sanction of other creditors, at which time Judge McCormick is expected to approve the plan on condition there will be no reduction in par value or lowering of interest in the company's outstanding $2,750,000 first mortgage 6 per cent bonds and no change in ownership or control.

Theatres In Paris Threaten to Close Unless Tax Is Cut

There is more than a possibility that the amusement centers of Paris will completely close down on May 31. All organized branches, legitimate and motion picture theatres, music halls, vaudeville houses, night clubs, sports arenas, even restaurants and cafes, have informed the government of France that they will close their doors on that date unless taxes are reduced.

The movement dates back to agitation originating during the last session of Parliament, in March. At that time the government promised action but nothing was done. Parliament resumes activity next week.

Under present conditions, film theatres pay 35 per cent of grosses in various forms of taxation, state, pauper, copyright and town. All employees have been given notice, substantiating the threat of closing.

Government officials contend more revenue is needed than ever before. Amusement interests are demanding a 50 per cent reduction in taxation, basing their demand on poor business. Film houses recently have cut their scales to an average of three francs (20 cents) for double features. Admissions generally are down about 30 per cent. The government has not indicated what action, if any, it proposes to take in the matter.

Hays Speaks at Award to Grace Moore for Picture

Will H. Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, speaking at the reception of the Society of Arts and Sciences in New York last week for Grace Moore, honored by the Society, said: "The motion picture is a most potent factor in the development of national appreciation of music. It has been said that the art of the musician is ephemeral, that he interprets but for the moment. Now, neither the artist nor his art will ever die."

The occasion was the formal award of the annual medal of the Society to Grace Moore, opera and film star, for her work in Columbia's "One Night of Love," for "raising the standard of motion picture entertainment." Miss Moore was the first industry personage to receive the award, and the second woman in 53 years, the first having been Eva Le Gallienne. Harry Cohn, president of Columbia, and Mrs. Cohn, attended the dinner and reception, coming in from the Coast for the occasion.

Metro-Goldwyn Reduces Capital by $3,960,677

Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has reduced its capital at Wilmington by $3,960,677.13. It has been accomplished by retiring all issued and outstanding preferred stock, consisting of 146,691⅜ shares, each with par value of $27, and by providing that an amount not exceeding that part of the capital represented by the shares so retired may be charged against or paid out of the capital of the corporation.

THE visit in London of Carl Milliken and Martin Quigley to explain to those of the British industry who are interested in exporting motion pictures to our shores the literal meaning and method of operation of Hollywood's Production Code was climaxed the other evening by a gala dinner given in their honor at the swanky Savoy Hotel by Alexander Korda, one of London's outstanding producers.

Attended by notables of the trade over there, the Savoy's best culinary experts conspired with some of London's jolliest film bigwigs to create for the occasion a menu both notable and appropriate. That their efforts were successful can best be attested by the net results, which follow:

"HAS Anybody Here Seen Kelly," asks the Evening Bulletin, of Providence, as it relates in print the amusing story of how, some three or four weeks ago, there arrived at the desk of the movie editor from the publicity office of Fox Films in New York, a proud announcement that one of their press agents had discovered among the chorus girls working in Jesse Lasky's picture, "Redheads on Parade," a native of every state in the Union.

"It was a veritable roll call of States," said the publicity blurb, "when the flame-haired beauties paraded on the set."

There followed a list of "the girls and their home towns." Sensing a story with a local angle, the list was duly inspected by Garrett Byrnes, Bulletin screen editor, and, sure enough, there was the name of a Miss Lynne Kelly of Providence, Rhode Island.

To Fox Films quickly went a request for a picture of Providence's Miss Lynne Kelly, and for some biographical information about her home in Providence, where she went to school, who were her parents, et al.

By return post came a picture from Fox's New York press agents, and a letter which said, in part, over the signature of Earl Wingart, publicity manager:

AMERICANS SOLVING BRITISH QUOTA NEED

Fox Completes Technical Plan for Profitable Production in England; Warner Active

by BRUCE ALLAN
London Correspondent

Clayton Sheehan, Fox general foreign manager, told the trade press editors at an informal luncheon at the Savoy that he considered the experimental period at the Wembley studio had passed and that a technical set-out had been achieved which would enable Fox to cope with the problem of its quota requirements on business lines. [Mr. Sheehan arrives in New York next Monday.—Ed.]

This is an unsensational but nevertheless important statement. American companies, for the most part, have bought British films on a "pound a foot" basis and shelved them. This is no longer an economic policy, and there has been a tendency to think that the only alternative to "quickies" would be the production of a percentage of gross production in England, for American distribution. The Fox policy indicates that there is a third course—the direct production of films in England for profitable distribution in the British Empire and possibly in Europe.

It is a question how many American companies are organized to work on these lines. Fox, with its Wembley studio in order, has the assurance that all the money it invests in British production will be spent on the floor, and it can shape its budget with regard to the box-office; its problem is no greater than that of the several British companies which make profits without the American market. Warner-First National, apart from its plan to release British films in America, is similarly fixed. Most of the others are faced with the necessity of carrying a 20 per cent British quota—25 per cent of American output—with no better immediate resources than the $30,000 to $35,000 "quickie." On a 50 picture output that implies an investment of $360,000 to $450,000 in British films which may be a dead loss. In the background is the probability that many of the "quickies" in future will be refused registration under the Act. It looks as if British producers of high standard films shortly will be on velvet, but whether all the American firms searching for cover will find box-office material is a question.

Financial circles here understand that Associated British Picture Corporation is to have a further issue of capital. The present issued capital of 6 per cent at £1,400,000 is likely to be increased to the authorized £2,000,000, and it is thought a further issue of ordinary capital will be made. The present preference shares are quoted at around 21s. 3d.

At the annual meeting of the Denman Street Trust Isidore Ostrer said that the net profit had risen from £15,804 to £18,851; the surplus available was £35,519, permitting a dividend of 3 per cent—the same as the previous year's. This would absorb £19,164, leaving £16,355 to be carried forward. With market value improved, at April 30 the 23 per cent depreciation had decreased to 11 per cent.

Mark Ostrer and R. C. Bromhead were re-elected to the board.

Following on the action of the Surrey county council's licensing committee in approaching the British Home Secretary to suggest that the film censorship consultative committee (a semi-official body) should virtually supersede the British Board of Film Censors, another council has made a similar recommendation. It is from the county of Warwickshire.

ILLINOIS BILL MAY HALT LOEW MOVE; INDUSTRY EYES 23 BILLS ELSEWHERE

Measure Would Make It Unlawful for Any Distributor to Build or Lease If Coercion as Aim of Project Is Proved

Legislative activity involving the motion picture is as pronounced at this late date in some states as that which marked the countrywide campaign against the theatre by law makers at the beginning of the 1935 sessions in midwinter.

This week the motion picture was the subject of debate, unfavorable and otherwise, in a dozen states and in Congress at Washington, the outstanding development being a proposal introduced in Illinois by Representative Granata to curtail, even prohibit, Loew's anticipated invasion of the theatre field in Chicago. Loew's calls the move necessary to get its product to the public, what with a boycott against Metro pictures effected by hundreds of exhibitors.

The bill would make it unlawful for any distributor to build or lease theatres—Loew's contemplates erection or acquisition of 20 properties—when the purpose of such expansion is demonstrated to be coercion or intimidation of any existing theatre. Fines would run in a series, from $200 to $2,500.

From Atlanta, where Allied States Association of Exhibitors was meeting in annual convention, members in attendance from Chicago indicated that their state organization, through the Granata bill, would choke off MGM's proposed invasion.

To block the Loew move, Essaness Theatres filed a complaint with the Chicago grievance board, citing two code clauses, one calling it unfair trade practice to interfere with operation of a theatre for the purpose of depriving the exhibitor of his theatre, the other declaring that no distributor shall coerce an exhibitor by operation of a competitive theatre. The complaint was taken under advisement.

Congress still was concerned with the Dickstein anti-alien actors' bill, and it appeared likely that the House immigration committee would recommend passage.

Alabama killed a 10 per cent admission tax proposal, California acted similarly on a measure to curtail child acting, while Florida was unusually active with admission, sales, anti-billboard and censorship-elimination proposals.

An anti-marathon bill and another permitting film sales before approval of pictures by censors, became laws in Kansas. Sales taxes, billboards, state lotteries and booking agent licenses were subjects before the Massachusetts legislature.

Complete legislative activities of the week involving the industry follow:

At Washington

Congressman Truax, of Ohio, sponsored the House bill to repeal the federal ticket tax. The measure makes its appearance annually.

Representative Celler, of New York, indicated he would fight on the floor of the House against passage of the Dickstein bill placing alien actors under the contract labor provisions of the Immigration Law, if the proposal ever reaches a vote. Declaring that many films and plays would have been ruined by imperfect casting if such a curtailment existed.

Deputy Commissioner of Immigration Edward J. Shaughnessy said the measure would not impose any hardship on high grade talent. Representative Kramer, California, will offer a substitute bill allowing free entry but requiring talent to leave the country after an engagement.

Brock Pemberton, Broadway stage producer, told the committee the bill would hinder recovery of the theatre.

Alabama

Thirty exhibitors stormed the legislature at Birmingham and succeeded in having a clause creating a 10 per cent admission tax stricken from the general revenue bill.

California

Exhibitors were pleased with passage of Assemblyman Hunt's bill outlawing endurance contests and marathons.

The Assembly's labor and capitol committee killed in the new child labor bill that clause which would have prevented players under 8, such as Shirley Temple, from working after 6 p. m.

Florida

Representative Hill proposed a tax of one cent on each 20 cents or fraction of amusement admissions. Tickets of five cents or less would be exempt.

Representative Buchholz proposed to raise funds for schools by levying a 2 per cent general sales tax, including ticket sales.

July 23 will probably find Floridians voting, at a special election, on an anti-chain store bill, already passed by both houses. However, Representative Hunt's amendment to include chain theatres was killed at the last moment. Mr. Hunt called theatre circuits "the most vicious chain in Florida."

A tax on billboards was defeated, but Senator Sikes proposed that representatives whose business it is to collect royalties on musical compositions and radio programs would have to purchase a state license for $2,000 annually, and counties would have a right to assess a similar amount in addition.

A proposal was introduced to abolish the state censorship board.

Kansas

All laws enacted by the 1935 legislature become effective this week with publication of the statute book. Of interest to exhibitors is the banning of endurance contests. Censorship regulations are amended to permit sales of films before their approval by the state censor board.

Kentucky

The Covington city council barred billboards from the streets.

Massachusetts

Motion pictures are directly concerned with the decision of the House rules committee favoring admission of the petition of Attorney General Paul Dever and of Samuel Hoar for appointment of a director of outdoor advertising to regulate all signs exposed to public view.

The Senate sent back to the House three bills for general sales taxes, thereby blocking passage.

Missouri

Governor Park and his legislative affiliates expect passage of a substitute one per cent general sales tax on all items, including admissions, above 14 cents. Advertising in pictures and programs and magazines would also be affected. The Senate has passed the bill.

The House taxation committee voted restoration of the 10 per cent admission tax. The suggested schedule is: three cents on admissions from 26 to 31 cents; four cents from 31 to 41 cents; five cents from 41 to 51 cents, with a straight 10 per cent on all admissions over 51 cents.

Theatre circuits and oil stations were included in the chain store tax measure, which this week reached the Senate and was placed in committee. Opponents included theatre circuits and oil places at the last moment in the hope that such a preponderance of outside opposition would cause the proposal to be lost.

Exhibitors were jubilant over defeat of Senator Handley's proposal to legalize dog racing.

Alabama Kills 10 Per Cent Admission Tax Proposal; California Move to Bar Players Under 8 Years of Age Fails

Ohio

Reports from Ohio had it that newsreels again may becomes subject to censorship on July 16, when a bill increasing the censor fee from $1 to $3 becomes effective.

RKO is expected to contest the legality of the new bill against preferred playing time. The law becomes effective July 8.

Pennsylvania

While motion picture interests combined to convince the legislature that the antiquated Sunday "blue" law should be repealed, spokesmen for the Independent Exhibitors' Protective Association of Philadelphia and for the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania said 400 Pennsylvania owners are opposed to the Sunday local option law in its present form, basing their opposition on the belief that the additional operating day might prove more costly than profitable.

Washington

The state tax commissioner is expected to be asked by member companies of the MPPDA for a ruling to determine whether ad sales accessories for motion pictures are subject to the 2 per cent sales levy.

Wisconsin

The assembly committee on taxation unanimously recommended passage of a substitute for the Carow income tax bill which would broaden theatre taxes into a general amusement tax of 3 per cent on ticket sales, as against a 4 per cent tax on gross theatre receipts. Non-theatrical showings would be exempt.

'PUBLIC HERO' A CINCH

Ruben's Direction, Story Stand Out; Swell Acting Cast

"PUBLIC HERO NO. 1"
(MGM)

Producer .....Lucien Hubbard
Direction.....J. Walter Ruben
Original Screen Play: J. Walter Ruben and Wells Root.
Photography .....Gregg Toland
Cast: Chester Morris, Joseph Calleia, Jean Arthur, Paul Kelly, Andy Lawlor, Ed Brady, Selmer Jackson, Stanley Price, George E. Stone, Bert Roach, Lewis Stone, Lionel Barrymore, Helene Costello, Billy Sullivan, Greta Meyer, Zeffie Tilbury, Frank Darien, Lillian Harmer.

Excellent entertainment of the action-plus school of drama that is made for the pleasure and enjoyment of large audiences, due to the fact that it has an A1 screen play enlivened by swell humor for the adults; A1 acting by Chester Morris, Joseph Calleia, Jean Arthur and Lionel Barrymore, and A1 direction by J. Walter Ruben that holds the picture up from start to finish with lively interest. You can't get better movie material, better done for any type of audience.

MGM's contribution to the string of stories about the Federal Government's Department of Investigation considers the case of the "Purple Gang" and the front page methods used to round them up, put them away and make the country safe to live in. It offers a most interesting characterization in Sonny Black—whose prototype was undoubtedly Dillinger, a grand fighting hero in the person of Jeff Crane, a G-man—giving the kiddies something they can really admire and emulate in the way of thrills that can benefit a community; an intriguing heroine in Maria Theresa O'Reilly, and an elegant old reprobate in the Doctor. All the characters are rolled together and mixed up into a fine assortment of exciting interludes, realistically told. And the fun is all genuine.

From this may be gathered the fact that J. Walter Ruben had a good idea for an original and Wells Root has fashioned a screen play that takes full advantage of the picture possibilities and injects that very elegant brand of humor that was started by "The Thin Man." Ruben, directing his own story, gives himself a good break by keeping the action moving right along and getting the best in the way of performances.

Chester Morris as the hero, Jeff Crane, has the best role that he's had in months and months, and he is once more the boy who sprang to fame in "Alibi." Joseph Calleia, making his screen debut, repeats the quality performance he gave in the stage play, "Small Miracle." He's an actor who should go very far in pictures. His face is interesting and his restraint lends much power to his characterization. He'll arouse the fans' interest plenty.

And then there's that complete revelation, Jean Arthur. A fresh, attractive young Miss, with a grand sense of comedy and a charming personality. She makes the heroine an important person to the enjoyment of the film. Lionel Barrymore is the drunken doctor, beyond the law, and it's the best thing he's done in an age. You'll love him. Paul Kelly, Lewis Stone, Paul Hurst are stand-outs in their roles and the others quite perfect as to type.

A picture that's fun to see and should be a boon to the box-office.

500 Exchanges in the U. S. Ship 42,768,000,000 Feet of Film a Year

The statistical state of that division of the industry that takes the finished motion picture from the producer and distributes it to theatres of the country is disclosed completely for the first time in a study of the subject just made by distribution authorities of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, under Arthur S. Dickenson, chief of exchange operations, working in conjunction with MPPDA member companies. Less is known statistically about distribution than production and exhibition, principally because the spotlight of attention, public and otherwise, is so infrequently placed on the less glamorous process of physical distribution.

Tracing essential parts of distribution, as carried out in all film exchanges, from the initial contracts to the booking, accounting (including billing and collecting), the supplying of advertising accessories, and the storage, inspection and shipping of prints, results of the investigation brought the following conclusions:

Between 50 and 250 prints are required on each feature, or from 32,500 to 162,500 prints for the estimated 650 features released annually.

However, the average number of simultaneous daily runs is 200 per picture, indicating that 200 is the average number of prints required to service theatres.

Each print averages 40 playing dates to complete bookings.

As a rule, then, the general minimum is 2,000 bookings and the general maximum is 10,000 bookings per picture.

The exchange, obviously, in buying or requisitioning prints, bases its needs on the number of accounts it is serving, each exchange requiring, on an average, from two to seven or eight prints per feature.

The average print, playing 40 dates, will be screened 200 times, a per theatre average of five screenings per playdate.

Playdates are for a single screening at a rural theatre running one show per week to as many as 49 showings at weekly change "grind" houses.

Exchange storage vaults have a maximum capacity of 750 cubic feet, inside.

Eight inspectors, working in two inspection rooms in the average exchange examine from 45 to 60 reels of film daily, or from 45,000 to 60,000 feet received from theatres each day on return shipments.

The strip of positive film that brings entertainment to millions is one and three-eighths inches wide and only .00575 of an inch thick.

Four types of shipping service are used in distribution, as follows, in the order of the extent of their use: motor delivery service, railway express service, United States Parcel Post, and pickups at the exchange by the exhibitor. Motor delivery service is greater than the three others together.

The average number of film shipments per working week on outgoing movements from exchange to theatre is approximately 120,000, which, when doubled to include the return of prints, amounts to 240,000 shipments weekly or 72,000,000 for the 300 working days each year, representing one of the largest shipping customers in the entire country.

480 films are shipped from or returned to each of the 500 exchanges every week, or approximately 25,000 shipments per exchange annually.

The 500 exchanges as a whole, inspect, store or ship to theatres more than 142,560,000 feet, or 27,000 miles of film per day; 855,360,000 feet, or 162,000 miles per six-day working week; and 42,768,000,000 feet or 8,100,000 miles in the 300 working days of the year—enough to encircle the globe's 25,000-mile circumference some 324 times.

Each exchange handles 285,120 feet, or 54 miles daily; 1,710,720 feet, or 324 miles weekly, and 85,536,000 feet, or 16,200 miles annually.

Fifty per cent of the rental receipts from exhibitors for most features are collected by the exchange within 90 days from the release date.

Average weekly payroll in field distribution exceeds $500,000 weekly, or $1,000 per exchange, totaling $26,000,000 and $52,000 per exchange annually.

Some 12,000 persons are employed at all exchanges, averaging 24 employees per exchange.

The average salary is $41.75 per person, although the scale runs from $14.00, minimum wage for distribution under the code, to $200 weekly and more for highest paid division managers in the field, and a few others.

Criminal Search Unlikely Through Films in Theatres

Suggestions that motion pictures of "wanted" criminals be shown on the screens of motion picture theatres in the hope of their detection by persons in the audience have been under consideration by officials of the Department of Justice, but no decision has been reached.

The proposal contemplated the making of short motion pictures, similar to trailers, in colors, from the photographs, to be accompanied by a brief description of the wanted person, information regarding his habits and other data which may be available.

However, it was indicated by Department officials, that the plan may not be adopted, the disadvantages being seen as far outweighing any accomplishments which might be expected.

In the first place, it was pointed out, once the novelty wore off the pictures of wanted criminals would become a bore to the audiences, and even if the plan were adopted it would be possible only to make pictures of a very limited number of "public enemies," while the government is always on the search for literally thousands.

Further, it is feared, few who saw the pictures would recognize a "wanted" man unless he stepped up to them immediately afterward and told who he was, which is more than unlikely.

And—the chief objection—so many persons would be "turned in" as suspects that it would require all the detectives in the country to identify them—99 out of 100 probably being perfectly reputable citizens bearing no resemblance to the wanted criminal.

To give point to this objection, one official cited the case of the county sheriff who received five photographs of a single wanted man, taken from different angles, and a few days later telegraphed that he had arrested four and was about to pick up the fifth.

The general public, it was explained, is entirely untrained in the identification of criminals.

Public Hero No. 1

Lucien Hubbard production for Metro. Directed by J. Walter Ruben. Screen play by Wells Root. Story by J. Walter Ruben and Wells Root. Photographed by Gregg Toland. Assistant director, Hugh Boswell. Musical score by Edward Ward. Cast: Lionel Barrymore, Jean Arthur, Chester Morris, Joseph Calleia, Paul Kelly, Lewis Stone, Paul Hurst, George E. Stone, Sam Baker. Previewed at the Alexander, Glendale, May 11. Running time, 80 mins.

Another of the department of justice crook-smashing hero pictures to come off the production ways for preview, but bound to have its share of first showings, Metro's 'Public Hero No. 1' stands up sturdily as exciting b.o. entertainment. It has distinction in direction, superb performances, melodramatic sweep, and in competition with other entries in the new cycle and the inevitable comparisons audiences will make, may be depended upon to remain among the leaders.

'Public Hero' starts off with swift, sinister suspense. It picks up arresting character conflict in a penitentiary food riot and uses as its major news-inspired scenes the recent convict kidnaping of prison board members in the San Quentin break; the wipe out of the Purple Gang; the Dillinger face-lifting incident, with an accomplice surgeon devoting his genius to mending outlaw killers, and the final battle with Dillinger when he stalked out of a Chicago theatre to get his requiem of lead.

Main dramatic action shuttles amongst four characters, strikingly portrayed. Lionel Barrymore is the renegade surgeon. Chester Morris is the Department of Justice operative. Joseph Calleia plays the number one mobster, and Jean Arthur is his sis- ng by him with fanatic loyalty when she discovers, shockingly, that he is the object of the government hunt.

These four roles are wholly distinctive, each a superb portrait in itself. Lionel Barrymore comes close to his top characterization in a tragic kind of clowning as the sodden wreck still capable of pathetic professionalism in saving the lives of the hunted.

Jean Arthur shows her capacity as a resourceful and skillful actress in the strangely frank, alternately cajoling and hard girl whose confessed love for Morris develops while he is tracking her convict brother.

Joseph Calleia creates a role which for sinister power and unrelenting ruthlessness will stand beside the classic portraits of screen outlaws. His deadly menace is built with but a few spoken lines and the most meagre gesture—a piece of consummate skill.

Chester Morris capably fulfils the requirements of the effacing, duty driven hero who helps the crook leader escape prison in order to discover the gang's cover and identity. He plays with conviction and handles the romantic requirements nicely. Paul Kelly ably represents the Department of justice chief. Lewis Stone as the prison warden, Paul Hurst and George E. Stone as gangsters are effective, and Sam Baker gives importance to a bit as the victim of Calleia's suspicions.

J. Walter Ruben has directed soundly and with shrewd appreciation of the entertainment values, progressing the action with drive and balance between the romantic, the comic and the plot elements, and scoring most decisively in guiding the characterizations usually sloughed in this type picture. Story, on which Ruben shares credit with Wells Root, is well contrived knits romance with melodramatic drive for both male and femme appeal. Camera job by Gregg Toland is excellent, and the production values impressive.

MPTOA HITS ALLIED, INVITES ALL TO JOIN

President Kuykendall Presents 14 Proposals for 'Reforms'; Analyzes Theatre Ownership

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America on Tuesday sent forth from national headquarters in New York, over the signature of its president, Ed L. Kuykendall, a bulletin of lively content in which it lambasted its competitor, Allied States Association, and invited all "reputable" exhibitors everywhere to enlist with the MPTOA "in self-defense." The bulletin presented an analysis of the general groups owning theatres, presented 14 proposals "for certain principles and reforms," defined its stand on the NRA's film code, offered a recommendation that all owners counsel the Government in its music tax litigation against the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, and protested against the "unfair competition" of traveling shows screening sponsored films.

Intentionally or otherwise, the bombardment of Allied States and its activities arrived just as Allied's first national convention in seven years for all members was getting underway at Atlanta.

Breaks Down Theatre Holdings

Delving statistically into theatre ownership in order to explain the various attitudes of exhibitors toward their competitors, distributors and others, Mr. Kuykendall said there are 14,500 motion picture theatres in the United States now in operation; that less than 10 per cent, or 1,450, are managed and operated by the "national" circuits affiliated with a producer or distributor; that there are 400 local circuits of four or more theatres under the same management, and that altogether the 14,500 theatres are operated by about 3,000 "exhibitors"—individuals, firms, partnerships and corporations engaged in active management of these theatres.

"The rank and file exhibitors, big and little, who are the backbone of the industry, are usually too busy minding their own business to be articulate on industry matters or to devote time to organizations," said Mr. Kuykendall, adding: "This is dangerous, may be disastrous."

"This business has become so close knit and integrated," he warned, "that what is done by a small, noisy and irresponsible faction can cause irreparable damage to everyone."

This led to the invitation to all owners to affiliate with Mr. Kuykendall's organization. "We think we have developed such a representative organization in MPTOA of outstanding theatre owners," he said. "Every reputable exhibitor in the United States should enlist and actively support MPTOA in self-defense, before it is too late."

Attacks Allied Directly

Launching its attack directly at Allied, the MPTOA said: "The long list of great Allied projects that have fizzled, and which they have tried to forget by bringing out new schemes and practices, or by loudly claiming credit for developments they had little or nothing to do with, is familiar to all of us."

Singling out the Allied convention, Mr. Kuykendall charged that "the announced program gives no serious consideration to the business of managing a motion picture theatre.

"Allied, again following in MPTOA footsteps with its national convention, has an opportunity to forget jealousies and blind prejudices and really do something for the theatre owners by indorsing the MPTOA's sane and sensible proposals." But, asks Mr. Kuykendall, "will they bend their efforts towards accomplishing these worthwhile things for all exhibitors, or spend their time on indiscriminate denunciations, passing lurid resolutions, chasing rainbows and trying to run the other fellow's business for him?"

The proposals referred to as formulated by the MPTOA, and which Allied, "our most hostile and jealous rivals are eventually and inevitably swinging around to support," are as follows:

1. Organized self-regulation for this business.
2. A fair and uniform standard exhibition contract.
3. Local and impartial arbitration of trade disputes.
4. Control of unfair competition by NRA code.
5. Reasonable limits on clearance by a local zoning plan.
6. Home rule in settling disputes (local grievance and zoning boards with more authority and less appeals).
7. Local option and majority rule on cut-throat competition, such as premiums, gifts, prizes, double featuring, bank nights and the like.
8. Abolishment of the music tax as a triple payment for the same tune.
9. Abolishment of the inexcusable score charge.
10. Modification of block booking with a reasonable but unconditional rejection privilege.
11. A determined and united fight against any and all unreasonable and discriminatory taxes on this business or any part of it.
12. Opposition to unfair non-theatrical competition.
13. Abolishment of designated playdates.
14. Opposition to the censorship of motion pictures.

Mr. Kuykendall continued the attack on Allied, inferring that Allied has not held a national convention in seven years, "perhaps" because "they were afraid to reveal their weakness by asking their membership to stand up and be counted. It will be quite interesting to see, from unbiased reports, just how many of the 6,000 members they pretend to have can be produced at this maiden effort.

"We understand," he continued, that "these 'hundred per cent independents' have been soliciting the distributors for donations and 'complimentary ads' to finance the Allied convention. Can it be that the pure and undefiled Allied again wants to be sustained by the 'producers and their cohorts'?"

Regarding the NRA, continuance of which is favored by the MPTOA, through "a much better code based on over a year's experience with the present one," Mr. Kuykendall advised that it is useless to make code proposals until Congress definitely decides the future of the NRA.

It was said that "vigorous protest" has been made to the Goodrich Company by the MPTOA against the unfair competition of a free talking picture show, showing Goodrich rubber products in a different town each night.

Fox Head Denies Service Refusal

Sidney R. Kent, president of Fox Film, and Stanley Hand of Chicago, general manager of the Central Division of Electrical Research Products, Inc., were the two star witnesses of the week for the defendants, Erpi, Western Electric Company and American Telephone and Telegraph Company in the anti-trust action brought by General Talking Pictures Corporation and Duovac Radio before Judge John P. Nields in United States district court at Wilmington, Del. The trial recessed on Tuesday afternoon until Monday.

In addition to Mr. Kent and Mr. Hand, three vice-presidents of Erpi, Herbert M. Wilcox, Harry G. Knox and George C. Pratt of Beverly Hills, Cal.; several former Duovac employees, theatre exhibitors and Erpi engineers also testified for the defense.

In the cross examination, Mr. Kent denied that he, as head of the Fox distribution unit, gave orders refusing to supply films to any theatre at any time. He said his company had a censorship list of theatres which were refused films because their equipment was bad and very damaging to the reputation of the products of his firm and not because of non-Erpi sound. He said his company supplied film to theatres with 28 different kinds of equipment.

Hand Denies Statement

Mr. Hand testified in regards to the previous testimony of E. M. Lowe of Boston, New England theatre exhibitor, and Edward G. Levy, associated with the MPTOA of Connecticut, witnesses for the plaintiffs. Mr. Hand denied telling Mr. Lowe that he would be foolish to take DeForest equipment when DeForest was going out of the business and he would then be unable to secure parts for his equipment. He also denied making the statement to Mr. Lowe that Western Electric and Bell Laboratories were in a position to change the recording in the studios whereby film would not be able to be used on any other reproducing equipment, and denied knowing or having ever met Mr. Levy, who testified he visited Mr. Hand with several New England exhibitors to have Erpi service charges cancelled or reduced.

Erpi Engineers Testify

William J. Kupper, western sales manager and distributor for Fox Film, testified that Fox Film made effort to distribute to every theatre irrespective of the type or make of the equipment as long as the sound was satisfactory. Harold M. Steele of Baldwin, N. Y., Erpi service engineer, recalled to the stand, denied he wrote in request to use Western Electric tubes in servicing reports to exhibitors. Ralph E. Lawrence of Medford, Ore., service engineer on the Coast, described service operations in the field.

Edgar R. Wagner, chemical consultant; Chauncey H. Durken, mechanical engineer, and Richard T. Erbacher, accountant, all of New York City, and former employees of Duovac Radio, testified that Duovac tubes were found unsuitable for the films. Duovac is no longer an active company, but will go back into the business if the temporary injunction against the defendants is made permanent, it was learned.

A. Joseph DeFiore, Wilmington, manager of the Park and president of the Independent Motion Picture Owners' Association of Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland; George F. Weilland, Germantown, Pa., operator of theatres in Atlantic City and Ventnor, N. J.; Richard Griffith, Oklahoma City exhibitor; Daniel Katlen, Philadelphia, operator of theatres at Phoenixville and Royersford, Pa., and Benjamin Shindler of Wilmington, operating houses in Wilmington and West Grove, Pa., were subpoenaed by the defendants.

ROSENBLATT QUITS AS NRA COMPLIANCE HEAD

Will Return to Law Practice; NRA Approves Code Budget, Setting $360,000 for Year

Congress continued this week widely divided in its fight over the future of the NRA, and, at the height of the battle, but having no relation to it, Division Administrator Sol A. Rosenblatt, negotiator and guardian of the motion picture code, let it be known that he will resign from the Recovery Administration not later than June 16, after almost two years in the Government's emergency service. He will return to his law practice in New York with the motion picture law firm of Nathan Burkan.

There were no other important code developments in the industry. The 1935 Code Authority budget was approved, as were three resolutions affecting clearance and zoning, some changes were made in the personnel of local boards, and there were the usual hearings held on trade practice grievances and clearance schedules. Twenty-three clearance schedules had been received by the Authority for hearings.

Rosenblatt NRA Leader

Mr. Rosenblatt, who rose to Compliance Director over the whole NRA, becoming one of the "strong men" of recovery under the Blue Eagle, arrived in Washington from Mr. Burkan's office in the summer of 1933 to become a deputy administrator. He quickly came into the limelight—and later before the attention of the Darrow Review Board—by his negotiation of the motion picture code, one of the most difficult which the NRA was called upon to frame. From within the industry Mr. Rosenblatt was attacked frequently, principally by Allied States Exhibitors.

The film code was remarkable in several respects and Mr. Rosenblatt played an integral part in framing it. It was the first and only "vertical" code to be negotiated, and it was the first in which was carried a complete list of studio jobs with the wages that could be paid.

As a result of what Administration authorities called Mr. Rosenblatt's success in getting together factions in the industry which for years had been at loggerheads, he was appointed a division administrator, with all amusement codes under his jurisdiction as well as those of a number of other and unrelated lines which had been found difficult of drafting and administration. More recently, since the National Industrial Recovery Board succeeded General Hugh S. Johnson in the administration of the NRA, he had been serving as director of compliance.

All other NRA officials will automatically go off the payroll when the law expires on June 16, but they will be rehired if the law is extended.

Line Up House Forces

Possibilities that the NRA may be killed by its friends were seen in the insistence of Democratic leaders of the House of Representatives that the new recovery legislation shall extend the present law for two years instead of nine and one-half months as voted last week by the Senate.

House forces are being lined up behind the Administration plan for a two-year extension and retention under codes of intrastate businesses whose activities directly affect interstate commerce. Senate leaders have declared they will not accept the House plan and threaten to delay a vote on the measure to let NRA expire by limitation June 16.

There is a possibility that, recognizing the impossibility of securing a two-year extension, House leaders will seek a compromise in the shape of a continuation of the present law until July 1, instead of April 1, 1936. It has been suggested also that the date be made September 1.

At a White House conference late last week with the Recovery Board, the President approved the following recommendations which had been unanimously adopted by the board and submitted to him, this modified plan having been drawn in an effort to save the NRA:

"1 Two-year-extension. This time is necessary to obtain the cooperation of industry in the formulation of codes, with assurances to management and labor of reasonably permanent conditions. It is necessary code administration; to strengthen enforcement through judicial approval of methods; and to prevent the entire breakdown of labor and fair trade practice provisions by chiselers who are already at work undermining the standards of fair competition. The extension of NRA for a few months will bring rapid deterioration and disintegration of the whole industrial recovery program.

"2 Adequate period for the revision of codes—three to six months.

"3 Improved statement of legislative policies and standards to give additional guidance and authority for administrative action.

"4 Jurisdiction of NRA limited to industries engaged in, or substantially affecting interstate commerce. This will prevent the NRA from taking in too much territory and will strengthen its legal authority.

"5 Provision for voluntary codes and adequate authority for imposition of limited codes. Both are necessary. Voluntary codes to encourage improved business practices, including appropriate labor provisions. Limited codes to insure minimum wages, maximum hours, prohibition of child labor, and Section 7(a).

"6 Definite authority and standards for the NRA to prevent unfair competitive practices, especially those tending to monopoly and destruction of small enterprises.

"7 Methods of code making and enforcement should be further defined; with enforcement primarily through injunction or cease and desist orders, and with provision for adequate protection of individual rights and small enterprises through opportunity for hearing and judicial review, and public control of all compulsory processes."

No objection, criticism or suggestion having been submitted to the Administration concerning the NRA order approving the motion picture code budget for 1935, Mr. Rosenblatt approved the budget, appropriating $360,000. The Code Authority reported expenditures of $21,197 for April and a cash balance of $9,489 on May 1.

Personnel of local code boards was affected by the appointment of former Senator George F. Thompson, impartial member, as chairman of the New York grievance board; the appointment of Martin Toohey, of the LeRoy, Pawtucket, R. I., as chairman of the Providence grievance board, and naming of Philip Sliman, independent exhibitor, to the New Orleans clearance board, succeeding Joseph Barcelona of Baton Rouge, who resigned.

J. C. BAVETTA

newly appointed special representative of Fox Film in South America, is now in New York and will attend the sales convention in Chicago before leaving for his new duties June 15th. Mr. Bavetta, who was managing director of the Paris branch, had been in service in France for eight years, and is succeeded there by F. L. Harley of the Brazil office.

The Code Authority said that it now has before it for approval clearance and zoning schedules for 23 territories, as follows: Atlanta, Birmingham, Bridgeport, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Grand Rapids, Detroit, Hartford, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Memphis, Milwaukee, New Orleans, New Haven, Oakland, Portland, Provo, San Francisco, San Jose, Seattle and Uhrichsville, Ohio.

The Authority, in view of its order of August 30, 1934, prohibiting exhibitors from filing individual protests pending the outcome of appeals to the Authority, passed a resolution that clearance and zoning boards in the above cities shall be authorized to hear and pass upon individual protests.

It was further resolved that clearance for any theatre established by a clearance board for a territory or any part of it, shall supersede any clearance specified in any contract between distributors and exhibitors, irrespective of whether such license was executed prior to the decision of the local board. This resolution was later extended to include the clearance established for any theatre in any decision on any individual protest.

Another resolution, affecting the membership of clearance boards, ordered that, "regardless of his own or his company's interest in any involved theatres, member of such board shall serve as such and vote on all matters involving a zoning and clearance schedule or any protest which in effect involves the zoning and clearance of a substantial number of theatres, but shall be disqualified from serving and voting on other individual protests involving his own or his company's interest directly and not as a class. Any temporary vacancy on the board caused by disqualification as provided for by this resolution, shall be filled from the class of the member in which the vacancy occurred."

The new Los Angeles clearance schedule, first and only one to be adopted, hit a snag when the protests of four exhibitors caused the ordering of a hearing on Thursday.

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

CRITIC GIVES ADVICE TO PUBLICITY HEADS
FEDERAL MAN FILMS BRING CALL FOR HEAVIES
TECHNICOLOR STARTS STUDIO INSTRUCTION
TWELVE FILMS START; EIGHT ARE FINISHED

by VICTOR M. SHAPIRO
Hollywood Correspondent

FLORENCE FISHER PARRY, dramatic critic of the Pittsburgh Press and correspondent for The Delineator, gave publicity heads of studios plenty to think about when she was guest of honor at a recent regular luncheon.

In her opinion, the greatest mistake that Hollywood makes is in appealing to special classes. Women's clubs are very important, she said, but she feels that studios should not lose sight of the fact that they represent only a small portion of the great mass of entertainment buyers. She accused publicity heads of "snowing under" dramatic critics with such a weight of routine copy that the average editor feels nothing but weariness in approaching the morning's mail. The average editor, she says, thinks of Hollywood as a combination of the scandal that hits the front pages, and the mimeographed blurbs which all too frequently hit the wastebasket.

Publicity Should Be for Papers

Publicity departments should be big enough to give important out-of-town editors a certain amount of personal service, she said. She contended that columns of space could be won for Hollywood if publicity copy were written for the special needs of a paper, instead of for the special needs of a studio.

Heavies in Demand Again

Since the public enemy cycle "petered out," due to public indifference, most of the bit players endowed with tough faces and cauliflower ears have had rough sledding at the casting office. Their faces no longer in demand, some of the boys considered having their faces lifted.

Now, however, as the G-men cycle rides high, the gangster type is working again, but this time as a target for the G-men's guns. Too, the leading players who formerly portrayed the big shot racketeers are doing a right-about-face and playing G-men, now masters of the hunt.

James Cagney went from "Public Enemy" and "Doorway to Hell" to "G-Men." Chester Morris, gangster in "Princess O'Hara," is "Public Hero No. 1." Dick Arlen, crook in "City Streets," goes straight in Reliance's film, "Let 'Em Have It." Bob Armstrong, familiar in gangster roles, is Cagney's chief in "G-Men." Paul Kelly, racketeer in "Broadway Through a Keyhole" and "Star of Midnight," is boss of the federals in "Public Hero No. 1." Lloyd Nolan, screen "Dillinger" in "Stolen Harmony," is the federal instructor in Cagney's opus.

Eight Films Completed

As the dozen pictures started, eight were completed. Several of these look to be in the "big" picture class. Two of these are credited to Fox. First completed was "In Old Kentucky," which features Will Rogers with Dorothy Wilson, Charles Sellon, Russell Hardie, Louise Henry and Bill Robinson. George Marshall directed. "Farmer Takes a Wife" also was finished. Janet Gaynor and Henry Fonda have the lead roles. Charles Bickford, Slim Summerville, Andy Devine are in support. Victor Fleming directed.

MGM likewise completed two pictures which match the Fox name value output. In "No More Ladies" Joan Crawford, Robert Montgomery and Franchot Tone are starred with Charles Ruggles, Edna Mae Oliver and Reginald Denny featured. E. H. Griffith directed. Ontario Showmen Fighting Increase In Theatre Taxes

In the face of blunt refusal on the part of Premier M. F. Hepburn of Ontario, Canada, to contenance any objections, exhibitors of the province are casting about for their next move in an attempt to forestall effectiveness of the drastically increased admission tax program, which calls for a tax of five cents on each ticket of 25 cents.

Exhibitors of the province have not the remotest chance to effect a reduction or revision of the proposed increase, which is effective June 1, declared Premier Hepburn. He indicated that objectors were only wasting their time. "The act will be rigidly enforced," he said. "We need the money for relief purposes and are going to raise it from that source."

The Toronto District Trades and Labor Council has taken up the protest, and local labor leaders have spoken strongly against the increase as a burden on the working classes. W. P. Covert, member of the Labor Council, representing the Toronto Motion Picture Operators Local, of which he is business agent, alone took the stand that no action should be taken "until the theatres paid the scale to employees."

The government's plan is to raise an additional $1,500,000 during the next twelve months, as compared with the $9,500,000 which was the total revenue from the amusement source in 1934. "We didn't conceive of any government, two weeks after the close of Parliament, attempting to raise $1,500,000 through one industry, without giving that industry the courtesy of an interview," said Oscar Hanson, general manager of Allied Exhibitors of Ontario. A committee of exhibitors has been named to deal with the situation, but what they may be able to do is considered questionable.

N. L. Nathanson, president of Famous Players Canadian, said, "It is a question whether the industry in Ontario can survive under the new taxes."

Allied Exhibitors suggested that all theatres in the province close down during June, July and August in protest. The Independent Theatre Owners of Canada reported that forms were in circulation for a gigantic petition from theatre patrons.

Local No. 306 Is Returned to Members

Projectionists' Local No. 306, that branch of the IATSE in New York that has been the target of many industry and newspaper attacks because of the manner in which various administrations have conducted its management, was returned this week to its members by the International Alliance. Film Chamber for International Use Film Congress Aim

by J. K. RUTENBERG
Berlin Correspondent

The organization of an International Film Chamber, consisting of representatives of various national film associations, and designed to bring about close cooperation among the several branches of the motion picture industry throughout the world, was decided upon in principle at the recent International Film Congress held in Berlin. Representatives of 21 countries attended the congress. [Pictures in Pictorial Session.]

It was agreed that the by-laws and regulations of the Film Chamber should be drawn up at Venice by the representatives of the national associations. To further that plan it was intended to designate a committee which would draft regulations in accordance with the aims and purposes indicated by the several representatives.

The statute committee is to consist of members from those countries in which all phases of cinematography are practiced, including France, England, Italy, Spain, Germany, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Belgium, and a representative of the Rome Institute.

The Congress recommended that fees paid for music used in theatres which is not directly connected with the picture shown, should be fixed in accordance with a rate taking into account only the capacity of the house. The Congress also recommended the formation in each country of an organization combining all companies subject to the payment of copyright fees and the formation of all such national associations in an international organization.

Warner Sues on "G-Men" Ad Use

Through Vitagraph, Inc., subsidiary, Warner has instituted two federal court actions in Chicago, seeking to protect its motion picture, "G Men" against alleged unfair competition in the advertising of another picture by theatres in the Middlewest.

The suits have been brought against Indiana Amusement Enterprises, Inc., operating the Palace theatre in South Bend, Ind., and against Publix-Great States Theatres, Inc., operating the Palace theatre in Peoria, Ill. Each action seeks an injunction to restrain unfair competition on the part of the defendants in advertising in newspapers, billboards, and the like the United Artists picture, "Let 'em Have It," with its title subordinated in type to the phrase "G Men."

According to a Warner statement, ". . . . the title 'Let 'em Have It' has been subordinated to large headlines proclaiming its depicts 'Govt Men in Action' with the 'G' and 'Men' in tremendous letters. Furthermore, phraseology taken word for word from our copyrighted pressbook on 'G Men' has been used in advertising the other picture in newspapers."

ACCENT ON YOUTH

Paramount

Being adapted from a stage play which, in addition to proving a Broadway hit also is being popularly received in many spots throughout the country, this is a smart comedy farce. Potential showmanship being evident in both story content and related production values, the cast, writing and directing credits also are exploitable features. Modern in every phase with crisp, vivid dialogue adding colorful comedy to the gayly complicated situations and action denouements, it's the story of a middle-aged successful playwright, in love with his youthful vivacious secretary, but who, believing his age a handicap, practically forces her into marriage with a young actor starring in his play. An action packed athletic married life in which swimming, riding, golf and polo, not only heighten production values, but prove too strenuous for the young bride, drive her back to the playwright. In a dishabile, "compromise" bedroom sequence, the young husband gets the necessary divorce evidence that convinces the girl she prefers the brilliance and charm of the staid playwright to her husband's hectic calisthentics.

The story is an original play by Samson Raphaelson with screen play by Claude Binyon, who recently collaborated in the adaptation of "Mississippi." Direction is by Wesley Ruggles, whose forte is the kind of material here contained, as evidenced by "The Gilded Lily," "College Humor" and "Shoot the Works."

Sylvia Sidney, absent from the screen for some months, but whose accomplishments are well known, and Herbert Marshall, currently in "The Painted Veil," "Good Fairy" and the forthcoming "The Flame Within," have the lead roles. Third angle to the triangle is portrayed by Phillip Read. Supporting players include Holmes Herbert, Catherine Doucet, Astrid Allwyn, Ernest Cossart, Samuel Hinds, Florence Roberts and Laura Treadwell.

THE HANDS OF ORLOC

MGM

In essence this is a strange dramatic romantic story, strangely told. Dealing with a weird subject and being told against a background that makes for thrills and chills and a consequent amount of comparative horror, it tells of a scientist who, taking the hands of a guillotined criminal, replaces them on the arms of a concert pianist. In love with the man's wife, he also seeks by mental influence to convince him that he is a murderer and thus remove him from the path to his victim's wife's affections.

Production is adapted from a widely read book of the same title by Maurice Renard. Screen play is by Guy Endore and Karl Freund. Freund made "The Mummy" among several other Universal features.

In the starring role it marks the American screen debut of Peter Lorre. Well known in Europe, his appearances in "M" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much" have made him familiar to American audiences. Principal support includes such marquee screen names as Colin Clive, now in "The Bride of Frankenstein;" Francis Drake, outstanding in "Forsaking All Others;" Ted Healy, in "Murder in the Fleet;" Isabel Jewel and Sarah Haden. Among other players are Ed Brophy, Henry Kolker, Harold Huber, Keye Luke, seen in "The Painted Veil," and featured in "Oil for the Lamps of China;" Ian Wolfe, Murray Kinnell, Rollo Lloyd, Charles Trowbridge, Mary Beatty and Otto Hoffman.

Exploitation that concentrates attention on the picture's personnel, particularly Lorre, and also makes use of the many proved ideas that have demonstrated their effectiveness in the selling of this type entertainment, should prove useful in selling the production.

IN OLD KENTUCKY

Fox

As a stage play, "In Old Kentucky" was played in practically every city and town in the country over a period of more than 40 years. Typically American in content, it is down to earth comedy, romance, drama, exciting thrill and action. Modernized to suit present conditions, yet retaining all its old homey savor, it promised to be the kind of attraction that will delight the old-timers as well as those of this generation, and with Will Rogers in the role of Steve Tapley, renowned race horse trainer, Romeo in his own right and also protector of youthful romance, it looks to be a showmanship feature comparable to any of his successes. One feature alone, the thrilling race marking the climatic sequences, is exploitation material of the most desired caliber.

Modernization of the great Charles T. Dazey play was handled by Sam Hellman and Gladys Lehman, who did "The County Chairman" and also the recent "It's a Small World." Direction is by George Marshall, who made "Life Begins at 40" and "$10 Raise."

The cast supporting Rogers includes Dorothy Wilson, the girl who rose from stenographer to star in "Age of Consent," later to be seen in "Eight Girls in a Boat" among other pictures; Russell Hardie, seen in "Sequoia;" Charles Sellon seen with Rogers in "Life Begins at 40" and remembered for his part in "Bright Eyes;" Louise Henry, seen in several MGM pictures including "Society Doctor" and "Reckless;" Etienne Girardot, Esther Dale, who followed her debut in "Crime Without Passion" with appearances in "The Wedding Night;" Bill Robinson, who not only dances but teaches Rogers to dance, a bit that should rival his singing, and Charles Richman, now in "The Glass Key," Alan Dinehart and John Ince.

TOP HAT

Radio

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are this picture's stars. Their success in "Flying Down to Rio," "Gay Divorcee" and "Roberta" bespeaks their showmanship and exploitation value. The entire musical score and about half a dozen specialty tunes are by Irving Berlin, writer of music and lyrics for several Ziegfeld "Follies" and scores of popular tunes, a personality of unquestioned showmanship appeal. Direction is by Mark Sandrich, maker of among many musicals "The Gay Divorcee," "Hips, Hips, Hooray," the short "So This Is Harris" and "Melody Cruise." In those qualities there is plenty of exploitation value.

A spectacular musical feature, the substantiating story is a gay romantic comedy about a whirlwind love affair that precipitates hilarious complications. The locales are London and the exotic and colorful canals of Venice, Italy. The big eye and ear feature is the lavishly produced "Piccolino" number, a potential rival for popularity of the recent "Continental."

Supporting cast includes Edward Everett Horton, a feature of "The Gay Divorcee" and currently appearing in "$10 Raise," Helen Broderick, noted stage star; Eric Rhodes and Eric Blore, who followed their debut in "Flying Down to Rio" with many other popularity creating appearances, and Donald Meek.

Not only does the production feature Astaire in a couple of brand new solo dance routines, but he is also presented with Miss Rogers in others. The type of comedy prepared for Horton and also Blore and Rhodes promises to be one of the production's commercial highlights.

Production settings and the group arrangements of girl and boy chorus dance supports are lavish, and abetted by different camera work promising of an addition exploitation angle to accentuate those already mentioned.

HARDROCK HARRIGAN

Atherton

In this production George O'Brien gets completely away from his familiar "western" character. The story is a he-man action dramatic romance. An entirely out of doors feature, it is being filmed against authentic backgrounds of the Colorado River Aqueduct, one of the world's greatest engineering-construction feats.

The story is an original by Charles Furthman with screen play by Ray Schrock and Dan Jarrett. Direction is by Dave Howard.

In the story, O'Brien, last in "Cowboy Millionaire," is a happy-go-lucky construction foreman. In love with Irene Hervey, proprietress of the camp commissary, he has for a rival Henry Kolker. Their ambitions both for the girl's affections and to set the best building record brings them into continual conflict. When O'Brien is trapped in a cave-in, enemy Kolker, at the risk of his life, rescues him. A fight scheduled to settle all their differences, O'Brien permits himself to be branded a coward as he refuses to go through, knowing that the excitement of the action would be fatal to Kolker's weak heart. Eventually, everything is amicably settled with the erstwhile foes buddies and Kolker glad that O'Brien wins the girl.

Story content being potentially promising of showmanship capable of piquing the interest of both O'Brien and action-adventure fans, the background against which it is told should be given more than usual consideration. Newsreels, papers and magazines devoting much space to the scope and importance of the Aqueduct work, there is an interest there that can readily be turned to advantage of the picture.

THE ARIZONIAN

Radio

In this production, all the elements in story content, production values, characters and spirit that made western pictures one of the screen's most popular forms of entertainment are being combined. The stage coach robbery, a pretty girl in danger, the timely arrival of the eventual hero, romantic conflict, bad man depredations, hard riding, quick shooting, hair-raising action and the final if at times complicated triumph of the forces of law, order and decency over those of outlawed banditry all have their place.

Story is an original screen play by Dudley

IN THE STUDIO CUTTING ROOM

Nichols, whose most recent credit is the screen play on "The Informer." It is being directed by Charles Vidor, who made "Strangers All."

Richard Dix is starred. Among his western credits are "Cimmaron" and the recent "West of the Pecos." Opposite him is Margot Grahame, whose American screen debut in "The Informer," won her much commendation. Supporting players include Preston Foster, who was seen in Vidor's "Strangers All," as was James Bush; Louis Calhern, last seen in "The Count of Monte Cristo"; Joe Sauers, now in "The Informer," Ray Mayer, Willie Best (formerly Sleep 'n' Eat) and the screen veteran Francis Ford.

While the story consists of the elements mentioned above, it has been given many novel twists differentiating it in several ways from straight formula. Most significant of these is the climax, which, being completely different from what is expected, lends a novelty to the story that should have definite showmanship value.

CHINA SEAS

MGM

Romance, drama, melodrama, comedy, deviltry, adventure, danger, heroism and sacrifice on the exotic China Seas is the stuff of which this picture is being made. Typhoons, pulse tingling pirate attacks, life-threatening explosions are the tune to which it moves. All of it is audience entertainment material and showmanship meat; and of added lure with three of MGM's biggest names in the cast. Clark Gable as the dashing skipper of the Kin Lung, most notorious ship plying the waters of the East; Jean Harlow, the "China Doll," toast of the coast from Shanghai to Singapore; Wallace Beery, a lustful, rascally trader pirate chief, the rogue of the Orient. A combination of commercial values is here that should assure exploitation with which to sell the picturization of Crosbie Garstin's best selling novel.

An Irving Thalberg production, which promises every production value which MGM has resource to, it's a production which promises to quicken the pulses of a world weary of humdrum civilization, and thirsting for the peril, action-packed lure of the East. Being directed by Tay Garnett, whose "S. O. S. Iceberg" and "Destination Unknown" are demonstrative of his adaptability to this bizarre type of story, the name values listed above are supplemented by Lewis Stone, Rosalind Russell, C. Aubrey Smith, Dudley Digges, Ivan Lebedeff, William Henry, Donald Meek, Edward Brophy, Forrester Harvey; Robert Benchly, noted humorist, who, living through all the excitement, is convinced that nothing ever happens on the China Seas. The large number of minor players included is augmented by a host of Chinese character extras.

A production potentially meriting the best efforts of the keenest exploitation minds, it can be expected that the producing company will back it up with a publicity drive.

CHARLIE CHAN IN EGYPT

Fox

Eerie adventures, developing gripping drama; charming romance, gay comedy and suspense-packed mystery are in this latest Charlie Chan. Amid the superstition shrouded land of the pyramids, the treasure trove tomb of an ancient king is discovered by a French historical Society. Unknown vandals steal the priceless relics. Chan is summoned to trap them. There's a murder. Was it the vengeance of an Egyptian goddess of the time before history began or was it the work of shadowy moderns? Chan's skill and courage are tested to the limit, not only in solving the mystery, but in protecting the romance of youthful lovers.

Featuring a popular character in an unique and intriguing locale, with Warner Oland, currently appearing in "Werewolf of London," another baffling thriller, appearing for the eighth time in the title role, the picture is one that should not only capitalize upon the commercial success of its predecessors, but also give exhibitors an exploitation feature that needs little but its own values to assure popularity. One of the exploitation features is the fact that only one of the supporting players has ever before appeared in a Chan picture. Mainly, however, the players are all well known. In support will be seen "Pat" Patterson, featured in "Lottery Lover"; Thomas Beck, seen in "Chan in Paris" and several other Fox pictures; Rita Cansino, who will make her debut in "Dante's Inferno"; Stepin Fetchit, Frank Conroy, now in "Call of the Wild"; Jameson Thomas, Nigel de Brulier, James Eagles, Paul Porcasi and Arthur Stone.

The background, Egypt, has seldom been used for a picture setting and thus constitutes a novel feature which permits the creation of much that is new and different in selling the attraction. With everything from mummies to sacred scarabs to work with in telling of the goings-on in the pre-Cleopatra land of the Nile, showmanship ingenuity has a wide scope in which to stir patron curiosity.

MOM

Universal

Adapted from the novel, "Lady Tubbs," by Homer Croy, noted humorist, "Mom" is a character comedy. In crisp, vivid, fun-packed fashion, it deals with a woman. First as cook in a railroad construction camp, she's the crew mother, loved by all for her kindnesses and the fact that she doesn't mind taking an occasional shot at the more gentle classes. To foster her niece's romance with a blue-blood, she starts east, only to be taken in tow by an English barrister, who informs her that she is heiress to a British fortune. As many laughable English atmosphered sequences ensue, she arrives in Long Island to undergo a series of hilarious adventures as "Lady Tubbs." Coddled by the aristocracy, she reverts to type, amazing her new friends by the quickness of her tongue, but nevertheless making it possible for her kin to marry on more than equal footing.

Screen play is by Barry Trivers with direction by Alan Crosland, recent maker of "Mr. Dynamite" and remembered for "It Happened in New York" and "The White Cockatoo."

Alice Brady, soon to be seen in Reliance's "Let 'Em Have It" and recently in "The Gay Divorcee" and "Gold Diggers of 1935," is featured in the title role. The niece is played by Anita Louise, recently in "The Firebird" and "Judge Priest." She, with Douglas Montgomery, starred in "Little Man, What Now" and "Mystery of Edwin Drood," carry the story's romance. Other name players are Alan Mowbray, last in "Night Life of the Gods," and featured in the forthcoming "Anna Karenina" and "Becky Sharp," Pioneer's all-color picture; June Clayworth, seen in "Transient Lady" and "Good Fairy"; Hedda Hopper and Lumsden Hare.

NOT ON YOUR LIFE

Warner

Hilarious mirth and merriment appear to be the potential entertainment and exploitation qualities of this story, an original by Isabel Dawn and Boyce DeGaw, who also did the screen play. Refreshingly premised, it's the yarn of a big-time gambler who had for his slogan "I bet anything on anything." Reading about the famous English insurance firm of Lloyds when he is fed up on the dishonesty and chicanery of gambling, and sensing that there's just as much profit and none of the dirty work in the more legitimate game, he decides to become an insurance man. His big case is insuring a broadway stage star, daughter of a lovable old chiseler, against matrimony. He falls in love with his client and even though he knows it's going to cost him a lot of money, marries the girl after he has caused the most complicated traffic jam that New York had ever witnessed.

Colorful and exciting in action and dialogue, using for its background many incidents of the sporting world, including racing, boxing, baseball, polar flights and other events, it puts Warren William in a role that looks to be glove-fitting. As all the action centers about him, the cast features Claire Dodd in the role of the stage star; Guy Kibbee, a diehard Confederate veteran as her father. William Gargan is William's right-hand man and he, together with Vince Barnett, Hobart Cavanaugh and Maude Eburne, contribute much of the comedy. Other players are Clay Clement, the traffic jammed would-be husband; Errol Flynn, Mary Treen, Herman Bing, Jack Norton, George Meeker and Eddie Shubert.

The director is Robert Florey, recently credited with "Crashing Society," "Florentine Dagger" and "Woman in Red." An exploitation feature, it appears to be one to which much unique and novel showmanship can be applied, in which the title can be used as the basis for everything done.

Warner

This production is adapted from a serial that appeared a short time ago under the title "Women Are Bum Newspaper Men" in the Saturday Evening Post. As may be understood from either title, it is a newspaper story. Its entertainment idea is just what the original designation implies—the effort of a man reporter to prove to his sweetheart and rival reporter that she's in the wrong business. As he seeks to prove his contention, the story, in addition to being essentially a dramatic romance, runs the full gamut of entertainment and showmanship comedy, thrill and surprise.

In its lead roles it brings together Bette Davis and George Brent, previously teamed in "Housewife." Individually, Miss Davis scored a big hit in "Of Human Bondage" and "Bordertown," and is soon to be seen in "Girl from 10th Avenue." Brent's latest credits include "Living on Velvet" and the forthcoming "Goose and Gander" and "Stranded." The rest of the cast is composed of familiar screen names, listing Winifred Shaw, Roscoe Karns, Joseph Crehan, Joseph King, Dorothy Dare, June Martell, J. Carroll Naish, J. Farrell MacDonald, Gordon Westcott, Addison Richards and Georges Renavent.

The story moves to the rapid-fire efforts of the rivals to prove their cases. As covering an execution, which leads to comedy complications, gives Brent the first edge, the picture takes on a more thrilling tinge when, following a murder mystery trial, Brent scoops everybody by getting the verdict before the judge and frames his sweetheart into writing a false story only to have her unearth the guilty killer and prove that women are good newspaper men.

The screen play is by Roy Chanslor, who did "Murder in the Clouds," and Lillie Hayward, credited with "Housewife" and "Big Hearted Herbert." Direction is by Michael Curtiz, who made "The Case of the Curious Bride" and the current "Black Fury."

SHOWMEN'S REVIEWS

Public Hero No. 1

(MGM)

Drama

Because of title and certain phases of story and production content this picture will probably be considered a unit in the "federal man" cycle. Yet because of its entertainment value, it hardly requires that identification. "Public Hero No. 1" is a well balanced combination of proved entertainment qualities. In it there is tense drama, surprising romantic love interest that has comedy contrast, thrilling and exciting action which moves in a menacing atmosphere, theatrical heroics and the lure of topicalness.

With Chester Morris in the hero role, as an undercover man, the show builds itself around three notorious headline incidents; the recent San Quentin jail break, in which members of the prison parole board were hostages, atmospheric illusions to the depredations of the Purple Gang and a half real-half imaginary conception of the last days of the Dillinger trailing and killing. The picture's romantic appeal and comedy are interwoven into the thrill of these incidents.

In the jail-localed opening sequences there is much that is reminiscent of the grim reality of "The Big House." There, although his identity is concealed, Federal Operative Jeff Crane engineers the mutiny and break that freed public enemy number one, Sonny. Then the show starts out on a trek all its own. Glorifying the operative in his devotion to duty, it takes on a comedy romance twist involving Theresa, Sonny's sister. This departure assumes an important aspect as the underlying drama packed premise of the story is continually maintained by Crane's efforts to get drunken doctor Barrymore to wounded Sonny's hideout. When, after Sonny slaps Theresa, after he forces Jeff to bring her to the hideout, he socks the ace desperado. The picture then becomes regular federal man stuff as Jeff's identity is finally established with Sonny's gang. There follows the trapping and slaying of Sonny, in which wide but unmistakable liberties have been taken with the actual Dillinger roundup even to his death in the alley following his attendance at a show.

While it is legitimate to consider this as a federal-man feature and it is hardly advisable to ignore that quality completely, there is nevertheless enough straight drama, love interest, comedy action and excitement in the picture to justify its selling as something entirely apart from the current cycle.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Hooray for Love

(Radio)

Comedy Romance

Endowed with an intriguing sounding title, this backstage atmosphered comedy romance also has many other showmanship-entertainment assets on which to base a campaign. The film has showmanship qualities which may be used to win the appreciation of a goodly portion of either class or mass audiences. Those meriting exploitation consideration are to be found in the cast personnel, story content, musical novelty which is solo, chorus and instrumental; diverse specialty dancing, featuring famous artists and lavishly mounted production effects.

The theme concerns a young man ambitious to be a stage producer. In love with the girl he wants to star, he meets the familiar fate of the endless army of embryo Zeigfelds. Brought face to face with realities, far different from his dreams, the youth is swindled by unscrupulous promoters; temperamental stars and erratic managers make his life a nightmare; his own love trouble is intensified by the romantic chicanery of his prospective father-in-law; practical stage craft makes hash of his grand production theories. Yet when all is most discouraging the girl's father helps, the show is a success.

In it, elements that ordinarily make for good showmanship and entertainment are paraded. While their love story builds, Gene Raymond and Ann Sothern are featured in several vocal numbers; comedy is contributed in two ways by Pert Kelton, an amateur song bird with grandiose ideas of her own ability, and Etienne Girardot, her sweatheart and manager. Their fun is supplemented by that of Thurston Hall and Georgia Caine. Maria Gambarelli, noted ballerina, is starred in a toe dance accompanied by an eye-filling chorus. Bill Robinson dances alone and has his rapid fire tapping matched by Jeni LeGon with "Fats" Waller joining. Villainy is supplied by Sam Hardy and Lionel Stander, as the stage manager, accounts for more comedy.

While following a familiar path, the production is not without definite and refreshing novelty. Any of its ingredients—romance, light drama, comedy, music—may be ingeniously adapted to an attention-creating advance. Which ones, or which combinations to use, depends to a large extent on a knowledge of what is most likely to appeal best to local audiences.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

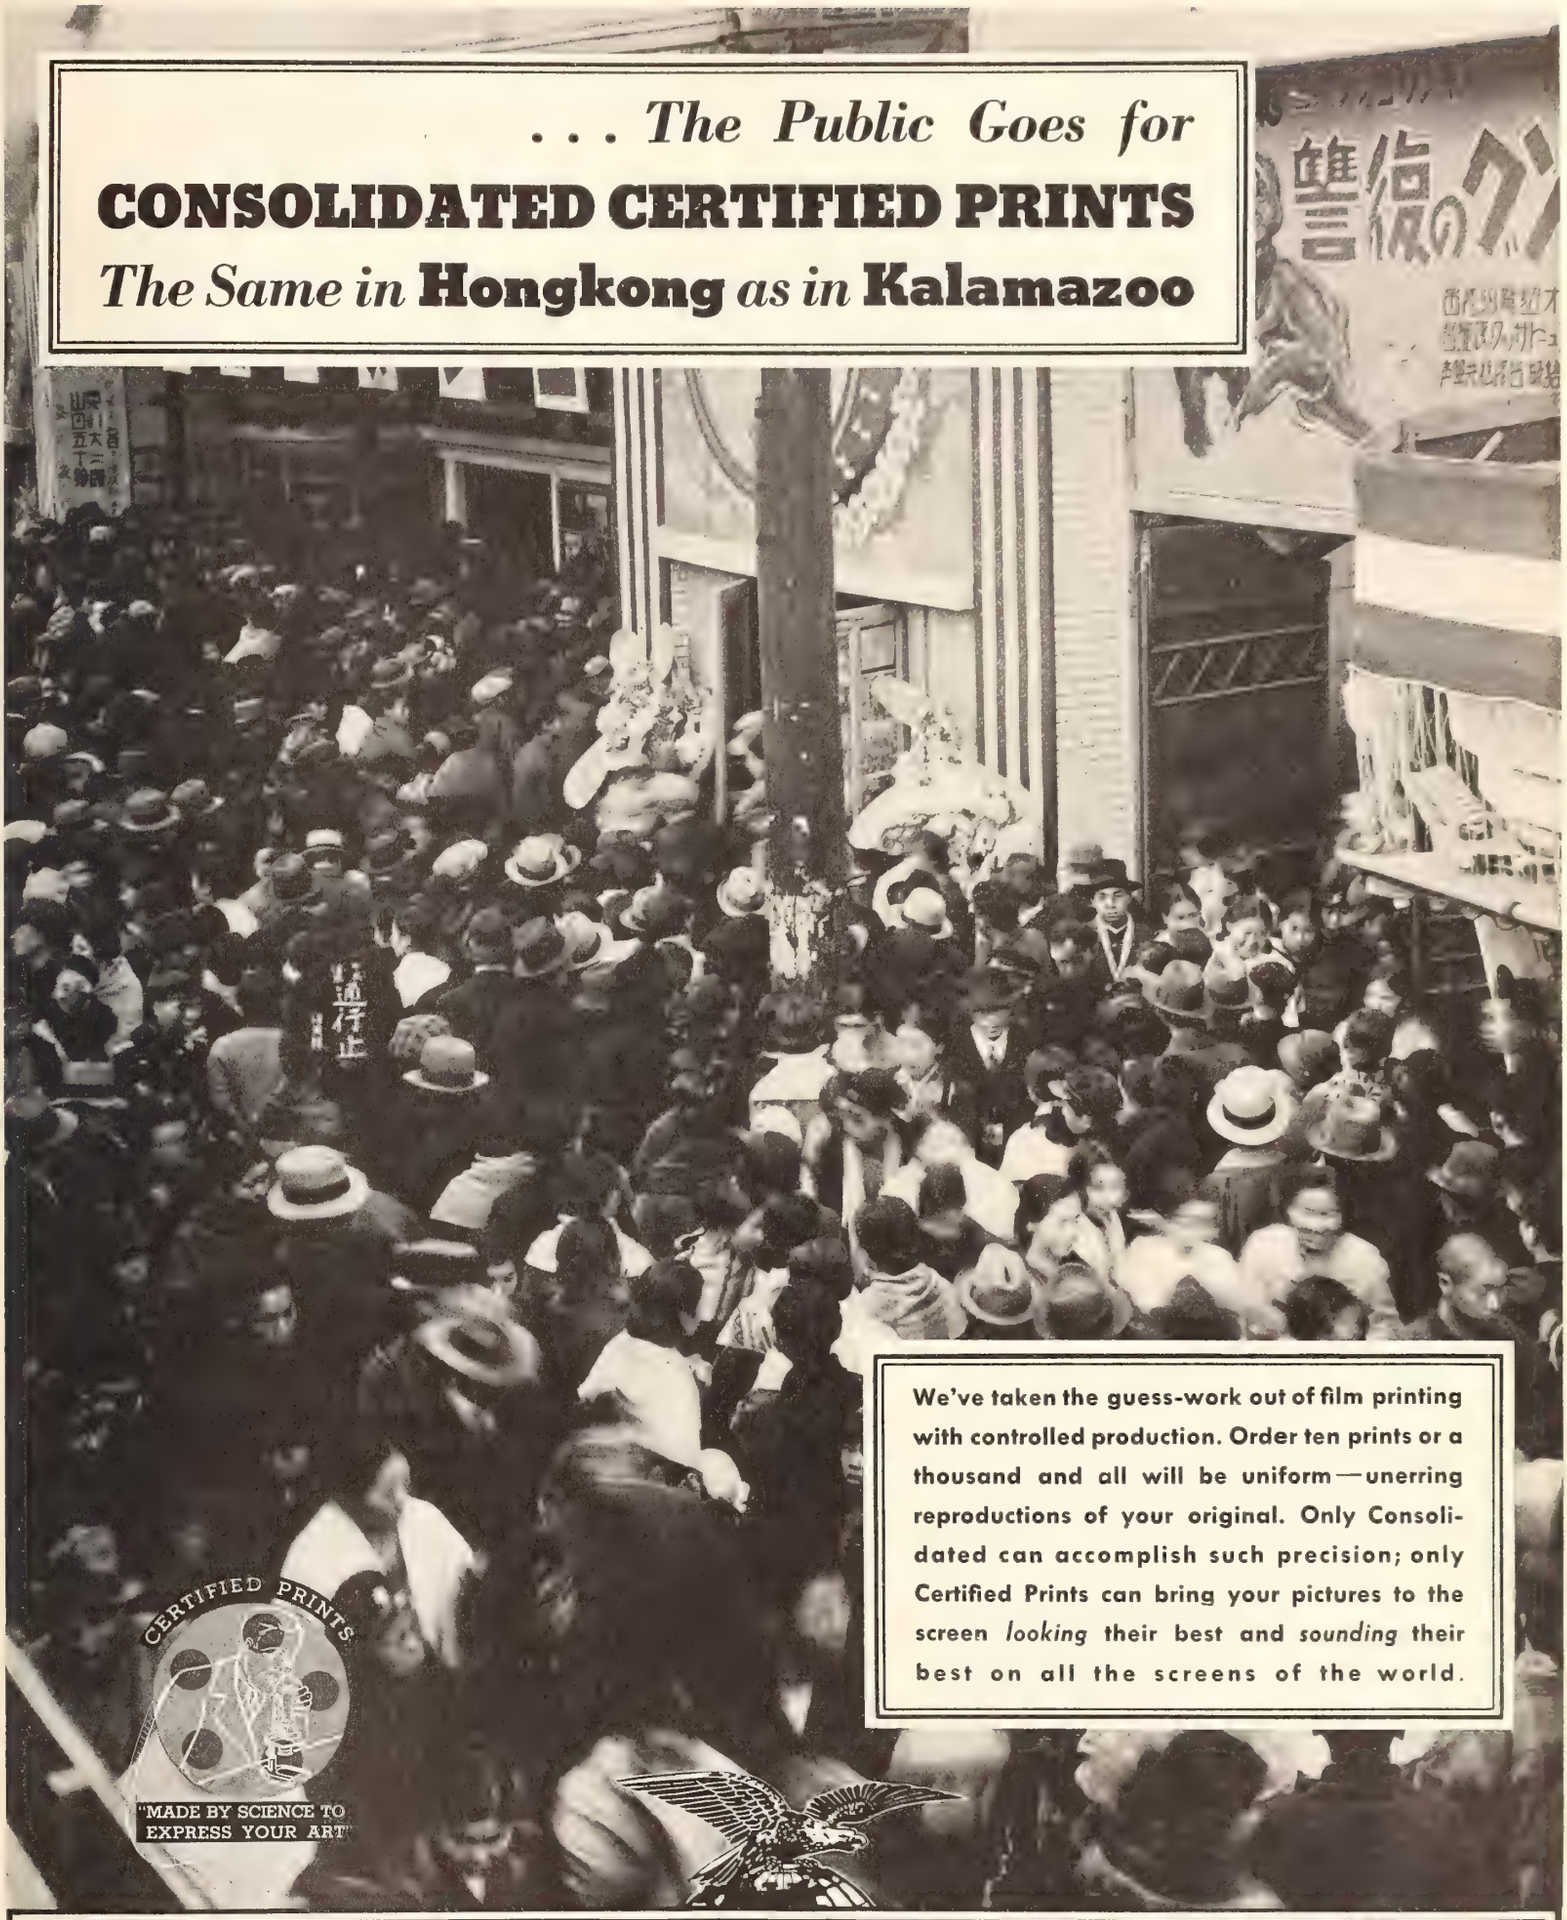
Under the Pampas Moon

(Fox)

Romantic Drama

There's much in this picture to entertain, and much easily adaptable showmanship with which to sell it. For the first purpose it has intriguing romance with a triangular love twist, poignant but not too much drama, comedy that should prove a surprise, music and human interest, all novelly put together and presented against unusually photographed backgrounds. For the second, it has Warner Baxter back in the type of role in which he won great popularity; this time as a gay swashbuckling buckaroo gaucho of the Argentine pampas, singing and dancing to heroically win his way into the heart of Ketti Gallian. Also there is solo dancing by Veloz and Yolanda and by Rita Cansino. John Miljan and Jack LaRue take care of the villainy and in Soledad Jiminez and Ann Codee are a pair of comediennes who are likely to send people out of the theatre talking about them.

Fast moving and quite different from the current amusement trend, the show is localed on the pampas and in Buenos Aires. Cesar, idol of the gauchos, is a romantic hero envied by his fellows and adored by the women. To the tune of a gaucho riding song, an airplane comes out of the sky and Cesar loses his heart to its fair passenger Yvonne. Winning a race, everything is blissful for Cesar and his new-found love until Bazan steals the pride of Cesar's life, his horse. The trail of recovery leads to Buenos Aires where Yvonne has gone and, as may be understood, Scott, Yvonne's manager, had a finger in the dirty work.



Following gay scenes which transform the gaucho to a gay Argentine man about town, Veloz and Yolanda dance, Yvonne sings, Mama Pepita (Cesar's mother) gets in her comedy and Cesar catches up with his horse. Anticlimaxed by a situation in which Cesar thinks that Yvonne is in league with those trying to cheat him, the horse wins a thrilling race and a fortune for Cesar. Recounted in a series of hectic comedy situations, Cesar, his gauchos, the horse, mother and Yvonne return to the pampas.

There is plenty in this picture in name, story and production values to catch patron fancy and, what is probably more important, enough commercially adaptable assets to develop an effective campaign.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Nitwits

(Radio)

Comedy

What everybody expects of nitwits is delivered here—comedy with a capital C—old-fashioned nonsensical foolishness. Fun is its sole quality. There are a couple of songs and one duet dance number in it, but those who see the picture undoubtedly will forget those features just as completely as the producers seemed to forget them. A murder mystery, full of threat, menace and dire things motivates the real comedy, but that, too, even though it is continued, is pretty well forgotten or made hash of as everything gives way to slapstick chase hilarity, in which everything from stone demijohns to bath tubs eventually hits somebody on the head.

An attempt to describe the picture and all that happens in it would be as foolish as the show itself. Suffice it to say that, although the early sequences in which Johnny and Newton monkey around with a truth-telling electrical device are hardly any tip-off as to the hectic merriment that eventually worked the preview audience into an uproar, all that happens may be low comedy, but is potentially promising of what the customers may like to see.

Trying to prove that Mary, loved by Johnny, is the innocent suspect of Lake's "black widow" murder, Johnny and Newton get themselves into one ludicrous jam after another. All the action takes place in a building that is running over with cops, but that doesn't prevent the guardians of the law from being handcuffed to balustrades, almost choking to death on near-swallowed tennis balls; a chase through a costume company in which nobody knows whether he is the chased or chaser, but in which everybody manages to get it on the head, and a final trapping of the killer.

Anything that even closely resembles unity, coherence or the logical following up of a plot is unceremoniously tossed out the window. The only thing continued is an intensive effort to embellish old ways and create new ways of making people laugh. That is the film's showmanship. Sell the patrons on the idea that "Nitwits" is an all-laugh feature.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Break of Hearts

(Radio)

Romantic Drama

As the title indicates, this is a love story. It is also a heart drama. Concentrating on those qualities, it embellishes them with other entertainment and showmanship assets, principally light comedy relief and an intriguing musical accompaniment. An emotion stirring feature, aimed to appeal to the more tender sentiments, it is the kind of attraction that probably will prove most interesting to women. Yet because of the quality of its story; that of its romance, drama and comedy, plus the unusualness of the function filled by music, it is also an attraction that holds much for both class and mass audiences.

The basic story of "Break of Hearts" is neither new nor different. It is premised on a familiar plot, but one which many times has proved its entertainment and commercial value. Motivated by an atmosphere of humanness, it is natural in its portrayal of what most human beings would do under conditions similar to the situations in which its characters find themselves. The story is simple. It is that of mutual love which from an accidental beginning flowered into joy and happiness which, as it encountered worldly temptations and failings, became a shattered illusion for the woman, only to be reborn in triumph.

In it Roberti is a great orchestra conductor. Adored by many women, he meets and falls in love with Constance, a meek but ambitious composer who long has admired the great leader. Married, their life is every woman's dream until Roberti, succumbing to temptation, blasts all Constance's hope and trust. Leaving Roberti, Constance's road is rocky. Heartbroken at first, Roberti goes to Europe, where, under the inspiration of Maestro Tlama, he gets a grip on himself.

Later, in New York again, at a New Year's celebration, Roberti meets an artificial sophisticated Constance who spurns his plea for reconciliation. Turning up drunk at a concert, he shocks his sponsors and patrons, but does something to Constance's heart that causes her to lift him out of the gutter and lead him to a new and brighter future.

Sold in a manner that convinces it is the picturization of a pleasing, but sometimes heart disturbing story of two love hungry people; of a man who had to win the love and respect of his wife all over again, there is plenty to sell in addition to the two stars, Katharine Hepburn and Charles Boyer. Their names, in connection with the title, and catchlines describing the story should prove a sufficient basis on which to work.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Produced and distributed by RKO Radio. A Pandro S. Berman production. Directed by Philip Moeller. Screen play by Sarah Y. Mason, Victor Heerman and Anthony Veiller. Story by Lester Cohen. The Glass Key

(Paramount)

Mystery Melodrama

Combining the qualities of the once well regarded political drama and a modern mystery murder melodrama, "The Glass Key" is unusually strong and meaty entertainment. As a result of concentration upon those two elements, the strength of which is abetted by a more suggested than actual love interest contrast, the picture is of the type that has a more than ordinary appeal to men. Modernly premised, it features a sinister suspense that engenders and holds interest. Convincingly told, with its hero, George Raft, returning to the type of he-man role through which he first won popularity, intelligent direction takes full showmanship advantage of story, cast and production values.

In the yarn, Ed Beaumont is political boss, Paul Madvig advisory lieutenant and bodyguard. Aspiring to reelect Senator Henry, Madvig is romantically inclined towards his daughter, Janet, a condition tolerated only for political reasons. Brought into open conflict with gambler O'Rory, whose games he has closed, Madvig finds himself in a hot spot, following the finding of the Senator's son dead after a quarrel. O'Rory's controlled yellow journals make public their suspicions of Madvig's guilt in flamboyant menacing manner. Not trusting his boss, Beaumont sets out to unravel the mystery. Spurning O'Rory's bribe, he takes a terrific beating at the hands of slugger Jeff after destroying an incriminating affidavit. Escaping from a torture chamber, recovering and making peace with Madvig, Beaumont again invades an O'Rory joint. Ensues a tense dramatic scene between him and Jeff, result of which is Jeff's strangling of O'Rory. As Janet is trying to get information from Opal, Madvig's sister, that will implicate her brother, the town is a seething turmoil. Gathering Madvig, Opal, the Senator and Janet in District Attorney Farr's office, Beaumont first proves that Madvig could not have been the killer and forces the Senator to admit that he killed his own son in insane rage. At the end Madvig is still the boss, but with a new candidate elected and Beaumont and Opal, to whom there has been but little previous romantic interest attached, in a happy ending fadeout.

There being unique audience interest in the picture, there is also much in the way of personnel, story and production values about which smartly adaptable showmanship can easily be built to sell it. The title giving but slight clue to the production's character, the names of Raft and Edward Arnold and others in the cast beside the promising newcomer, Rosalind Keith (who looks very much like Bette Davis), may be used to create first audience interest. While it is by no means a "men only" show, a campaign that aims to stir their interest looks to be the most suitable.—McCarthy, Hollywood.

Comedy

A lively and engaging comedy, which should have a particular appeal to the housewife, and is open to exploitation which may readily be developed by the ingenious showman, this picture may be sold best for the laughs that are in it; and they are numerous.

The novel idea finds a dynamic hotel press agent giving birth to an idea, turning a "nobody" into a world famous chef and thereby making everyone's fortune, as well as winning the girl whom he loves, but who will not give him any encouragement. The fun begins when the press agent suddenly learns to his horror that he had been laboring under a misapprehension, the young man he thought was a great cook knows nothing whatever about that fine art. The press agent's effort to save the day, his skin and the stomachs of hundreds of important bankers and their guests, form the mainspring of the story's development.

The cast is familiar, if not outstanding in drawing power. At the head is William Gargan, as the press agent, with Patricia Ellis, Allen Jenkins, Eric Rhodes and Berton Churchill in support.

Woven into the story is the romance of Gar-gan and Miss Ellis, but that romance is rather incidental to the yarn. The cookery angle should be useful in attracting feminine attention to the picture, and the comedy as a whole worked up to attract the masculine element of the patronage as well.

Gargan is making no headway in his romance with Miss Ellis. Forceful, refusing to take no for an answer, he invites himself to Miss Ellis' home for dinner. The delightful food, which was prepared by her mother, is mistakenly attributed to Rhodes, Miss Ellis' brother, who has delusions of mastery of the art of cooking, but who actually is unable to cook at all. Gargan conceives the idea of making Rhodes the world's greatest chef, and "selling" him to the hotel which employs him as press agent. When he learns his hotel has hired the Ritz' well known chef, he resigns, goes to the Ritz, finds Churchill, the manager, with his job at stake unless he can find a new chef, and proceeds to sell him Rhodes. A contract is signed, when Gargan suddenly discovers that his famous chef cannot cook.

Churchill thinks he is trying to get out of the contract when Gargan tells him the truth, and when Jenkins, Gargan's assistant, samples Rhodes' cooking and doubles up with acute indigestion, Gargan visions the massacre at the forthcoming important bankers' dinner, for which the great Rhodes is supposed to cook. There is real comedy in Gargan's frantic effort to save the day, and his terrible anticipation of the debacle among the dining bankers. But Miss Ellis turns the trick by bringing her mother to the hotel, there to prepare a dinner which delights the guests. She is placed under contract, Rhodes is permitted to play about harmlessly, while Gargan, taking the credit, walks off with Miss Ellis.

Likeable and entertaining comedy, the film looks to be adaptable to almost any audience, young or old.—Aaronson, New York.

Action Drama

Revolving about the often death-defying activities of the motion picture's own newsreel cameramen, this dramatic effort, with its full quota of action and tendency toward the melodramatic, looks to be the kind of material which might be played just as suitably on the week-end as during the week.

In and about the action is woven a romance and the complications which result when jealousy and misunderstanding interfere with the work of a crack pair of cameramen. Richard Cromwell and Wallace Ford, with Billie Seward in the feminine lead, head the cast. Since those names, though familiar, cannot be expected to carry any selling strength, it will be necessary to make the most of the film's other ingredients. Of these, the best is probably the action material. It might be well, at the same time, to lay stress on the title, indicating in the tiein its significance in connection with the theme of the picture.

The film is enlivened with spectacular shots, probably taken from actual newsreel material, of burning buildings and a burning ship, scenes from the recent disaster off the New Jersey coast, a sensational plane crash and the like. The film, in addition to its dramatic and action phases, is something of a laudation of the newsreel man in general.

Cromwell is assistant to Ford, and together, but chiefly by reason of Cromwell's daring and ingenuity, they are rated the company's best team. Ford takes the credit, permitting Cromwell to do the work. Then, on a job in a hospital, they meet Miss Seward, a nurse, and while Ford gets the cold shoulder, Cromwell and the girl find a mutual attraction. They fall in love. Ford, on a pretext, tricks Cromwell, meets the girl himself, and when Cromwell later sees them leave the apartment together, misunderstands, refuses to see the girl, and will have nothing to do with Ford, other than on business.

The misunderstanding is straightened out, and Cromwell gets the first cameraman's post he had always wanted after a daring job. Thinking to get a private scoop of his own, without telling the boss, he covers a police raid on a tip, spoils the play for the police and is fired. Accidentally, after failure to find work, he meets Ford, who is having trouble with his new assistant. Cromwell helps out, at a routine railroad arrival assignment, and through his quick wit and alertness, is able to film the killing of a victim by a gang leader who is wanted by the police. A wild chase with the film through the streets of a city is an action high spot of the film, the material being enough to convict the gangster and insure Cromwell his job and a wife.—Aaronson, New York.

Action Melodrama

Tim McCoy, handsome and active exponent of the action picture, here takes the part of a member of the glamorous Royal Northwest Mounted Police of Canada, and as an officer of the king makes the most of his opportunity. The result should be especially to the liking of the youngsters among the patronage, and to them, as well as to the adults who like their action pictures the exhibitor should address his selling of the film.

With Geneva Mitchell in the romantic feminine lead, with the romance subordinated even more than usual in this type of action material, and with Ward Bond as the other important member of the cast, it is apparent that McCoy will carry the burden of the name attraction.

It may well be sold as active melodrama, making the most of the Northwest Mounted theme, which has not been overdone recently. Scenically the film has something to offer, and the film is studded with real action, as the Mountie "gets his man."

McCoy is ordered to a certain district to track down a gang which is terrorizing trappers, after he has saved the life of a fellow Mountie. The district is one which he had left before joining the police, after an argument with Bond, a fellow trapper. He had left, it is understood, at the risk of being termed "yellow," because Bond's sister, Miss Mitchell, had asked him to go. His return is greeted with the expected insults from Bond, and with shots from the neighboring woods as he rides into the trading post.

He meets an old trapper friend, Si Jenks, who supplies most of the picture's incidental comedy. Bond uses every device at his command to hinder McCoy in his job of tracking the gang, and eventually it appears that Bond himself is implicated in the fur depredations. Wearing the uniform, McCoy is unable to settle the score with Bond as he would like to. A brother officer arrives to inform McCoy that his term of enlistment is ended and that he will take over. McCoy refuses to go and is disarmed and jailed by his companion in order to keep him out of trouble. But when the fellow officer is injured, McCoy takes command again, rounds up the gang, takes off his uniform and whips Bond. The two are reconciled, and Miss Mitchell and McCoy celebrate as McCoy is promoted.

All done to the tune of fast and lively action, this should be admirably fitted to play in the week-end position on the program.—Aaronson, New York.

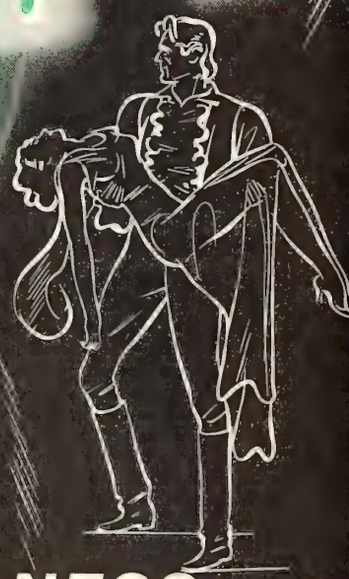
Pictorial Record

There is novelty in this somewhat unusual type of pictorial record of an expedition into the woods. Its novelty rests, first, in the fact that this expedition traveled through the western woods and mountain country of the United States, and second, in that what hunting there is finds the bow and arrow, ancient and admirable weapon, used instead of the usual gun.

The picture, which is actually a camera record of such big, and small game, as still exists in this country, has a considerable element of interest, especially for youngsters and those adults who are nature lovers.

Virtually the "hero" of the film is Howard Hill, described, and apparently with complete justification, as the "world's greatest archer." The explanatory dialogue which accompanies the film is supposed to be in the words of Hill himself, as he describes his experiences, from the time he is invited to join the expedition, which is said to have occupied several years. Mr. Hill's ability with the bow and arrow is actually the real highlight of the film, and should open the way for exhibitor exploitation.

The expedition spent most of its time in and about the Wyoming territory, and succeeded in shooting, via the camera, several unusual sequences, in addition to occasional of the now common battles between animals. The most exciting of these is a fight between a female bear, just emerged from hibernation with her two cubs, and a male "killer" bear. It is a cruel and fierce fight, won when the male kills the mother, Hill taking the two cubs as expedition mascots.



With his bow and arrow, Hill kills a wild cat, about to spring upon two coyote pups, brings down a buffalo, climbs to bag a mountain goat, catches fish with astonishing skill. The camera records, among the unusual, the natural wonder which is the stone arch of Wyoming, high in the Rockies, the phenomenon of millions of grasshoppers frozen solidly for countless years on a glacial ice shelf, male grouse puffing and strutting before the females during the courting season, wild moose, a fight between two bull elk for the leadership of the pack, and the most unusual picture of a female bear, seen in her den during the course of winter hibernation.

It appears to be exploitable material, which may be sold as a family picture of a somewhat different sort.—Aaronson, New York.

ADVERTISING IS SIDE-SHOW: DIETZ

Writer in Forbes Magazine Says MGM's Ad Director Puts Human Interest Story First

Advertising of a product, motion picture or any other, employed as a sales medium by distributor, exhibitor or merchant, should be entertaining in itself, should tell a human-interest story. It must be the miniature side-show which brings persons into the main tent.

That is the bedrock principle of merchandising in the opinion of Howard Dietz, advertising and publicity director of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Pictures Corporation, as expressed, through C. D. Frazer, in Forbes business magazine for May.

In discussing Mr. Dietz's methods, Forbes considers his views on how to make advertising copy really sell a product.

"First of all," he says in Mr. Frazer's article, "it must be humanized. It must be easy and pleasant to read, and humorous if possible.

"Second, tell a story in the copy. To do this, suggest a problem and imply that it has some personal relation to the reader. And whether the problem be one of sex, conflict or whatnot, be certain to get the feeling of PEOPLE into it. The human element stirs interest. The opening lines of the 'Naughty Marietta' ads illustrate this. They read: 'That Little Bit of Bad in Naughty Marietta that made her throw convention overboard' . . . There's the story.

Should Synchronize the Copy

"Third, synchronize the copy. An advertisement must do two things—it must point out the product and must offer it for sale. Dietz believes that some advertising fails to sell merely through neglect of the latter issue. His copy not only describes a picture but also synchronizes this with such information as where it can be seen, when it can be seen (this is very important), and, generally, how much it will cost to see it. Under-emphasis of any one point results in serious damage at the box office.

"Last, and most important of all, reflect the product. Treat the subject in its own way. This process might be called 'keying,' or in Broadway parlance, 'getting the angle.' . . . Consider a current film called 'Sequoia.' The picture had no stars—a tremendous handicap; it was an animal picture—a rare type; and its name meant nothing to most people. All these factors might have combined to give the public a preconceived distaste.

Star a Vital Element

"How, then, to break that down? Well, 'Sequoia' was one of those pictures that MGM makes once in a while that have merit and carry a message, but are of doubtful box office value. Rather, they are 'worth doing.' So Dietz seized that phrase as the hallmark. Since the film was frank propaganda against deer-hunting, he had no trouble securing indorsements from certain prominent persons opposed to the practice. With these indorsements he created the idea that 'Sequoia' was something of an event, instead of just an animal picture. The promotion intimated that the film was the impressive type that would appeal to the customer's own judgment. The keenness of Dietz's judgment was shown by the fact that 'Sequoia' made money wherever it was promoted in that manner, while it 'laid an egg' elsewhere.

"This 'keying' notion also obtains in Dietz's method of building up a star. He believes that a star is the most vital element in the sale of a picture.

"Incidentally, in connection with the star system, Dietz says that from a business standpoint Hollywood's critics are wrong about the much-publicized waste of money in salaries. What they do not realize is that a star's salary is mostly a selling cost. There is many a concern, he explains, whose success may be attributed largely to the public's favorable conception of the man behind the product. The star system is merely an intense usage of this 'human relations' principle. Miss Garbo is not paid solely for her work and talent. . . . She represents an advertising campaign of considerable duration that has resulted in such an extraordinary amount of goodwill that any film starring her is sure of a certain financial success, at least."

Defends Hollywood Methods

"The Dietz advertising creed," Mr. Frazer's article continues, "is naturally in keeping with Metro's willingness, nay, eagerness, to spend money. He uses all possible forms of media. He conducts contests on a gigantic scale. He flies lions across country in an airplane. He sponsors clinical tests to determine the relative temperament of blondes and brunettes. . . . His one rule is that all stunts should hawk the MGM wares rather than be merely amusing stories."

Explaining MGM's costly production system of maintaining a large and expensive stock company at the studio, Mr. Frazer writes: "Dietz is a stout defender of Hollywood business methods. He says that what many consider a waste of money is really an asset. Metro maintains a very large staff of actors, writers and directors, some of whom are bound to be idle at frequent intervals. But the salaries paid them in the interim is not squandered money because availability means everything. They are the raw material, so to speak, and Metro has found that it simply cannot operate on a hand-to-mouth basis. The point is that it has the staff and the stars—you might say, the current inventory—to produce on short notice exactly the type of picture for which the market is ripe.

"That the company's methods are effective is proved by the balance sheet. It has produced (and Dietz has promoted) some of the most profitable ventures ever undertaken in the motion picture field. There was, for example, 'Ben Hur.' Before the final curtain rings down on that picture (filmed many years ago, it is still drawing crowds in foreign lands), it will have made the astonishing gross of $10,000,000."

"Dietz is not the scientific type of advertiser," the article says. "You see, in the industrial family, Hollywood 'is not like other children.' If ever there was a problem child, the film business is it. In promoting a picture, as well as in making it, a touch of the riverboat gambler's instinct is worth a hundred surveys of the herd mind.

"Here are a few ways in which Dietz's job differs from the orthodox marketing task. First, the film industry is a public pet and is constantly buffeted by the changing winds of public approval. Again, there are no trade secrets; if a picture is a 'floperoo,' everybody knows it at once. Third, unlike other products, public taste in film entertainment is not standardized; one town may like 'horse operas,' while the next favors sophisticated comedy."

Cannot Make General Claims

Describing the basic problems with which all motion picture advertising directors must contend, Forbes explains: "The first of these is that instead of one problem a year, Dietz has more than fifty individual ones. Since films are creative and therefore vary in quality, he cannot make general claims that apply to all the company's films

"Then there is the question of capacity. The ordinary selling director has definite knowledge to work on. The capacity of his plant determines the possible sales and he can gear his campaign accordingly. But this idea of cutting the corpse to fit the coffin is not feasible in the film trade. Theatres apparently have rubber walls. All grosses can be beaten. For example, back in the salad days of the silent films a picture called 'Passion,' starring Pola Negri, broke all existing records at the Capitol Theatre in New York with a weekly gross of $38,000. Several subsequent records were established, until a few months ago the Capitol set a new record. It played Greta Garbo at a weekly gross of $116,000! Admission prices were about the same as when the Pola Negri film was shown and the theatre still had 5,400 seats. How do you account for it? You can't; it's just one of those things.

"The truth is that there are no infallible guiding rules for dealing in public interest."

Forbes credits Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with being the "steadiest money-maker." The company "is earning a current profit of nearly $1,000,000 a month while many industrial organizations are picking at the coverlets. This rate, if maintained, will smash the record net of $9,925,000 established in 1930."

THE DIETZ CREED ON ADVERTISING

Howard Dietz's views on advertising copy, as described in the article by C. D. Frazer in Forbes business magazine, are outlined as follows:

1. It must be humanized.
2. Tell a story in the copy.
3. Synchronize the copy.
4. Reflect the product.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD
1790 Broadway, New York

Columbia

BEST MAN WINS, THE: Jack Holt, Edmund Lowe—Good picture. Hope to see more of this team.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

IN SPITE OF DANGER: Marian Marsh, Wallace Ford—A satisfactory programer for double bills. Has sufficient amount of action. Incidentally, I never fully realized the extent of the popularity of this section of the HERALD until I recently began receiving send-a-dime or dollar chain letters from exhibitors all over the United States who have read my reports.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LADY BY CHOICE: May Robson, Carole Lombard, Walter Connolly, Roger Pryor—A good program picture which went over big with our patronage.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LAW BEYOND THE RANGE: Tim McCoy, Billie Seward—This an extra good Western. Story interesting and acting good and not overdone.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MEN OF THE NIGHT: Bruce Cabot, Judith Allen—This is an entertaining action picture that pleased the midweek crowd.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE: Grace Moore—This is strictly a class picture. The regular crowd didn't care for it, but with the help of the letters which Columbia's New York office sent to my mailing list announcing it as something special, we did a little better Sunday than usual.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

SWELL HEAD: Wallace Ford, Barbara Kent—Played this on a double bill Saturday and it is a good picture. Ball story. Recording very bad. Acting very good.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

VOICE IN THE NIGHT: Tom McCoy, Billie Seward—Used this one on bargain night. It drew average business and it pleased. A very ordinary program picture.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WHOLE TOWN'S TALKING, THE: Edward G. Robinson, Jean Arthur—Very entertaining picture. Robinson does some excellent acting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

First National

BIG HEARTED HERBERT: Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon—Just a good, clean comedy drama that seemed to make a hit with everyone.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CIRCUS CLOWN, THE: Joe E. Brown—We drew some extra business on Friday night and they liked the picture, so we expected good business Saturday, but it was downpour rain instead. Played May 3-4.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Pat O'Brien—A very good picture, but nothing sensational at the box office.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, I. Small town patronage.

FLIRTATION WALK: Dick Powell—Advertised this one one heavy. We are located within 35 miles of Mountain View, Arkansas, where Dick Powell was born. It broke house records for 1935. I think it is a wonderful picture. Played April 21-22.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

GO INTO YOUR DANCE: Al Jolson, Ruby Keeler—Fine entertainment for the Jolson-Keeler fans and a nifty show finely mounted. General approval here. Will please any audience. Running time, 90 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935: Dick Powell, Gloria Stuart—These "Gold Diggers" certainly draw them in. Good song and dance numbers. Comedy supplied by Hugh Herbert goes over well. This picture will please all classes. Running time, 95 minutes. Played April 30-May 2.—R. D. Ashman, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—The usual good comedy team give another performance up to standard. Hugh Herbert also good. A lively story that will please. Running time, 63 minutes.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

TRAVELING SALESLADY: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—A good program comedy which went over big with the audience. While it is not quite as rip-snorting as previous Blondell comedies, it is better than average.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

VERY HONORABLE GUY, A: Joe E. Brown—Did not go over very big. A very weak picture.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WOMEN IN RED, THE: Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond—Fair program picture. Star not very good drawing card.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Fox

BABOONA: Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson—A marvellous production and it should do business. But it took a terrible nose-dive here. Personally consider it their best picture.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CAT'S PAW, THE: Harold Lloyd—This proved to be a good Saturday bill, but Lloyd has been away too long to draw as he did when he was with Pathe.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON: Warner Oland—Just a picture. Nothing to write home about.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—Played on bargain night. This particular type of picture is very popular here.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN IN PARIS: Warner Oland—Entertainment for every one. A very good mystery film.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—Very good. The biggest business that this house has ever done. Did extra advertising and it certaintly did the trick. Our matinee alone was bigger than some of the entire gross receipts of this star's previous pictures. This picture will please all of the Rogers fans.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

COUNTY CHAIRMAN, THE: Will Rogers—It nearly rained out our Sunday matinee. Monday night we had a medicine show for competition and our receipts were low. The picture seemed to please those who saw it. Played May 5-6.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

DUDE RANGER, THE: A good Saturday bill.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HELL IN THE HEAVENS: Warner Baxter, Conchita Montenegro—Just an average program picture.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town aptronage.

HELLDORADO: Richard Arlen, Madge Evans—Not what it's cracked up to be. Got by on bargain nites.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD: Spencer Tracy, Wendy Barrie—Comedy drama, rather light but pleasing. Just about average, with the comedy responsible for any of its good points.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—Little Shirley pleases everyone. Robinson and Barrymore excellent.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LITTLE COLONEL, THE: Shirley Temple, Lionel Barrymore—A decided success both artistically and financially.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

LOTTERY LOVER: "Pat" Paterson, Lew Ayres—An enjoyable program picture, but not outstanding.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Janet Gaynor, Warner Baxter—Gaynor and Baxter deserve better treatment than to be cast in a story as weak as this one. Got by, but that's all and does not rate top spot. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 5-6.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

ONE MORE SPRING: Warner Baxter, Janet Gaynor—On Sunday matinee we had a very light attendance, the rest went to the ball game. Those who came did not like the picture and gave it the black eye. We had the lowest gross we have ever had on a Gaynor picture. Played April 28-29.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper, Thomas Meighan, Jackie Searl, Dorothy Peterson—Played this Friday and Saturday and the kids nearly broke my doors down each night before I opened up. Good business both nights. They expected to see a farce comedy, while this is nearly all straight drama, but it pleased everyone.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

PECK'S BAD BOY: Jackie Cooper—This picture seemed to please those who came. It drew out some extras, but we failed to see some of our regular patrons. Played April 14-15.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

SPRING TONIC: Lew Ayres, Claire Trevor—Weak attempt at comedy. Another feature which would have made a good two reeler. It's only six reels at that. Comedy may get by with the not-too-particular.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

$10 RAISE: Edward Everett Horton—Entertaining comedy drama with Horton the mainspring. Light but satisfying. Plenty of laughs.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—George O'Brien pictures are always good. A picture that will satisfy all classes providing that you can get them in.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—Average Western picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

WHEN A MAN'S A MAN: George O'Brien—A dandy for the Saturday crowd. Running time, 66 minutes. Played April 25-27.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GB Pictures

CHU CHIN CHOW: Anna May Wong, George Robey—Fair. Did not draw.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IRON DUKE, THE: George Arliss—Fair. Did not draw. Poor recording. Far below the usual Arliss productions.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MAN OF ARAN: Robert Flaherty—Very good, but should have been made in a two reel travelogue. Scenes are too drawn out.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Mascot

CRIMSON ROMANCE: Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza—This war and flying stuff is a risky bet, but this proved adequate on Saturday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

HIGH FIDELITY

LITTLE MEN: Ralph Morgan, Erin O'Brien Moore, Junior Durkin, Cora Sue Collins, Phyllis Fraser, Frankie Darro, Dickie Moore—We played this picture three days and the last day's business was better than the first. Pleased 100 per cent. Give us more pictures like this.—A. Engler, Royal Theatre, Hopkins, Minn. Family patronage.

MARINES ARE COMING, THE: William Haines—Good enough action picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

MGM

NAUGHTY MARIETTA: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy—As you probably suspicioned, this is class entertainment akin to such pictures as "The Merry Widow." It is expensively produced and well played. All in all, it is an A-1 film for the more particular patrons. There is much beautiful music superbly sung by the leads.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

NIGHT FLIGHT: John and Lionel Barrymore, Helen Hayes, Clark Gable, Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—This old show was played on mid-week bargain nites and on account of a May snow storm did not come up to expectations at the B. O. Did not hear any kicks so it must have gone over O. K.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ONE NEW YORK NIGHT: Francot Tone, Una Merkel—Clever little comedy-drama that seemed to please our Sunday-Monday patrons. Running time, 70 minutes. Played May 5-6.—R. D. Ashman, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

SHADOW OF DOUBT: Virginia Bruce, Ricardo Cortez—A clever mystery that drew and pleased. Above average of its type. Running time, 74 minutes. —D. W. Buckley, Redwood Theatre, Redwood Falls, Minn. Family patronage.

SOCIETY DOCTOR: Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce—Excellent picture. Good for any kind of a theatre. Will please the masses.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TIMES SQUARE LADY: Robert Taylor, Virginia Bruce—Patrons pleased with this picture. More for weekend.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

VANESSA: HER LOVE STORY: Helen Hayes, Robert Montgomery—Very good picture for your women patrons. Men do not like this type of picture. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

WINNING TICKET, THE: Leo Carrillo, Louise Fazenda—Failed to find anything in this film to recommend it. Running time, 63 minutes. Played May 23-24.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Monogram

GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST: Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan—Three days good business. The cast was better than the picture.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KING KELLY OF THE U. S. A.: Guy Robertson, Irene Ware—This film is weak even for double bills. Absolutely nothing to it. Poor audience response.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

SING SING NIGHTS: Conway Tearle—The scenes with the "lie detector" apparatus are novel and the picture as a whole is very well acted and directed and entertaining. Midweek business just so-so.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

WOMAN'S MAN: John Halliday, Marguerite de la Motte, Wallace Ford—A fair program picture which got by on a double feature program.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

WOMEN MUST DRESS: Minna Gombel, Gavin Gordon—An average program picture which pleased our patrons on a double bill with "Biography of a Bachelor Girl." Minna Gombel is well liked here as a supporting player, but she alone will not draw at the box office.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

Paramount

BEHOLD MY WIFE: Sylvia Sidney, Gene Raymond—Nothing big but it was a rather pleasing little program picture.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES: Mae West—I ran so many fine shows on both sides of this that this one stands out like a sore thumb. Not a single good comment and plenty of " squawks." Really one of the most kicked about shows we have run this year. Not so awfully bad but it can't stand comparison.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Jack Oakie, Joe Penner, Lanny Ross—This was not 100 per cent, although it is very good entertainment for the fan that isn't too serious minded. Certainly far above the average in motion picture entertainment. This was not a B. O. record breaker for me but it did do above average.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

COLLEGE RHYTHM: Joe Penner, Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie—This picture can't be beat! It certainly satisfied my people. Hurry back, Joe Penner.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess—Something different in story telling. Dick Barthelmess very good. Roscoe Karns supplies the comedy and does a swell job. Business a little above average. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 3-4.—R. D. Ashman, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

GILDED LILY, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Good picture that did average business.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

HERE IS MY HEART: Bing Crosby, Kitty Carlisle—A crackerjack of a picture and Bing does even better than any previous efforts, but in spite of every effort on my part, could not get them in. Cannot tell what it is that is the matter unless the age of the release hurts box office.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: Patricia Ellis, Buster Crabbe—Drew average at the box office. Not as much football as the audience expected. Dialogue was exceptionally clever.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

HOLD 'EM YALE: William Frawley, Patricia Ellis —Good comedy for weekend. Patrons satisfied.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

HOME ON THE RANGE: Randolph Scott—You may get westerns just as good as this one, but no better. I want to say right here that to me it was a genuine pleasure to see Evelyn Brent again and hope this star will get other assignments. Business better than average three days last part of the week. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

IT'S A GIFT: W. C. Fields, Baby LeRoy—The poorest Fields picture I ever saw. Had some walkouts.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—This is a wonderful picture, but it certainly wasn't any draw at the box office.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

LIVES OF A BENGAL LANCER: Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone—We took a licking on this one. Has no woman appeal. I thought it a grand picture myself. —Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

McFADDEN'S FLATS: Betty Furness, Richard Cromwell—Very pleasing picture. Paramount's programmers are above the average as a rule.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas, General patronage.

MISSISSIPPI: Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett—Very good comedy drama with W. C. Fields' work putting the picture across. Crosby sings songs which do not seem to suit his style. Anyhow, Fields was the whole show and my patrons were satisfied.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH: Pauline Lord, W. C. Fields—This ranks along with "Anne of Green Gables" as being close to perfect entertainment for the small town. Certainly a picture you can be very proud to exhibit. Too bad we can't get more along these lines.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

ONCE IN A BLUE MOON: Jimmy Savo—After seeing the screening of this atrocity, it was promptly cancelled by the code elimination. This should serve as a warning to brother exhibitors. Would be especially sour in a small town such as mine.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

PRESIDENT VANISHES, THE: Arthur Byron, Janet Beecher—The poorest thing I've had from Paramount yet. Flopped at the box office.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN MYSTERY: Randolph Scott, Charles "Chic" Sale—Picture okay. Paramount's Zane Grey Westerns always go over big here. Running time, seven reels.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP: Charles Laughton, Mary Boland, Charles Ruggles, Zasu Pitts—A natural for any place any time. Fine business and pleased everyone. Running time, 90 minutes. Played April 28-29.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RUMBA: George Raft, Carole Lombard—Some thought this was a great show and others didn't care for it at all. Pleased about 50-50.—M. F. Bodwell.

Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

WINGS IN THE DARK: Myrna Loy, Cary Grant—A good picture for a small town. Everybody liked it.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—This is an entirely satisfying little idyll and did fairly well on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES: Anne Shirley, Tom Brown—A real mortgage lifter. Did not use any extra effort to put this over. Only the paper we use on every show and the results were the sixth highest gross in four years and not being a percentage picture the net for the exhibitor was the second highest in that length of time. And did it please? One regular customer said "the best movie to date." Comments averaged excellent. Thanks, RKO.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

CAPTAIN HURRICANE: James Barton, Helen Westley—A very interesting story and splendid acting by the whole cast. Gave good satisfaction on a double bill.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

COME ON DANGER: Tom Keene—An old picture, but it brought in the Western fans and pleased them. —M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

DANGEROUS CORNER: Melvyn Douglas, Virginia Bruce—All dialogue and very little action. Not a good small town bet.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

GRAND OLD GIRL: May Robson—Good enough for anybody's house. Played this during a ten-day rain, but did average business.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—This is an entertaining comedy and did fairly well on Sunday.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

KENTUCKY KERNELS: Wheeler and Woolsey—Personally I thought it was too silly. Patrons seemed to think so. Average receipts. Played April 19-20.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

LITTLE MINISTER, THE: Katharine Hepburn, John Beal—A picture on the order of "Little Women." Truly a great show. We played it during bad weather. Running time, 12 reels.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

MURDER ON A HONEYMOON: Edna May Oliver, James Gleason—A funny comedy drama. Played on a double bill and gave satisfaction.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

RENAGADES OF THE WEST: Tom Keene—Very good western that pleased the majority on bargain night.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD: Miriam Hopkins—This is a very pleasing comedy drama. Fair Sunday business.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

ROBERTA: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Irene Dunne—More pictures like this and my worries would be over. Pleased everyone, some coming to see it twice. Best story with a musical that I have ever seen.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN: Ginger Rogers, Francis Lederer—Program picture—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—What a happy combination. The best all round entertainment we have run on bargain nites and the second highest gross. Considering that this covers nearly three years we are happy to announce this. The show is plenty good enough for your best nights. The shots around Boulder Dam are great. The story material is light but satisfactory and the thrills are great.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

SILVER STREAK, THE: Sally Blane, Charles Starrett—They liked this one and receipts about doubled on second night. The second RKO picture that has made any money. Played April 26-27.—H. B. Wood, Wood Theatre, Calico Rock, Ark. Small town and CCC camps patronage.

STRANGERS ALL: May Robson—A good family picture. Domestic comedy of interesting family affairs. Plenty of substance familiar to average home. Good points in the drama are the troubles of the average mother in smoothing out domestic affairs.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

THEIR BIG MOMENTS: Zasu Pitts, Slim Summerville, William Gargan, Bruce Cabot—A very weak excuse for a picture. It received only a fair response on a double bill with "In Spite of Danger." I wish Warner Bros. would take these two players and present them in a real comedy. It seems that Warners are the only producers who have the knack of continually making good feature length comedies with mass appeal. Pitts and Summerville are real laugh getters when they have even fair material to work with and they would still be box office if given half a chance.—J. W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

United Artists

SCARFACE: Paul Muni, Ann Dvorak—This is a reissue but the print condition and sound are good. Drew fairly well. Action plus in this story of gangsters of only a few years ago. It was very satisfactory to our Saturday nite patrons. Running time, 90 minutes. Played May 4-5.—R. D. Ashman, Strand and Temple Theatres, Caro, Mich. Small town patronage.

RETURN OF BULLDOG DRUMMOND: Ralph Richardson—It's terrible, the cast is poor, the story is weak and the direction is the poorest I have ever seen. It is made almost entirely in the dark, but that is so the public won't see just how bad it really is.—Art Hunter, Cole Theatre, Cole, Mont. General patronage.

MASQUERADER, THE: Ronald Colman, Elissa Landi—Traded "Nana" for this one and used it on our bargain night. It pleased but did not have any extra drawing power.—M. F. Bodwell, Paramount Theatre, Wyoming, Ill. Small town patronage.

Universal

GIFT OF GAB: Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Alice White—The worst entertainment we have run during the first four months of 1935. Not my opinion, but it must have been from the enormous number of "kicks" this one registered. I have run a lot of shows I would rate much worse, but the general average of this year's product has been pretty good. So this one suffers by contrast. "Photoplay" rated it one of the best of the month. Can you imagine that? —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

GOOD FAIRY, THE: Margaret Sullavan, Herbert Marshall—A splendid picture. Great acting by the star and all the cast, but we did not do any business as a special with it. Pleased all we did get, but just did not draw. I say no fault of the picture. Played April 5-6.—Bert Silver, Silver Family Theatre, Greenville, Mich. Town and country patronage.

MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD: Claude Rains, Joan Bennett—This is a bad one and our patrons told us so.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

MISTER DYNAMITE: Edmund Lowe, Esther Ralston—Melodramatic mystey with action, comedy and good drama. Okay with my audience.—B. C. Brown, Vernon Theatre, Viroqua, Wis. General patronage.

ONE MORE RIVER: Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton—Artistically speaking I can forgive Universal for producing some very bad program pictures when they release such a masterpiece as this. It is an intelligent and dignified film, rather British and beautifully produced and acted. I consider it one of the very best films I have ever seen. It is class entertainment.—W. Noah, New Liberty and Ideal Theatres, Fort Worth, Texas. General patronage.

ONE EXCITING ADVENTURE: Binnie Barnes, Neil Hamilton—A nice little show. Had some good comments on it.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor—Pleasing little picture. Baby Jane is a very charming little girl.—Roy W. Adams, Mason Theatre, Mason, Mich. Small town patronage.

STRAIGHT FROM THE HEART: Mary Astor, Roger Pryor, Baby Jane—Got by and that's all. Not so hot. We built it up with a lot of good shorts.—Bob Schwall, State Theatre, Ipswich, S. D. Small town patronage.

WHEN A MAN SEES RED: Buck Jones—Although not the best Jones by a long way, under ideal weather conditions and no outside interests this show broke the mid-week bargain night record. (This covers nearly three years.) So, naturally, we doff our hat to this Universal Western. This is a very modern Western and I liked it much better than the regular type. —L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. General patronage.

Warner

CASE OF THE HOWLING DOG, THE: Warren William, Mary Astor—This drew a dollar or two more than usual, and the audience called it good enter-

Miscellaneous

PLAY BALL: Ball players—This is a picture I ran for the school. School obtained it free from Fisher Body Company in Detroit. Baseball instruction. Most all the American League players are shown in action. It is a good picture for anyone interested in baseball fundamentals. It becomes tiresome and will not please the average audience. A wonderful picture of its kind. Running time, eight reels. Played March 20-21.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

Columbia

AT A COUNTY FAIR: Laughing with Medbury series—Fine one reeler. Running time, one reel.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

MICKEY'S TENT SHOW: Mickey McGuire Comedies—Fine kid comedy.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. Small town patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—A slightly above the average Educational comedy that got a few laughs and kept the audience smiling all the way through. The naval background and an exceptionally clear print were great assets to it.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Star Personality Comedies—This one is not up to Keaton's previous comedies, although it will probably be OK. Not enough laughs for a two-reeler, although what comedy it has is good.—J. A. Milligan, Broadway Theatre, Schuylerville, N. Y. Small town patronage.

TIME ON THEIR HANDS: Song Hit Stories—Very good. Also used "Your Stars of 1935" and "In-Far Mandalay" on the same bill by Educational and Fox. All three excellent. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

NERVE CONTROL: Sportlight—An exceptionally interesting subject. These Sportlights are well liked and please my audience.—H. G. Crawford, Palace Theatre, Plano, Texas. General patronage.

J. C. JENKINS—HIS COLYUM

Neligh, Nebraska

DEAR HERALD:

An Open Letter to Henry B. Walthall

Dear Henry:

We saw you last night in "Bachelor of Arts," which, by the way, was a very good picture. What made this especially good to us was probably because you were in it, although the director didn't give you as prominent a part as he should. That's why we have some directors listed in the same class with crooners, although the director of "Bachelor of Arts" would hardly be placed in that class. We regard him as having considerable ability.

When we saw you in that picture it immediately called to our mind the time when we were shooting grouse up at Valentine in Cherry County. Do you remember that time, Henry? And when we saw the lady who played with you we felt sure that we had seen her before, and when you called her "Mary" we knew we had seen her before and we remembered that she was formerly Mary Charleson before she became Mrs. Henry B. Walthall, and that she was the same lady who hunted grouse with us in Cherry County, Nebraska, although she lacked several years being as young as she was then.

Remember the Grouse?

Then you remember too when you and she went back to Chicago that you took 25 or 30 grouse with you to give your friends a "grouse dinner," dontcha? And you will probably remember also that we wrote a few verses of poetry for you to read at your grouse dinner. You remember that also, don't you?

We wish we could quote those verses so that the reader would have a plausible excuse for taking aspirin, but we can't, we only remember one of them, which we quote here. This had reference to Mary when she was shooting grouse, and it ran something like this—

And when a male grouse would go up like a rocket
She would quickly assume an innocent pose,
Then a powder puff pull from her right breeches pocket
And quickly dust powder all over her nose.

You recall too, dontcha, that when a hen grouse got up in front of her it was curtains for Mrs. Hen, and that she kept the whole party in hen grouse all the while we were there, but roosters—well, that was different, and that accounts for that verse of poetry.

As we thought of all the good times we had it made us wonder if Old Father Time (and this administration) might not preclude the possibility of these times occuring again. Who knows?

A Pending Dinner Date

While we are on the subject Henry, we would be pleased if you would go down to our office in the Pacific States Life Building just off Hollywood Boulevard, and go up to the office and meet Victor Shapiro, the western manager for the HERALD. If you will go early in the morning you will most likely find him sober, but anyhow you will find him a mighty swell chap, and while you are there we wish you would call on Miss Mildred Early and Miss Jeannett Mehan, the two young ladies who do most of the chores around the office. And we wish also that you would tell Mildred to call up Lola Gentry, secretary of the Film Board of Trade in Los Angeles, and tell her that we have not forgotten that she has promised to have dinner with us the next time we are out there.

Give all of our kindest regards to Mary, except what you keep for yourself, and hurry up and get in another picture, everybody wants to see you, but they want to see you in a part that is commensurate to your ability, and listen Henry, we'd like to shoot the guy who stole Mary's beautiful Parker gun that time.

A whole lot of our friends have been receiving chain letters, many of them have sent them on as requested, and we have received a lot ourself, but somehow we are just too doggone dumb.

That Shelterbelt Again

We have just received a letter from L. V. Feldman of the Orpheum theatre at Pipestone, Minnesota, in which, among other things, he says. "I have always followed your letters in the HERALD, and I note that from time to time you say that you can't get the real reason for that 'shelterbelt.' I ran across this letter in one of our dailies and am sending the clipping to you." He enclosed the clipping, which is as follows:

"Orange City, Iowa—To the Editor: I never understood until recently why the administration proposes to plant billions of trees called a shelterbelt. I understand it now. Ages ago our ancestors hung by their tails from limbs of trees. The administration realized that all who voted the ..... ticket are reverting to their forest ancestors, and the administration will plant these trees so that each one who voted the ..... ticket will have a limb to hang on."

Should Plant Cocoanuts

Oh, Yeah, that's the most plausible reason we have heard of yet. We knew there was some reason for that shelterbelt outside of furnishing a roost for the blue pelicans; but say, Abner, won't the boys be busy keeping those pelicans off of the limbs?

Where we think the administration fell down was by not planting cocoanut trees in that shelterbelt, for the boys will all want cocoanuts to throw at the pelicans.

You may not know L. V. Feldman, but we do, and we can truthfully say that he, and his Orpheum theatre, are largely responsible for taking Minnesota and South Dakota away from the Indians. Pipestone is the place where the Indians get the stone to make their pipes out of. Thanks, L. V. for your letter.

We were driving along the road recently and we saw a fellow leaning up against a tree and crooning "Sweet love, I'm dying for you," and just then a couple of guards came out and one of them said, "Come on, Caruso, the superintendent says it is time for you to come in now."

The Cagney Diet

Last night we saw Jimmy Cagney in "G Men," another gangster picture which was rather better than the average run of gangster pictures and which we believe the customers will vote unanimously for. We would like to write Jimmy an open letter to tell him how well we thought he played in this picture, but then we doubt if he would get to see it, and we doubt also if he cares very much what we thought about it. You see, Ezra, all the stars out there ought to take the HERALD just to see what their friends say about them, if for nothing else. If we should ever meet Jimmy out there we are going to stick up both hands right now, then we'd try to get him to take the HERALD. Say, Jimmy, we believe you have been eating raw meat.

We knew a fellow once who became an expert currying horses in a livery stable. Then he threw up his job and went to playing a saxaphone in a jazz orchestra.

If the blue pelicans build their nests out in that shelterbelt we are afraid that the trees will bring so much rain that it will drown all the young pelicans. Doggone the luck anyhow.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

THE SAME TO YOU

It sure looks like a very nice party, this celebration of another Round Table anniversary, what with the scads of box-office ideas contributed by the members and set down on eight of the following pages. Your Round Table now completes the seventh year of what the industry is kind enough to proclaim and what, through the co-operation of our many good friends is now acknowledged one of the most practical services to the theatreman and a highly important adjunct to profitable theatre operation.

Deeply touched by the splendid enthusiasm and sincerely appreciative of the warming response that made this issue possible, your Chairman renews his pledge to maintain at all costs, the morale of the manager and the high standard of these pages.

Bless you all for the kindly messages of congratulation. The same to you and may good fortune dog your every footstep.

LET'S TAKE STOCK

So long as we have arrived at another milestone, it may be in order for us to lay down our packs for a brief spell and grab a breather before continuing the stern journey. To where? To where, indeed.

As is to be expected when another birthday rolls by, men are apt to gaze back upon the road they have come to note what progress has been made in the past year, and to scout the possibilities of advancement during the next. Where you are headed, friends, depends upon where you want to go, and how well you are equipped to get there. A checkup of personal equipment is therefore suggested.

If showbusiness is the sum and substance of the manager's career, he should first by all means endeavor to add to the store of his knowledge and experience so as to be ready for the job ahead. Thus the question naturally arises—how well do you know your business, which we ask even at the risk of disagreement with those who do not hold with us that most of the top jobs in the theatre are filled by men with the most savvy. After all, we can't all be the boss' nephew or marry his daughter, so in the last analysis, the bird who knows is the one who "gits."

Next in the checkup is proper temperament, held by many of equal value with knowledge. The ease of mind with which a manager runs his plant, the facility with which he engages in community affairs, the actual enjoyment he displays in putting over his house and attractions—all have to do with where he will land eventually, and for that matter, how soon.

That this ease and enjoyment can be dampened and even retarded by faulty leadership and unwise officialdom, we agree, but comparatively these drawbacks are externals which cannot nor will not permanently affect the efficient theatreman endowed mentally with the disposition to overcome these obstacles. Are you there, brother?

The third and last point is the vital "stick-to-itiveness," the guts to hang on in seeing a job through in spite of hell and high water. Too often unfortunately does an otherwise competent, even brilliant theatreman fall down on this revealing quality without which none may aspire to lasting high place in this or any other line of endeavor. Can you take it?

Purposely, from our checkup, we have eliminated the talent of showmanship, for this in itself is a gift from the heavens and bestowed upon mortals only through the caprice and whims of the graces. But though a natural showman in most instances will get by without apology, we question whether he can climb to a top spot on the ladder without showing broad traces of the three above emphasized virtues.

Knowledge, proper temperament and guts, plus if you will, showmanship, and check these within yourselves as the old Colonel bids you godspeed to the next milestone with this story:

A colored lad, in chauffeur's uniform, came in to a drug store, made a phone call and when connected spoke thusly:

"Hello, does you all need a boy tuh drive yoh cah? Oh, you has a good boy. Thank you."

As the lad hung up and turned to leave, the druggist who had overhead the conversation, asked:

"Boy, don't you work for those people you just called?"

"Sho' does," replied the lad, smiling, "but you see, boss, Ah wuz jes' checkin' up on mahseff."

From Sonny Shepherd, skipper of the Mayfair, Miami, the following wire announcing a most blessed event:

"OUR LITTLE GIRL ARRIVED TO FAMILY FIVE THIRTY FIVE MAY SEVENTEEN ALL VERY WELL AND ARRIVED DAY AND DATE WITH TEMPLE PICTURE REGARDS."

This evidently is Sonny's exploitation contribution to our birthday number.

APRIL PLAQUE WINNERS

BILL HENDRICKS

SID HOLLAND

It's Tennessee and Indiana this time, as Colonel Bill Hendricks and Sid Holland led the field to the tape in the Quigley April competitions. Hendricks, the second two-time winner, took down the Silver plaque on his "Baboona" campaign at the Warner Theatre, Memphis, and Holland, the Bronze, on "Ruggles" at the Elco Theatre, Elkhart.

Traffic Court Tied To "Reckless" Date

Cooperation of the Brooklyn Safety Council and local police heads made it possible for Manager Bernard Simon and circuit publicist Eddie Dowden to line up a flock of stunts against reckless driving as a buildup for "Reckless' at Loew's Metropolitan, Brooklyn, N. Y. City.

Accompanying photo shows demonstration of reckless driving against lights as put on in front of Traffic Court, with bannered theatre truck and overturned passenger car. Hundreds of motorists at Court on bad driving charges, were on hand to witness the object lesson. The stunt was repeated in every section of the borough to large audiences, to whom were distributed traffic cards, and papers carried stories and photos with plug for picture and date.

Further traffic angle was showing of safety short on screen at traffic court with slide enlargements of the "don't be reckless" traffic cards.

Local artist was planted in window of furniture store, painting portrait of Harlow and Powell. Display included 40 by 60's of stars and theatre credits, with finished painting awarded on a give-away contest. Picture hunt contest was planted at large five-and-ten by asking store patrons to collect at different counters photos of 15 different stars, with prizes given for entire sets.

Tiein was made with newspaper's model plane meet with trophies awarded by Harlow and Powell, shot of Jean holding grand prize featured in publicity. Hookup was made with another paper by having Gertrude Niessen distribute star photos at newspaper club meeting.

Co-op ads landed in New York and Brooklyn papers, tieups made with many stores and over 50 special windows secured were further evidences of activity that brought the boys a merited April First Mention.

MAY DEADLINE AND MAY JUDGES

Midnight of Saturday, June 8th, has been determined for the deadline on May Quigley Award entries, and managers are again reminded that campaigns must be at Committee Headquarters, 1790 Broadway, New York, by that time.

May judges are: P. D. Cochrane, Universal Pictures; Dan Michalove, Fox Films Corporation, and A. P. Waxman, Gaumont-British Picture Corporation. Decisions will be announced in the issue of June 15th.

Hotel Hangs Valance On "Dance" Premiere

With Jolson in person at the premiere of "Go Into Your Dance" and Gene Raymond on the bill at the Stanley, Pittsburgh, Joe Feldman, Warner Theatres' zone ad chief, promoted himself a flock of advance campaigns, not the least effective slant being a valance completely around the marquee (see photo) of the Hotel William Penn for five days ahead.

Jolson arrived via special car which was picked up 100 miles out by a squad of airplanes and escorted into town. Joe arranged reception at station after which parade of bannered cars was formed, headed by band and State champ drum and bugle corps, procession moving through city at break of evening rush hour.

Papers within 40 miles of Pittsburgh carried feature stories on Gene Raymond, star's appearance making it possible for Feldman to promote a group of co-op ads, topped by nearly a full page smash in hookup with ace department store.

For the evening Hollywood premiere at the theatre, house was closed for an hour and reopened with sidewalk broadcast, both visiting celebrities and local notables taking ether bows. Mayor, top club women, civic leaders and other prominents attended.

Joe also spotted streamers in all dance halls and sheet music in every available store, decorated two blocks around theatre in advance and promoted flocks of planes circling theatre during opening broadcast.

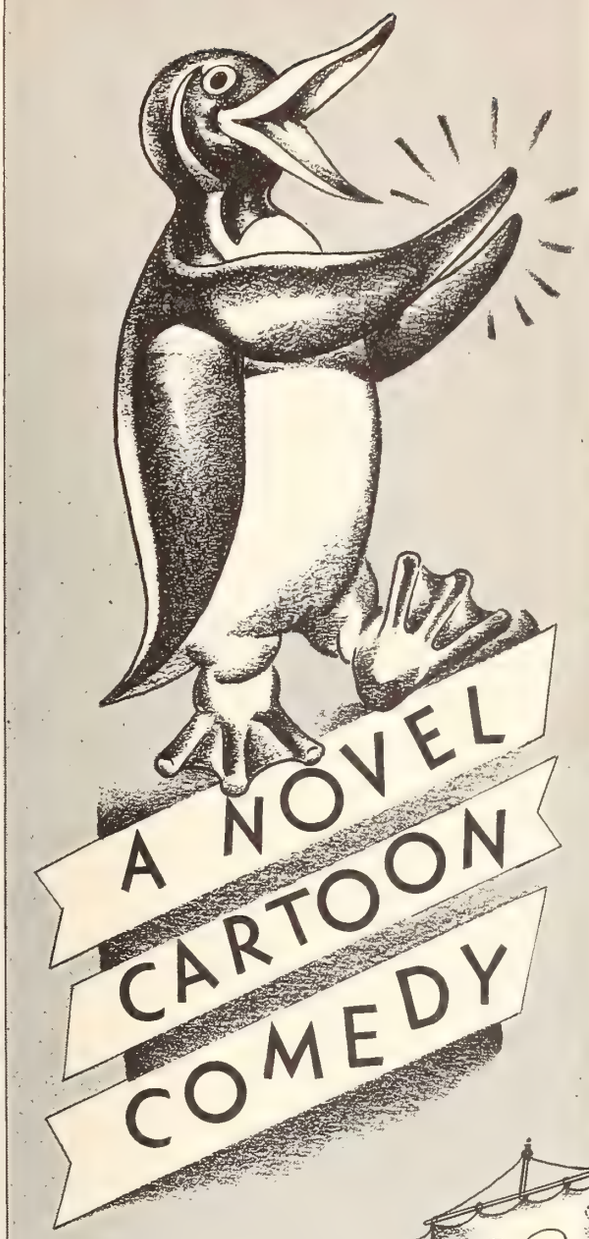
La Falce Lands Co-op Section On National Cotton Week



For National Cotton Week, Warner Theatres' Washington zone ad head Frank La Falce tied up with local daily for co-op ad section in which cover page was devoted to pictures of the stars on stage and the screen feature, "The Case of the Curious Bride," then current at the Earle Theatre. Merchants' ads on inside pages carried boxes advertising the Earle show and its lobby display of cotton fashions from the various stores, where each was given space to show Cotton Week modes. In addition, each store participating distributed inserts in every package, and also contributed window displays.

Bill Ewing and Dan Terrell of the Warner Washington, publicity office cooperated with La Falce on snapping over this city-wide campaign.

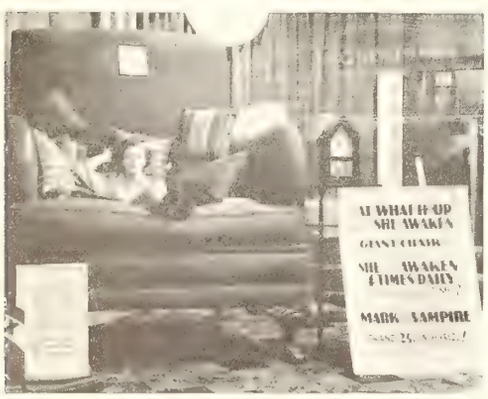
Sleeping Girl in Window

Tied into "Mark of the Vampire" by labeling the gal the victim of the vampire, was Jack Lykes' window gag of sleeping girl in pajamas, with prizes given to those guessing at what hour the girl would awake and for how many hours she would be asleep during the three days in advance the stunt was pulled. Naturally, a crowd-puller, it is suggested for further use and not necessarily only on this type of attraction. (See photo.)

Candid Camera Stunt



Those candid-camera street photographers are being tied in for the circled-photo lobby stunt, Manager Weiss, Loew's Oriental, Brooklyn, reporting effective a promotion wherein hundreds of group photos were planted in the lobby week ahead of "Naughty Marietta" with those encircled receiving guest invites.

Mystery Bally

For mystery type of picture, Arnold Gates, Loew's Park, Cleveland, promoted new car, and had rather well known radio star ride about town costumed and masked. Banners carried copy inviting locals to guess identity of masked rider, stating that contest identification entry blanks could be obtained at a certain store which tied in and paid for printing of entries on which were also listed coming attractions. Gates says though he found it best to use someone who is known, the number of tickets distributed can be regulated according to size of town. Also suggests an elaboration by hooking in more than one merchant and adding loudspeaker to the bally. Says it was a terrific word-of-mouth spreader and got additional aid from paper which publicized the idea.

Sidewalk Cutouts

For all comedy shorts such as Laurel-Hardy, Charley Chase, Todd-Kelly, and cartoons such as Pop Eye, Betty Boop, Mickey Mouse, R. M. Thomason, Crystal, Ellis, Kan., has made up cutouts for sidewalk. These are five feet high, two sided and painted with oil colors and shellacked to be weatherproofed. They have a piece of two by two extending two feet from the base that fits into the regular flagpole hole in the sidewalk. Cutouts are two inches thick, made of prestwood, and sides are spaced with two-inch strips securely nailed.

LET US NOW BE CUTTING THE CAKE

Being in the nature of a birthday, sentiment favored a cake to be made up of a lot of good boxoffices' stunts supplied by the membership. And although the usual procedure to celebrate an event of this kind is to give everyone one slice of the cake, we are extending the courtesy by giving every reader all of it, if you know what we mean, and we hope you enjoy it.

The ideas on these eight pages cover various angles, including slants to build up summer business.

Cute Quint Novelty

Jake Rosenthal, Iowa, Waterloo, Iowa, has been strong for novelties these many years and forwards one he found very popular on his recently screened "quint" short. The gag was imprinted miniature waxed paper didies held together with safety pin.

Different copy was used on the didies, such as "the Dionnes came in Fives, you'll come in Hundreds," and "the Dionnes it seems, believe in hunches, that all good things come in bunches."

Cake Baking Contest

Tied in to local A and P stores by Irwin Kay, Warners' Palace, Jamestown, N. Y., grocery chain donating first prize, $40 cash, and furnishing window cards, snipes, newspaper advertising and entry blanks. Cards and snipes displayed by all units involved, clerks distributing entry blanks and plugging contest. Three items of necessary ingredients had to be bought from A and P, store managers checking these off on entry blanks and signing same when bought, this entry blank submitted with cake.

Kay promoted seven other valuable prizes from noncompeting merchants, gave lobby and screen mention to contest, plugged it in house ads and secured eight prominent women as judges. Cake display held on mezzanine, and final judging on stage.

Prizes were awarded on texture, taste and treatment; any kind of cake could be submitted, and winners were not obliged to be in theatre at time of judging.

Ice Cream Matinees

For summer months, Louis Charninsky, Capitol, Dallas, Tex., has already started what he terms "Ice Cream Matinee" on Friday of each week. Children are allowed in until six o'clock for the regular ten cent admission and receive a scoop of ice cream in addition. Louie says stunt doubled his usual Friday afternoon grosses.

Other kid attractors offered by Charninsky include a Tom Mix serial to be started when school closes with local candy company sponsoring a kid club. Another giveaway will be 25 rapid fire toy rubber machine guns contributed by department store for next eight Saturday morning shows.

"Farewell" Showings

One of his best bets for extra money is to bring back outstanding hits for farewell showings, says Walter F. Davis, Capitol, Regina, Canada, patrons being invited to see regular show and remain for the "farewell" picture without extra admission. Stunt has never failed to pack the house, according to Walter, and cost of film of course is very little.

Institutional Lobby Copy

Bunny Bryan, manager, Pantheon, Chicago, believes in keeping his patrons informed of any improvements and new equipment. Located in a highly competitive neighborhood situation, Bunny uses his lobby as his newspaper, and tells us of a large easel in the foyer with nine reasons listed under the heading: "Why the Pantheon Is a Better Buy."

These reasons include new sound and projection equipment, screen overhauling, recarpeting, remodeling and new seats, etc. Copy finishes with signed thanks from Bryan for past patronage.

"Stay On the Floor"

Says Manager O. J. Ratto, Loew's Palace, Washington, who stresses that one of the most important duties of a house manager is to please his patrons and to do so must be on the floor as much as possible to see that everything goes along as it should.

Prolog for Chill Pictures

Worked on "Bride of Frankenstein" and recommended by him for other horror pictures is Manager Mike Chakeres' suggestion for prolog just before the feature, as put on at State, Springfield, Ohio.

House lights out or low, with scrim or thin curtain as far down stage as possible to accompaniment of spook music. Backstage, green spot is placed close to back wall with green flooding curtain. Man wearing overcoat with collar turned up slinks across stage between spot and curtain, thus throwing shadow, life sized or larger according to his movements up or down stage, shadow visible to audience on curtain.

Man picks up girl cutout, works some spook business to accompaniment of off stage scream, fires blanks revolver, moves close to spot to make shadow fill curtain and dashes off while lights come up.

ATTRACTIVE FRONT. This "Gold Diggers" front comes from Paul Andrews, artist for Jack Cartwright, Empire, Daytona, Fla. Note silhouettes at either side of box office.

Of Ideas to Celebrate Birthday

Dog and Child Contest

Variation of the plain dog contest is a stunt that has proven profitable in which photos of juvenile dog owners and their pets are entered for the various prizes, such as handsomest child and dog, best costumed dog and child, most comic pose of child and dog, etc., etc. Contest is hooked to newspaper and may run from three to five weeks.

Photos are mailed to paper, which also sends photographers to certain designated spots on different days to take shots of entrants who do not have cameras. Weekly prizes are given in addition to major awards, the latter voted at gathering or picnic in city park, the weekly winners competing in the finals, all entrants and dogs parading from theatre to park. Ice cream and other refreshments have been promoted for this as well as prizes from local merchants, theatre tickets, etc.

Theatre can tie in by having preliminary judging on stage and run newsreel shots of weekly winners. Run right, the contest fits in well for spring and summer business.

Little Theatre Broadcast

Managers are varying the amateur stage broadcast by tying in wherever available to local little theatre groups, having these thespians broadcast 15-minute scripts of coming pictures and other playlets from stage instead of studio. Comparatively few theatre patrons have ever seen an actual broadcast and this idea is being spotted weekly with one group or more according to the local lineup and audience interest. As broadcasts are included in regular station programs, this allows for theatre and picture plugs in the drawing area as well.

Fingerprint Lobby Gag

Used on "G-Men" and suggested for similar pictures, was fingerprint apparatus borrowed from local police department by Billings Booth, Warners' Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y. Police expert also took free fingerprints in lobby for two days ahead and first two days of run. Booth also ran preview for police department for excellent word-of-mouth, police chief also contributing column newspaper article written in a manner to encourage family attendance as a lesson in good conduct.

ATTRACTIVE WINDOW. Ken Reid, Loew's, Canton, secured this effective display on "Sequoia," merchant plugging Jean Parker suits. Note prominence of theatre panel

MEMORIAL DAY SUGGESTIONS

This event coming within the week, on Thursday, May 30, rates recognition, in view of which Al Zimbalist suggests:

Lobby display of whatever Civil War relics or trophies there may be available locally; invite to any Civil War veterans who are resident; offer of house conveniences during or after Memorial Day parade; screening of appropriate short, and lobby decoration.

Tin Can Matinee

In line with Spring cleaning is the tin can matinee and first to report this activity for 1935 is C. V. Wilson, of the Ritz, Alexandria, Ind., who cooperated on a "clean up the city" drive by giving free admission to every kid bringing ten cans to the theatre. Health department had trucks waiting and Wilson reports extra newspaper publicity and thanks of the city fathers for this cooperation.

Manager Broadcasters

Many managers are acceptably filling weekly radio spots with chatter broadcasts of Hollywood stuff that has to do with coming attractions, and in this way obtain the radio periods free of charge. Wally Allen, of Warners' Keeney, Elmira, N. Y., does it a little different by playing the piano during his broadcast doing the announcements a la Jack Little.

Dollar Serial Number Idea

Ralph Crabill, Warner Jamestown district chief, reports window tieups wherein serial numbers taken from one dollar bills in circulation locally were listed. Customers of these stores obtaining any of the listed bills received free guest ticket at box office. Ralph says stunt crashed windows usually difficult to obtain.

Fiesta Day

Inaugurated locally by Harley Fryer, Fox Theatres City Manager, Joplin, Mo., is a Fiesta Day, put on late in April, event sponsored by local business men with budget of $7,000. Queen to reign during the "day" was contested for on the stage of the Fox Theatre, and further slant was selling all Fryer's theatres for the day to Chamber of Commerce, so that free shows could be given from ten in the morning to four.

Lobby Stamp Display

To interest local stamp collectors, Billings Booth, Warners' Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y., promoted stamp dealer to get up ten-foot framed display of over 2,000 stamps in lobby. Exhibit drew many visitors, got newspaper publicity, created good will and got extra business for dealer. Booth tied this in to "Private Worlds" date.

Revolving Display

A keen student of inexpensive animation is R. M. Thomason, Crystal, Ellis, Kan., reporting on his revolving display (see photo) used most recently on "Copperfield." Display is five-sided and takes 15 stills, is lighted from inside, and is run by motor.

June Joy Jubilee

Few years back, Dick Moss, now at the Egyptian, Long Beach, Cal., put on a June Joy Jubilee in which merchants cooperated by running special Jubilee sales, and windows, extra newspaper advertising, banners, etc. Every possible medium was used to plug the event, including wires from stars, proclamation from Mayor, special newspaper sections. Opening night of month was put on big and Dick reports increased business during entire period as a result.

Beard Growing Contest

E. C. Grady, Hoosier, Whiting, Ind., reports a ten day beard-growing contest, open to high school students, both male and female (he doesn't explain how the gals come in). Stunt was worked on "Ruggles" and chairman of beard award committee appropriately enough, was the local tonsorial artist. 17 entries were obtained, with first prize a month's pass to the theatre and second, a shaving brush.

Bathing Beauty Revue

Yearly standby of Ed Hart's, at the Oxford, Plainfield, N. J., is a bathing beauty revue recently put on and sponsored by leading store, which furnishes ten models, all outfits and advertising. Revue is presented at evening performances for three days and plugged with heralds, trailer, billing, etc.

Dog Show and Contest

Another Ed Hart clicker is his dog show and contest put on as soon after school closing as possible. Presented at one matinee and always has done capacity on investment of $10 for prizes in addition to pass prizes.

Audience does the judging and awards are made for the usual cutest, most attractive, funniest, most forlorn looking, and a lot of other classifications, so that as many as possible of the juvenile entrants can win prizes.

Lobby Floral Show Suggested

Buildup for Rural Business

Mike Guttman, Colonial, Watertown, S. D., is flooding surrounding rural towns and posting barns on all roads leading to town with one sheets containing institutional copy. This year they read: "Hit after Hit, Week After Week, at Your Colonial for the Month of May."

Mike says this helps to build up the rural trade that has been hibernating indoors all winter. He also gets out into the small towns every other week to handshake the merchants and prominent locals. It helps to create a lot of good will, he opines.

Florist and Wire Tieup

Arrange combination florist and telegraph company tieup for window and newspaper space, says Gene Curtis of Famous Players-Canadian, by promoting wire from Hollywood star ordering basket of flowers sent to theatre for opening of star's picture. Blowup of wire in all local wire offices and window display at florists can be obtained, and Gene suggests sending the flowers to children's home for news story and photo.

Flower Show in Lobby

Seasonal tieup that goes well is lobby floral show put on by single florist or nurserymen. Latter supply flowers, bushes, plants, etc., with sales people on hand to answer questions and if practical, also to make sales. This was tied in with leading horticultural trade paper few years back and resulted in profitable hookins all over country. Theatre of course obtains costless flower lobby or mezzanine displays, and Gene Curtis favors also tying this angle to flowers by telegraph service.

Coloring Contest

Get local florist to print heralds containing outline drawing of flowers, says Gene Curtis. Then have him tie in coloring contest, with prizes given for different age groupings. Heralds carry theatre copy, and distributed at florist's and theatre.

Roses frozen in ice cake with contest to guess how long it takes ice to melt is another from Curtis, who also suggested waterproofed theatre card be frozen in same cake.

ATMOSPHERIC FRONT. From A. D. Eichenlaub, Orpheum, Pocatello, Idaho, comes this attractive "Sequoia" front. Note feature time schedule bulletin above box office.

GRADUATION TIME IS IN THE OFFING

Wise showmen are preparing to link coming school graduation exercises to the box office, says Howard Waugh, suggesting that efforts be made to stage the high school senior class night and play at the theatre.

Conduct contest to determine most popular boy and girl in senior class, every ticket constituting a vote, and merchants selling graduation clothing and gifts contributing prizes. Waugh also favors reunion of last year's graduating class at theatre.

Theatre Parties, Benefits

By following newspaper announcements of parties, meetings and gatherings, Art Ableson, Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., has been able to make contacts with these different groups to sell them on the idea of a theatre party at reduced admissions either before or after the party or meeting.

Same procedure is followed in promoting benefits, as Ableson finds clubs ready to listen to propositions to raise funds. Members sell tickets on percentage, only extra cost to theatre being the printing of benefit tickets.

Dairy Tieup

To sell titles of five or six coming attractions, Art Ableson, Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., worked out deal with dairy to place individual titles on milk bottle caps, in cheese or butter cartons. Guest tickets are offered to those turning in, up to certain time, entire list of titles. Dairy runs newspaper campaign and otherwise builds up publicity, carries banners on delivery wagons, etc.

Industrial Exhibit

In many situations, theatre lobby or mezzanine is spacious enough for exhibit of local industries and Art Ableson, Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., has utilized this space to sell merchants to display their wares and to purchase tickets for prospective purchasers. Special newspaper section can also be tied in with this idea.

More Horror Stuff

Jack Lykes, at the Stillman, Cleveland, sends along a human trailer idea he recommends only for horror pictures and used on "Mark of Vampire," as follows:

At closein of newsreel, operator in projection booth released a six-foot cutout bat with illuminated eyes on a wire running from booth to stage during which whistle siren, screams and gunshot were used for sound effects. When bat hit the stage, all house lights were blacked out and man in grotesque costume, a la Lugosi, appeared in green spot making weird announcement, this followed by regular advance trailer.

"Don't Use Freeze Copy"

With hot weather in the offing and cooling plants being readied to function, don't use "freeze" copy, says Frank Boucher, in advertising the cool plant. Managers are cautioned, and wisely, against using "refrigerated weather" and such ice box terms, as patrons shy away from the too cool theatre, a source of summer colds. Newspaper copy and lobby posters should stress "comfortably cool" interiors.

Summer Dressup

Linen and palm beach apparel for the house personnel is more the rule these days than the exception to give off that inviting atmosphere to lick the heat. Blues and greens in the house lights should replace the more fiery colors, and the same idea should be carried out as far as practical in the lobby and foyer posters.

Another Easter Hunt

To be included among the headline Easter egg hunts is that put on annually by Gus Carlson, People's, Superior, Wis., which receives citywide cooperation, and is put over with local paper which goes to town in building up the party, held at daybreak between Friday and Easter Saturday.

Carlson promotes prizes from merchants in exchange for mention in publicity, and also obtains over 1,000 eggs, hardboiled and colored, without cost from leading grocer. Eight "hunting grounds" are selected through the city, about 150 eggs buried in each spot.

Sixteen gold and 16 silver eggs, appropriately lettered, are buried, two gold and two silver, to each hunting ground, and children bringing in these eggs are given the major prizes, gold for boys and silver for girls. Besides these, there are also 34 other major prizes, including a first and second for the boys or girls bringing in the most eggs of any color, and first and second prizes for boys or girls bringing in most eggs of one color. Also awarded are prizes to youngest boy and girl, etc., and all trophies are displayed well in advance in prominent window.

Fire department cooperates in burying eggs and boy scouts act as guards around the different hunting grounds.

COVERED THE TOWN. Bob Gillham and Alec Moss blanketed New York with 24's and ones on "Going to Town". Above shows representative coverage.

Radio Password Stunt Clicks

Radio Theatre Chatter

Fred Oestricher regularly supplies local radio commentator with news of coming dates for dissemination on daily morning broadcasts, which also includes reviews after picture openings. No cost to theatre except for a pair of courtesy passes weekly.

Careful Driver Campaign

Used on "Reckless" but also effective on other dates or for institutional campaign is Wally Caldwell's careful driver stunt at Loew's Valentine, Toledo, tying in with Safety Counsel, police department and newspaper. Committee or motorcycle police pick eight careful drivers daily by jotting down their license numbers which are published in paper in one column art boxes to resemble license plates. Drivers receive guest tickets.

School Merit Awards

J. J. Scholer, Ohio, Sandusky, Ohio, gives 50 guest tickets monthly to schools for high merit marks among pupils. In exchange, on certain pictures, announcements are made to all classes, distribution of heralds by students under supervision of superintendent, window cards at all schools, and slides are shown in school auditorium.

Scholer also works with department stores, giving guest tickets to employees for best window displays, high sales, regular attendance. He rotates stores weekly and thus finds tieups easier to make.

Telephone Tieup

Sid Holland's tieup with local phone company in which skilled operators are planted in prominent downtown window calling numerous subscribers on coming attraction is recommended to plug the phone company services to spread message over wide area.

Tiein copy calls attention to speed and facility of phone service using the theatre hookup as an instance which also calls for stills on picture that is advertised.

Parking Tieup

New parking lot recently opened in back of theatre and Frank Taylor, Loew's Columbia, to obtain reduction for patrons runs a short trailer calling attention to this new theatre service. Patrons to qualify have their auto claim checks stamped by theatre.

ZEP AIR BALLY. Publicist Milt Harris, Loew Cleveland Theatres, promoted Zep with West Point trailer. Message concerning show was broadcast.

MAKE YOUR CITY PICTURE CONSCIOUS

You can do a mighty job for your theatre and for your organization by instilling a desire in the citizenry of your city for motion pictures. And incidentally, you'll be doing the good people a darn good turn, says Pete Egan, Palace, Calgary, Canada.

Get it in print, urges Pete. Our industry teems with feature stories, news stories and special articles. Get it on the radio, for that is the type of material that makes new customers. According to Egan, half the battle is won by making people picture conscious.

Moviegrams

Every theatre in one spot can get in on this newspaper contest, says Walter Morris, Regent, Grand Rapids, Mich., the stunt being termed "moviegrams." Readers were asked to study the names of the current attractions at the different houses and to compose a sentence that included the picture titles and read reasonably as regards continuity.

Paper ran daily coupon with space for "moviegram," and prizes were tickets to all theatres, each attraction listed during the current week, down to single tickets to one show. Included of course in the buildup were names of all theatres, titles and dates, contest running for two weeks.

Statement Stuffers

L. Ward Farrar, Loew's, Indianapolis, has an arrangement with leading department store to include calendars of attractions coming following month in store's monthly statements. Some store also runs regular display ads on woman stars at Loew's that can be tied in to coiffure department.

Radio Password

Art Ableson, Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., has worked out a radio password stunt whereby station announces at a certain time each day a password will be broadcast which will admit from 10 to 20 persons first arriving at box-office with the word. This can be star or title of current or coming attraction. Station throws in plug for theatre in announcement.

Weekly U. A. Broadcast

On United Artists features and shorts, Berny Bernfield, U. A. Kansas City exploiteer, has worked out a weekly broadcast on department store juvenile program on highlights of U. A. productions coming to Johnny McManus' Loew's Midland. Store has group of players, from nine to 12 years of age, which broadcasts dramatizations of pictures. Program director also puts in plug for picture and talks about styles worn by stars in these attractions.

Imprinting Store Circulars

Erle Wright, Loew New England Theatres publicity head, reports another variation of theatre copy on reverse side of store circulars, by imprinting market circulars with picture strips and caption synopsis from the press book mats on different attractions, his latest tieup of this kind being on "Naughty Marietta."

Whenever newspaper serials are available, Wright switches the plug by running two chapters weekly, and says that store customers ask for the following week's circulars so as not to miss out on the story. Erle favors this for any spot where chain stores advertise in this manner and says that in Worcester, Mass., chain puts out 30 thousand weekly without any cost whatever to the theatre.

Limerick Contest

Suggested for use on other pictures, Walter Morris, Regent, Grand Rapids, Mich., sends along tear sheets of a limerick contest on "Sequoia" in tiein with local daily which ran different four-line limerick each day that had to do with players or action of picture, prizes given to those filling in best last line of each.

Contest ran four days ahead, illustrated daily with two-column cut from the picture, and prizes were different number of tickets for those sending in best complete list of last lines.

Easter Egg Hunt

Max Cooper, Fox, Hackensack, N. J., describes an egg hunt he has been putting on annually for some years in tiein with local paper, and leading market, which supplies eggs, prizes and pays for newsreel shots shown at the Fox following week. Hunt starts at theatre, where kids are marched behind band and with police escort to market parking space, where at a given signal, the hunt is on.

Prizes are given to those bringing eggs first to judges' stand, but all eggs found are good for free admission. Each kid in the hunt also receives free candy egg, and as it is put on in a downtown spot with thousands watching, brings in a lot of unusual publicity and good will, according to Cooper.

ATMOSPHERIC LOBBY. Mike Guttman, Colonial, Watertown, S. D., is credited for this "Sequoia" display, using blue and green flood and spot lights.

Pupils Invited to Previews

OKay Kiddie Show

Having a lot of success with the idea last year in cooperation with his P T A, Walter Morris, Regent, Grand Rapids, Mich., has already started what he calls his OKay Kiddie Show, on Saturday mornings, and recommends it to buildup or maintain juvenile patronage during the summer months.

Show runs two hours confined to shorts such as Mickey Mouse, Sillies, Betty Boop, Our Gang, Sportslights, Oddities, Pop Eyes, animal and educational subjects. Various promotion ideas are incorporated to keep up interest, featured by a children's amateur broadcast from the stage weekly, with cash prizes given and sponsor paying for the air time.

For Musicals

Fred Oestricher, Loew Theatres publicist, Columbus, Ohio, engaged local soprano to sing at lunch clubs, in hotel cocktail rooms, and other similar spots. Gal sang hits from "Naughty Marietta," accompanied by house organist and pianist. M.C. in different spots included plug on date when introducing singer.

Also suggests contest for best girl singer for buildup on any musical. Eliminations to be held nightly if possible well in advance of opening, entrants to sing numbers from picture. Prizes may be date at theatre, or hooked into local radio station for broadcasting appearances.

Pupils at Preview

Walter Morris Regent, Grand Rapids, Mich., in addition to inviting English teachers to preview of "Sequoia," had them bring a boy or girl from each class they taught. Selection was made by teacher or by vote of class, and prize pupil was expected to give oral review of picture.

"Humorad" Contest

Rewriting newspaper ads to make them funny is the basis of Walter Morris' "Humorad" contest recently worked on Will Rogers in tieup with newspaper. Readers are invited to gag up any ad or part of ad in a certain issue, the copy to be rewritten without offense to advertiser or reader. Morris secured a lot of free display space on this, the plug topped with theatre copy and cut of Rogers.

BRIDAL BALLY. J. G. Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, had couple in bridal finery cover town in car carrying "Just Married" banner for "Wedding Night."

PERSONALITY WILL DO IT

The manager cannot be held for the product he plays, but he can be held responsible for the manner in which this product is shown, is the contention of John McManus, Loew's Midland, Kansas City.

What is being shown on stage or screen and the manner in which it is advertised are gambles, to some extent, but the house with the important personality out front, says Johnny, will be doing business week in and week out.

Primarily, the manager must be a diplomat and must be liked not as a great fellow, adds McManus, but as an efficient worker.

"Manager-for-a-Day"

Worked in many spots in tieup with Scout organizations, Junior Leaguers, and similar groups, club members acting as manager, ushers, stage hands, cashiers, etc., for one day, or part of day. Idea is worked out so that the stunt does not interfere with regular routine, house employees carrying on as usual, but instructing the "new help" in various duties.

Stunt when properly handled returns a lot of good publicity with club members writing feature stories of their experiences and shots for newspapers showing them at their various tasks.

Certified Entertainment Month

Reported by Jules J. Rubens, of Publix-Great States Theatres, as an outstanding drive at all houses in the circuit, was a "Certified Entertainment Month," tied in with dealers in certified milk, certified bread, meats, groceries, furniture, etc. Managers were successful in putting over ace tieups such as double truck co-op pages, window displays, bread wrappers, milk bottle caps, etc.

All theatre advertising carried the certified seal, same idea utilized by cooperating merchants in newspaper displays and tiein publicity.

Airline Slogan Contest

Lou Brown, Washington Loew Theatres ad chief, has just completed a three-way tiein with a local paper, an airline and out of town hotel, the three being the Washington Times, the Central Airlines and the Detroit Leland Hotel.

Contest was to write a slogan for the airline, winner and companion receiving a trip via plane to Detroit, where the hotel entertains them for two days free of charge. In addition, Brown gave 15 pairs of guest tickets for the next best slogans.

As tieup was plugged at the Loew houses, newspaper went strong for the current attractions, theatres getting a lot of extra publicity during the two weeks of the stunt. Lou says campaign was all "on the cuff."

"Lost and Found" Clothes Line

To encourage return of lost and found articles, Walter F. Davis, Capitol, Regina, Canada, strung a 50-foot line alongside of theatre to which were fastened with clothespins variety of articles lost in theatre. Tied in on "McFadden's Flats" (see photo) copy reading "McFadden's Flats have nothing on the Capitol lost and found line," and reports that lots of articles were reclaimed. Line was continually replenished, gathered crowds and secured newspaper story.

Radio Theme Song Contest

L. W. Bevel, of the Princess, Harriman, Tenn., puts on his own radio program in Knoxville, 40 miles away, each Thursday at noon, which being the only program coming in to Harriman and nearby towns at that hour, is assured of attention from all local points.

Broadcast is called "The Theme Song Program," wherein various numbers are played, including one from some picture that has played or is to play the Princess. Listeners are asked to name the picture in which song was featured, and to the five persons writing the name of picture most times on back of penny post card, pair of guest tickets are awarded.

"L. W." says he has received cards on which names have been written over 3,000 times. Program is costless as Bevel, is his own M.C., singer, pianist and accordionist. D'yuh hear that, Wally Allen?

Women's Clubs Cooperation

Wally Caldwell, Loew's Valentine, Toledo, Ohio, has a regular tieup with local Federation of Women's Club, concentrating on motion picture division plus chairmen and presidents of other civic organizations by supplying announcements, heralds, etc., of coming attractions, and inviting them to screenings. Finds this helpful in his situation, invite list being carefully selected.

"Public Hero, No. 1"

Fred Oestricher is working on tiein to have one of local papers and civic organization select a "Public Hero No. 1" to hookup with picture of same name. Stunt will involve selection of policeman or fireman who has distinguished himself by heroic action during past year. Hero to be presented with plaque or statuette on stage on opening night. Figures it good for annual event.

Shorts Show Brings Business

Easter Floral Lobby

Unusual floral display was arranged by J. G. Newkirk, Loew's Granada, Cleveland, for Easter lobby flash, outstanding feature being a huge rabbit (see photo) made up of 2,500 different flowers. Newkirk reports attendance from all over the city to see the exhibit, and downtown papers running photos. Entire idea was promoted, florist cashing in on the extra publicity and credits.

Change Idea

Where four dollars in bills are returned as change of a five at box office, paper fold with picture copy on coming attraction has been placed around these bills, the four-dollar units being prepared in advance. Same idea has also been used with change for single dollars, by placing change in glassine imprinted envelopes

Permanent Checking Room

Walter F. Davis, Capitol, Regina, Canada, finds patrons appreciative, especially on Saturdays, of a theatre checking room, or counter in some convenient space. He advertises: "To the Saturday shoppers, let us take care of your parcels while seeing the show." Walter cautions against using the word "check" to eliminate any thought that there might be a charge for this service, and says his checking counter is well patronized.

Long Distance Interview

John Beal, star of "Laddie," is a Joplin, Mo., boy, and when Harley Fryer, Fox Theatres City Manager in that spot, played the picture at the Paramount, he arranged long distance phone call to Beal at Radio studios, with cooperation of phone company and Western Electric. Call was transmitted to audience direct over theatre sound equipment. Stunt was plugged in theatre ads, and paper ran stories ahead and after.

"Old and New" Window

For pictures with backgrounds of former days and current period, such as "World Changes," Ralph Crabill, Warner Jamestown district chief, reports success on tieups with prominent clothing stores wherein window was given over to displays of old fashioned clothing and today's styles, this tied in to picture copy.

Newkirk's Flash Easter Lobby Display

GOOD SHOW RUINED BY POOR SERVICE

Many a good show can be ruined by some thoughtless act of an employee, says Leto Hill, Warner Theatres St. Louis zone head, who opines that people have a way of showing preference for individual establishments, quality and price being equal.

A certain service may bring business to one spot and so concealed is this service that often the patron is not aware of the reason. So in your business, adds Mr. Hill, some particular courtesy may make a steady out of a transient.

Lunch Club Tiein

Billings Booth, Warners' Winter Garden, Jamestown, N. Y., recommends inviting lunch club to hold weekly meeting on mezzanine which he did with Kiwanis, inducing club to do so by showing preview of "Go Into Your Dance." Members paid for lunches, served by hotel, where meetings are usually held. Idea, unique for lunchers, gathered lots of additional publicity.

Telephone Tieups

Art Ableson, Roxy, Glasgow, Mont., suggests for the smaller town, tying in with phone company for "General Alarm Call," usually reserved for out of the ordinary events. He says he has put over the stunt without cost other than passes to all operators who call every subscriber and deliver some set plug for picture.

Ableson has a variation of Sid Holland's window tieup with phone company wherein operators in prominent downtown window call numbers to announce pictures. The angle ties in with dress shop by having operators change gowns every half hour or hour, one phoning while the other changes.

Gala Shorts Show

With hard to sell features, Wally Allen, Keeney, Elmira, N. Y., puts on what he calls "Gala Radio Screen Show" or "All Comedy Short Program" or "Blue Ribbon Array of Shorts," carefully picking four or five name shorts to make up these programs. Wally says it is necessary to save these shorts, sometimes two months in advance of the program, and reports they have actually brought in plenty of extra business.

Recent "All Comedy Show" comprised: Allen Jenkins in two-reel "Get Rich Quick"; Ben Bernie in "Hear Ye, Hear Ye"; Pop Eye and Dumb Bell Letters.

Another was "Blue Ribbon Short Show" with the following, sold as best shorts of year: Dizzy and Daffy Dean, Dionne Quints, Vitaphone Vaudeville Reel No. 2, Pop Eye and Charles Ahearn and Orchestra.

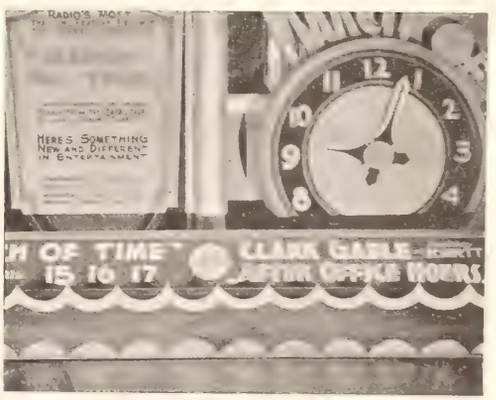
Wally says the radio shorts are easiest to book as Vitaphone, Paramount and Universal feature these with radio names.

Students Sell Tickets

Tieup with local schools on "Sequoia" had pupils selling tickets for month's pass to two students selling most and ticket to all disposing of at least 20 admissions, reports R. M. Thomason, Crystal, Ellis, Kan. Advertising in schools was made possible by this tiein, which was a lifesaver, reports Thomason, due to dust storm that hit at time of playdate.

Regular Still Displays

Berny Bernfield, United Artists' Kansas City exploiteer, has an arrangement with prominent department store to supply regular size stills and blowups on stars of each production which are shown in millinery and wearing apparel departments, and properly credited. Photos are displayed in albums and lightly pasted so that customers, if they desire, may lift these out and take them home as souvenirs.



One result, says Berny, on "House of Rothschild," showed that store made many sales in millinery department on hat worn by Loretta Young as worn by star in photos displayed in albums. Co-op ads and window displays carry idea further.

Music Week Festival

Lou Brown, Washington Loew Theatres ad chief, reports tiein on annual music week, wherein musical organizations, both choral and instrumental in schools, colleges, churches, etc., are invited to make one stage appearance during the week. Brown has 27 local music groups set, one for each stage show. Extra newspaper publicity and other advertising in cooperation with individual groups brings in a lot of admissions from friends of these organizations. Word-of-mouth by members adds to the buildup.

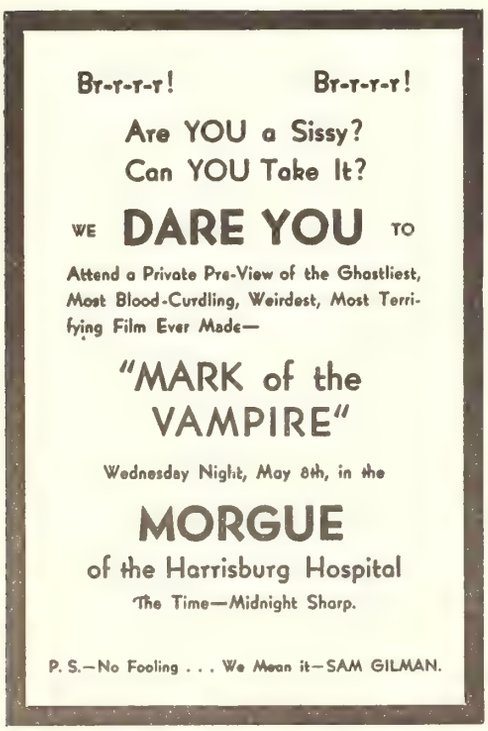
"Last Times Today"

Too many managers forget to emphasize the last day's showing of the feature, says Al Zimbalist, Warner St. Louis ad head. Al stresses the importance of posting last day notice conspicuously in all advertising, especially in case of better pictures. Zim finds that this emphasis removes any peeve on part of regular patrons who might want to see a certain feature and are not aware of closing date.

TEMPUS FUGIT. Jack Purves, Capitol, Sudbury, Ont., Canada, rigged up this effective display for "March of Time" with small motor turning hands.

Theatre Promenade Attracts

Theatre Promenade



Publicized in these pages last year, the promenade created by Charley Bassin, at the Oriental, Boston, is again being prepared for the summer and is recommended for duplication wherever space allows. Bassin's spot is in rear of the house, cheerfully decorated with summer outdoors furniture, and at intermissions, patrons are invited to step out for a cigarette and a soft drink, all of which is promoted as is the furniture and paid off in theatre credits. Bassin credits this as a distinct extra grosser.

Summer Floral Lobby

Featured in past years by H. M. Addison, at Loew Cleveland Theatres when Addy was district chief in that territory, the summer floral display planted in inside lobby has become a regular institution. Various accounts have been run of this promotion. Leading nurserymen laid out different arrangements of evergreens, shrubs, and varieties of the hardier plants. These were tended carefully and brought citywide attention. Nurserymen did sufficient business as a result to more than warrant the expenditure of time, money and effort.

Amateur Nights

Still proving a draw due to the national radio programs, the amateur night has possibilities in the smaller spots, either on local station, or without radio hookup, if none is available. In either case, local merchants sponsor the show, putting up weekly prizes of cash and merchandise. Usually put on some slow night, and in lesser communities, papers can also be hooked in. Grand prizes for best of weekly winners over certain set period is also suggested.

Above is reproduction of stunt put on at Loew's Harrisburg by Sam Gilman for unique preview of "Mark of the Vampire."

GOOD IDEAS DEPEND UPON ORGANIZATION

The very birth of box office ideas as well as their execution depends upon the functioning of the theatre organization, writes Sid Holland, Elkhart Amusement Co., Elkhart, Ind., who describes the weekly get-together of all personnel representing three houses. Activities of past week are picked to pieces, each employee being free to speak his mind.

Ideas for coming attractions are thus discussed and analyzed, rejected or accepted for execution. Such organization, Sid says, is the backbone of box office ideas and illustrates his point by describing a recent prosperity nite stunt which required the organized services of his staff.

Card and Counter Stunt

Palace Theatre, Olean, N. Y., found effective the old reliable postcard and counter sign idea whereby store places signs bearing names of various residents in as many spots as possible. Store then sends postcards to those whose names are listed inviting them to come down and find their names on the counter cards for guest tickets to theatre. Counter cards of course bear proper credits.

Rubber Stamping

Most recent addition to L. Ward Farrar's routine advertising at Loew's Indianapolis, is a stamp on coming attractions used wherever possible. Parking tickets at downtown garages, backs of downtown restaurant checks, five-and-ten stores, shopping bags and book jackets at lending libraries are stamped with title and date regularly.

Photos Local Events

Taking pictures of recent jack rabbit drives, R. M. Thomason, Crystal, Ellis, Kan., mounted these photos, appropriately captioned, in lobby, and tied them in with current attraction. Shots drew crowds to lobby and Thomason favors the same kind of treatment for any other local event of prominence.

"Stop, Look, Listen"

Johnny Baker, Broadway, Long Island City, L. I., tied in with police department, local paper and five cooperating sponsors to show a locally made safety picture at theatre during period designated as "Safety Week." Picture showed accidents composed of stock shots and actual scenes, taken in neighborhood. Public and parochial school children were invited to appear in the filming, bally'd further with street floats. Prominents were induced to endorse the showing.

Results were that youngsters came to see themselves in picture, theatre hit for page one stories and Baker built up his community standing.

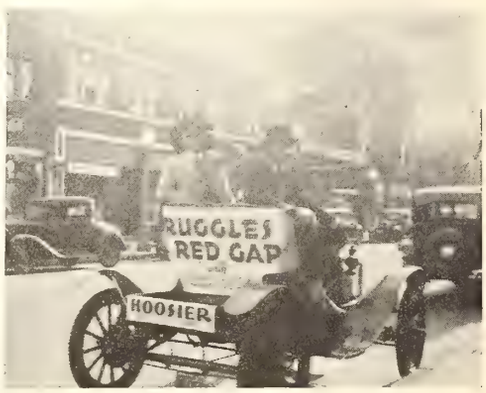
Old Time Car Bally

The auto of ancient vintage for street bally is almost a certain crowd-stopper, according to E. C. Grady, Hoosier, Whiting, Ind., who dug up a 1909 Brush and turned it loose with two boys made up to represent Ruggles and Laughton in "Ruggles" (see photo). Styles of the early nineties and hundreds are always of interest, says Grady, especially to the younger generation, and urges their use for bally and display wherever possible.

Free Vacation Trips

Time is nigh for popularity contests for prizes for vacation trips, and Harry Browning, M and P Theatres ad head, is working with circuit managers to put these on. In Lowell, Mass., last year, two of these were effected, one with Greyhound Lines and local daily, and another with another paper and travel agency.

Contests were for most popular high school boy and girl, other for most popular retail clerks, man and woman. Votes published in paper and deposited in lobby coupon box.



Contact New Residents

Be the first theatreman in your town or neighborhood to contact new residents, says Col. Howard Waugh, by getting names from application clerk of electric light or gas company. Superintendents of buildings are another good source. Howard suggests sending letter of welcome and guest tickets to newcomers.

Rose Show

Walter Wilson, Capitol, Edmonton, Canada, is responsible for an annual rose show at the theatre with prominent nurserymen tied in who sell rose bushes at a discount on presentation of flower pamphlet secured only at theatre when purchasing admission.

Mayor, City Council and prominents cooperate and for the windup a show is put on at the theatre, over 200 exhibits entered last year. Nurserymen plug the show on radio and Wilson makes talks at clubs on rose culture. Papers cooperate, and during last rose drive, promoted blooms were given to patrons whose birthdays fell on the date they attended theatre.

Boat Bally Proves Effective

Ad Writing Contest

Al Smith, State, Winona, Minn., tied in local paper to sponsor ad writing contest on "Ruggles." Paper gave generous display space and Smith furnished small cash prizes and tickets. Highlights of the story were described in ads and also buildup for midnight preview where entrants were supposed to gather to find material for their ads. Went over so well that Charley Winchell, Minnesota Amusement ad chief, recommended it to all other "A" houses.

Perfect Foot Contest

In tiein for National Foot Week, J. J. Cahill, Brockton, Brockton, Mass., put on a "perfect foot contest" with local podiatrists, nine girls being selected from all those applying. Girls had feet examined on stage by committee for prizes of diamond ring, shoes and stockings.

Newspapers tied in with advance stories and pictures of winners. Cahill included it in his ads, ran short trailers ahead and had prizes displayed in lobby. He reports receipts of usual slow Friday night were doubled.

Boat Bally

Last summer, quite a few water ballys were reported, either with sail or motorboats. The sailboat is more spectacular as the mast allows more latitude in tacking up theatre banners. For motorboat, sides are bannered or signs erected over deck.

The water ballys patrol the nearby resort lake or ocean resorts, and can be tricked up with shapely gals in swimming costumes, sailor laddies and other slants, according to tempo of attraction advertised. Theatre ads on diving floats is another possibility.

Lobby Displays

Full use of lobby space wherever such is available is endorsed strongly by Louie Charninsky, Capitol, Dallas, Tex., known to our readers for his elaborate displays. Louie spends lots of time and effort in doing over his commodious front to sell individual atmosphere and finds this exploitation more than profitable.

For instance, on "Carnival," this Round Tabler rounded up a lot of grotesque heads (see photo) put on a clown and dog show and had barker to add the carny background. Charninsky maintains a lot can be done along these lines for little dough.

LOCAL CONTACTS PAY DIVIDENDS

On the eve of the departure for his new post as assistant to Hunter Perry, head of Dominion Theatres, Frank Boucher was honored by local Hagerstown, Md., organizations and given quite a sendoff editorially. The farewells tie in with Boucher's thoughts on the subject of cooperation secured by building up local contacts which point he emphasizes in making it pay frequent dividends.

Marine Tieup

"Devil Dogs of the Air" was ushered into the Brooklyn Paramount by Joe Lee with a uniformed contingent of U. S. Marine Aviation Base and Roger Q. Williams, famous aviator. Aeronautic beacons flashing light from atop marquee helped make opening a gala occasion.

Fish and Game Exhibit

Max Cooper's third annual cooperation with New Jersey Fish and Game Wardens' Association described fully in a recent issue is recalled as a reminder to other theatremen that state associations for fish, fowl and game preservation should be willing to hook in along the lines put over by Cooper. Featured is the lobby exhibit that represents a miniature forest, the scenery, live and stuffed birds and animals (the latter in cages) of course supplied by the wardens. Lot of publicity angles tied in to this good stunt.

Trick Title Gag

W. W. Yeakle, assistant at the Paramount, Hamilton, Ohio, forwards jumbo telegram gotten out for his "Mississippi," date reading "Mississippi one of the finest pictures of the season is overflowing with romance, etc., etc." The "Mississippi is overflowing" in large, bold type proved the eye attractor it was intended to be.

Marquee Copy Stunt

Marquee copy was tied into opening of "G Men" by Sid Dannenberg at the Hippodrome in Cleveland, who promoted contest in local daily to discover whether or not readers could prepare copy to fit theatre's marquee spacers. Small cash awards and tickets were given with paper giving contest quite a break.

Picture received extra mention when George Davis, Cleveland news picture editor, ran into an actual holdup and used the event as a tieup with his column on the picture.

"Prepared For Summer?"

Walter Morris of the Regent, Grand Rapids, Mich., promoted this unusual four-column West co-op ad herewith illustrated. . . .

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 267 (one of special group on sound).—(A) Excessive and "jerky" takeup tension are recognized as causes of film damage and rapid sprocket wear. On what general types of film reproducer sets do these takeup conditions also affect the sound? How? (B) Why should an exciter lamp having a sagged filament never be used?

Answer to Question No. 261

Bluebook School Question No. 261 was: (A) Name the general requirements necessary for good sound reproduction in theatre auditoriums. (B) Name the reasons why constant care should be exercised to prevent oil from the projector mechanism getting on the sound head equipment. (C) Explain why sound projectors should never be run at any speed other than the standard 90 feet per minute, regardless of any desire to speed up and shorten the show time.

Question No. 261 was the first of the special group of questions on sound inaugurated upon resumption of the "school." Questions in this group have been prepared at my request by a number of leading sound engineers.

I have been most agreeably surprised at the good showing that many of the "students" have made in answering this question.

After thinking over methods best suited to space conditions, I have decided to publish, each time, the answers of the sound engineers, themselves, then if space permits, to add one or two of the best answers received from "students."

To Question No. 261, the following sent in answers that were at least creditable if not, in some instances, as complete as they might have been:

C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; C. Oldham; J. Wentworth; A. F. Sprafke; L. Cimikoski; H. Edwards; E. Boyer; J. G. Townsend; M. and J. Devoy; B. De Vietti; D. Goldberg and L. Hutch; G. Thompson; T. N. Onby; H. Pitchkey and C. Mellinger; F. L. Daniels, B. Gordon and H. T. Woods; R. G. Crews and T. T. Davidson; R. and K. Wells; F. Ferguson and D. Lally; G. Wayne and D. Stellegos; F. H., S. and P. Dalbey; S. Johnson and E. Hodson; L. M. and C. B. Traxler; B. L. Davidson; M. Sanderson; R. L. Weiser; J. O. McClellan; P. L. Stone and R. Carmody; J. L. Witmore; J. Gregory.

The engineers answer Section A as follows:

"(1) Good recording, as controlled by recording equipment and methods of film printing. (2) Faithful reproduction, as controlled by the theatre sound system. (3) Proper volume, as controlled by proper fader settings. (4) Low system noise level, as controlled by the theatre sound system and its adjustments. (5) Even quality and volume distribution throughout the auditorium, as controlled by the proper type, number and adjustment of stage speakers. (6) Low auditorium noise level, as controlled by audience noises, creaking seats, ventilating fans, projection room noises, street noises, etc. (7) Auditorium acoustics, as controlled by the design of the auditorium in its acoustical treatment."

To Section B their answer is: "Stray oil collecting on different parts of the sound reproducer may cause many troubles. Oil on the lenses of the optical assembly, on the photocell and (or) the exciter lamp, reduces light transmission, thus causing loss of volume. When, after an extended period, oil seeps into the internal parts of the optical assembly, not only will there be heavy losses in volume, but it is quite possible that quality of reproduction also will suffer, whereupon costly optical assembly repair becomes necessary. Oil collecting on filament and exciter lamp rheostats, wiring and photocell connecting blocks eventually develops poor contacts or high resistance paths to ground, either or both. This fault induces intermittent static noises in reproduced sound. In the event high impedance speech wiring in either the soundhead or the amplifier becomes badly oil soaked, an appreciable loss of the higher frequencies in sound often occurs."

(C) The engineers say, "Sound is recorded, as we all know by now, at a film speed of precisely 90 feet per minute. If the projector is run at higher speed than that of the recording apparatus, it naturally follows that not only will the speech be abnormally rapid and the time of music, if any, fast, but the pitch or tone of all sounds, both speech and music, will be higher or more shrill than was the original speech as recorded. The change in pitch will be particularly noticeable in music, and especially objectionable to music lovers.

"Conversely, if the projector is run at a film speed of less than 90 feet per minute, all speech and music time will be proportionately lower than normal. The effect of improper projector speeds are especially noticeable at changeovers, when the change is made (as sometimes occurs) before the incoming mechanism has reached its full, normal speed; or when the two projectors do not run at exactly the same speed."

So far, excellent. Let us now "listen" to the reaction of practical projectionists. To Section A, Messrs. Rau and Evans, of the Capitol Theatre, in Victoria, B. C., say, "In general the requirements for excellence in sound reproduction in theatre auditoriums are : (1) Good acoustics. That is to say, the auditorium must be so shaped that there will be a minimum of sound distortion; also, the walls, ceiling, etc., must be so treated that all echo or reverberation troubles will be avoided. The loudspeakers must be so located and adjusted that the sound will be evenly distributed throughout all parts of the auditorium. Noises, such as those caused by fans, street noises, projection room noises, etc., must be so far as possible guarded against. (2) The projection equipment must be good. That is to say, it must be of a substantial, well designed, well constructed, standard make, installed on such foundation as will permit of no vibration whatsoever. (3) Intelligent, careful care of both visual and sound projection equipment. This includes immaculate cleanliness of all parts; also, careful attention to perfect adjustments with regard to the same. To secure maximum results in sound reproduction, the rest of the projector must of course be kept in a good state of repair and adjustment, all devices having to do with control of speed very carefully adjusted and taken care of. The sound track must be free from oil, dirt or abrasions of any kind.

"Amplifiers should be tested frequently, kept clean and all contacts kept in such condition that perfect electrical contact is maintained. Rheostat contacts must be kept in good condition, and the fader and its contacts likewise. While projecting, the correct values of both voltage and amperage must be exactly correct, and the sound volume carried as low as is consistent with the best general results, considering the auditorium as a whole.

"To make that latter possible it is imperative that the projectionist be in constant touch with the sound level, either through a thoroughly competent observer or otherwise. And last but not least, the attention of the projectionist must be centered upon the screen and such contact with sound as may be provided, every minute of the time."

F. H. RICHARDSON'S NEW BLUE BOOK OF PROJECTION

A new edition of this famous book is now on the press. Projection, sound reproduction and trouble-shooting all in one compact, handy volume of 700 pages, including 153 illustrations of hook-ups, wiring diagrams and schematics.

Experts consider it the most up-to-date and practical projection manual on the market. Contains an extremely simple index system for instant use in emergency breakdowns. A book that should be part of every projection room in the country. Order early and get an original author's autographed copy.

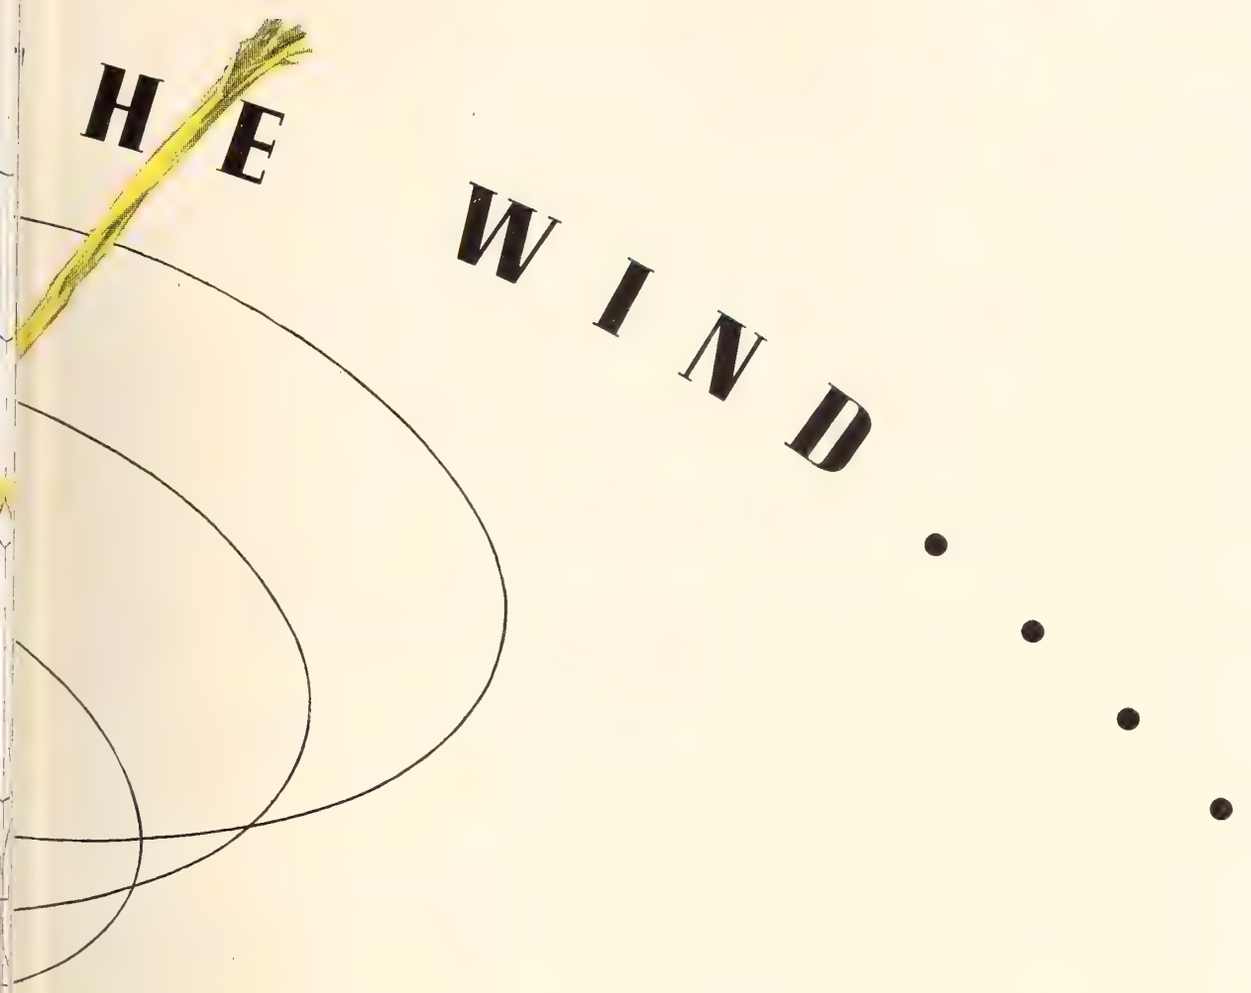
The most thrilling news of the film year—



M-G-M ANNUAL ANNOUNCEMENT 1935-1936

You'll enjoy it all the more when you realize that "PUBLIC HERO NO. 1" is another sensation of Leo's current season. And "NO MORE LADIES" starring JOAN CRAWFORD and BOB MONTGOMERY is greater than "Forsaking All Others." And more on the way!

A STRAW IN

While picture business and the press are quite naturally absorbed in excited comment and acclaim for Warner Bros.' three great current hits, there is danger that the deeper significance of these productions may be overlooked. "G-MEN", "BLACK FURY" and "GO INTO YOUR DANCE" are more than an amazing succession of great box-office shows. They are straws that show which way the wind is blowing! . . . . Shrewd film men have rightly appraised them as an augury of still greater projects afoot at Warner Bros.' Actually they are but the first steps in a broad-scale development of our entire production policy which will become increasingly apparent as the next few weeks go by . . . . Almost immediately you will see this new production phase strikingly demonstrated in "In Caliente", "The Girl from 10th Avenue", "Oil for the Lamps of China", "Alibi Ike", and "Stranded" . . . . And in two short weeks you will hear from Hollywood the most stirring new-season news that ever came out of a film convention . . . . Yes, the trade winds are blowing. They are sweeping trade sentiment overwhelmingly to Warner Bros. for 1935-'36.

NEW DEAL'S MISDEAL

THE Administration appears to have at last run athwart the United States, and the voice of the Blue Eagle which soared screaming and thundering over the industries of the land has been stilled.

One is to be reminded of that old tale of the barroom braggart, who progressively drink by drink announced that he could "whip anybody in the room—anybody in the town—anybody in the county—anybody in the state—anybody in the world." At which juncture the bartender reached over with a club and concluded the recital. When he recovered, the bragging one remarked: "I just took in too much territory." The Blue Eagle took in all there was—for a while.

In grinning recollection the editor of this page this week turned over some pages of the NRA years, recalling a deal of candor on the subject, and arriving presently at the expression entitled "Eagle Feathers" in the issue of October 21, 1933, in the course of which it was set down:

> It is more than apparent, no matter what the big national emergency may be, no matter if the depression is or has been, as Mr. Bernard Baruch has been quoted as saying, "worse than war," that no legislative act can significantly effect anything toward the solution of issues that are inherent, not only inherent but really essential, functions of industry.
> The issues are a part, a growing, living, going part, of the activity which is business. Regulation is one thing, an externally applied revolution is another—or would be if it could be applied.
> Substantially all that has occurred to date is the diversion and diffusion into thin air of some millions of dollars' worth of executive and creative force in the motion picture industry, with a consequent interruption and delaying of the normal processes of recovery which are making themselves manifest, not in Washington, but out in the channels of business and life where business and living are done.

The NRA Code experience of the industry, however, is not to be charged off as a total loss. Some part of it pays for the process known as "coloring the meerschaum". The impact of the Administration on the industry incident to the Code period has been one of the experiences calculated to make the industry more aware of its integration with the whole of the American economic and social fabric, with all of the attendant commitments of responsibility to the whole.

The NRA failures and futilities with reference to the motion picture, conspicuous as they have been, are no more marked than in other industries, notably in the motor car world. The motor car trade has been held up as a leader in the process of recovery. Its showing has been thrilling—but the showing has been made by the processes of vigorous competition, substantially unrestrained competition, a continuance of what the exponents of planned economy call "jungle competition".

The motion picture's recoveries, too, have been made by attainment, by better pictures, better selling, by the ability and effort of showmen striving to do business as business has always been done. The Blue Eagle cast a shadow but never carried a banner.

Meanwhile, the passing of the NRA Code and its boards will leave a functional vacuum, to fill which something in the way of organization will inevitably be evolved.

There is a generally admitted need for an organization—within the industry—to deal with such issues and problems and controversies as formerly went before the Film Boards of Trade and the successor Code Boards.

In the formation of this new something there is perhaps a greater promise of a success in arriving at a workable plan and acceptable authority in its application as a result of the clarification of issues that has come from the Code controversies and the experiences of the Code Boards.

It is reasonably to be expected that this time the industry will be permitted to struggle along without the dictation of young Brain Trusters and New Deal experts.
